THIS Edition of The Law Dictionary was originally undertaken by the late Mr. Dodd, who had made considerable progress in the printing of the first volume, when he was compelled through ill health to abandon the task, and the completion of it was committed to the present Editor, whose responsibility begins with the title Deposition.

Although the latter was aware, previous to commencing his labours, that they would be of some duration, yet the time and attention requisite to prepare the work for the press have greatly exceeded his anticipations.

Owing to the extensive changes that have been effected during the fifteen years which have elapsed since the last Edition, in almost every branch of the Law, both civil and criminal, and to the alterations made in the practice of the Courts of Law and Equity, there is hardly a title of any importance that has not called for a thorough revision, and generally very considerable additions; while, besides the supply of new matter, the present Editor has in numerous instances considered it advisable to recast and arrange the old, so as to give to it a more systematic and connected form.

Many new heads of Law also have been introduced, with a view to increase the utility of the publication, as a work of general reference.

It may perhaps be thought, he might have expunged more of the old Law, where it has been reduced to a dead letter by recent enactments; but in the cases in which it is left, it has been retained in a condensed shape, in order to afford to the reader—what it is one of the objects of this Dictionary to comprise—a historical summary of the rise and progress of our legal forms and institutions.

The work will be found to embody the material provisions of the Statutes enacted in the last Session of Parliament, as well as an accurate Digest of the Law generally down to the end of the past year, and with respect to the greater portion of the second and third volumes, nearly down to the present moment.

In conclusion, the Editor trusts that this Edition will support the high character which has hitherto been maintained by The Law Dictionary, and that it will prove useful to the profession at large, but particularly to such members of it as are not possessed of extensive libraries, since it contains more general information, and embraces a wider range of subjects, than are to be met with in any other legal publication.

ABA

AB, from the word abbot, in the beginning of the name of any place, shows that probably it once belonged to some abbey; or that an abbey was founded there. Blount.

ABACOT. A cap of state wrought up in the form of two crowns; worn by our ancient British kings. Chron. Angl. 1463. Spelm.

Gloss.

ABACTORS, abactores, ab abigendo.] Stealers and drivers away of cattle by herds, or in great numbers. Cowel.

ABACUS. Arithmetic: from the abacus, or table strewed with dust, on which the ancients made their characters and figures. Cowel: Du Fresne. Hence ABALLABA. Appleby, in Westmoreland. ABANDUM, abandonum.] Any thing sequestrated, proscribed, or abandoned. Abandon, i. e. in bannum res missa; a thing banned or denounced as forfeited and lost; from whence, to abandon, desert, or forsake as lost and gone. See title Insurance.

ABARNARE, from Sax. Abrian.] To discover and disclose to a magistrate any secret

TO ABATE, from the Fr. Abattre.] prostrate, break down, or destroy; and in law to abate a castle or fort, is to beat it down. Old Nat. Br. 45: Stat. West. 1 c. 17. Abattre maison, to ruin or cast down a house, and level it with the ground; so to abate a nuisance is to destroy, remove, or put an end to it. See title Nuisance.

To abate a writ, is to defeat to overthrow it. by showing some error or exception. Brit. c. 48. In the statute de conjunctim feoffatis, it is said the writ shall be abated; i. e. disabled and overthrown. Stat. 34 E. 1 st. 1. So it is said an appeal shall abate, and be defeated by reason of covin or deceit. Staundf. P. C. 148. -And the justices shall cause the said writ to be abated and quashed. Stat. 11 H. 6, . c. 2.

ABATEMENT.

The word abate is also used in contradistinction to disseise; for as he that puts a person seized of the freehold out of possession of his house, land, &c. is said to disseise; so he that steps in between the former possessor and his heir, or devisee, is said to abate, he is called an abator, and this act of interposition is termed an abatement. 3 Black. Comm. 168: 1 Inst. 277: a Kitch. 173: Old Nat. Br. 91. 115. See titles Disseisin; Intrusion.

ABATEMENT. For its least usual meanings see the two preceding articles.

In its present most general signification it relates to writs or plaints; and means, the quashing or destroying the plaintiff's writ or plaint.

A Plea in Abatement, is a plea put in by the defendant, in which he shows cause to the court why he should not be impleaded or sued; or if impleaded, not in the manner and form he then is; therefore praying that the writ or plaint may abate; that is, that the suit of the plaintiff may for that time cease. 1 Inst. 134. b. 277: F. N. B. 115: Gilb. H. C. P. 186: Terms de Ley, 1: Chitty on Pleading, vol. 1.

III. The Judgment in Abatement.

I. 1. The Courts of Westminster have a superintendency over all other courts, and may, if they exceed their jurisdiction, restrain them by prohibition; or, if their proceedings are erroneous, may rectify them by writs of error and false judgment. Nothing shall be intended within the jurisdiction of an inferior court but what is expressly alleged; so that where an action on promise is brought in such inferior court, not only the promise, but the consideration of it (i. e. the whole cause of action,) must be alleged to arise within that jurisdiction; Bac. Ab. Pleas (E. 1.): 1 Will. Saund. 74. n. 1; such inferior courts being confined in their original creation, to causes arising within the express limits of their jurisdiction; and therefore, if a debtor who has contracted a debt out of such limited jurisdiction comes within it, yet he cannot be sued there for such a debt. (Ibid.)

There are no pleas to the jurisdiction of the courts at Westminster in transitory actions, unless the plaintiff by his declaration shows, that the cause of action accrued within a county palatine, or it be between the scholars of Oxford or Cambridge. 4 Inst. 213: 1 Sid. 103: Bac. Ab. Courts (D. 3:) Vin. Ab. University. (K.)

There is a difference between a franchise to demand conusance, and a franchise ubi breve domini regis non currit. For in the first case the tenant or defendant shall not plead it, but the lord of the franchise must demand conusance; but in the other case the defendant must plead it to the writ. 4 Inst. 224. See titles Franchise, Conusance, County

Palatine.

Where a franchise, either by letters patent or prescription, hath a privilege of holding pleas within their jurisdiction, if the courts at Westminster entrench on their privileges, they must demand conusance; that is, desire that the cause may be determined before them; for the defendant cannot plead it to the jurisdiction. And the reason is, because when a defendant is arrested by the king's writ, within a jurisdiction where the king's writ doth not run, he is not legally convened, and therefore he may plead it to the jurisdiction; but the creating a new franchise does not hinder the king's writ from running there as before, but only grants jurisdiction to the lord of the liberty. Bac. Ab. tit. Courts. (D. 3.)

If the court has not a general jurisdiction of the subject, the defendant must plead to the jurisdiction, for he cannot take advantage of it on the general issue. And in every plea to the jurisdiction another jurisdiction must be Cowp. 172; Rex v. Johnson, 6 East, stated.

The pleas to the jurisdiction are either that

II. The Time and Manner of Pleading in the cause of action, or the person of the party, Abatement; and herein of Pleading in is not the object of the jurisdiction of the court; of the first sorts are pleas that the land is held in ancient demesne, or that the cause of action arose in the County Palatine, or within the Cinque Ports, or other inferior courts, having peculiar local jurisdiction; that the Bishop of Ely has not a Palatine jurisdiction. See 3 East, 128. Of the latter sort is the plea of Privilege; but which is generally considered rather as a plea to the person of the defendant. See this Dictionary under those titles; and post, Division 3. a. of the pre-

2. a. Outlawry may be pleaded in abatement, because the plaintiff having refused to appear to the process of the law, thereby loses its protection; but this is only a disability till the outlawry is reversed, or till he has obtained a charter of pardon. 1 Inst. 128: Lit. § 197: Dy. 23. 222: Ass. 49: Br. Nonability, 25.

This disability is only pleadable when the plaintiff sues in his own right; for if he sues in auter droit, as executor or administrator, or as mayor with his commonalty, outlawry shall not disable him; because the person or body whom he represents has the privilege of the law. When the plaintiff brings a writ of error to reverse an outlawry, the outlawry in that suit, or in any other, shall not disable him. The outlawry itself must not be an objection, for that would be exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio; and if a man were outlawed at several men's suits, and one should be a bar to another he could never reverse any of them. 1 Inst, 128: Doct. Plac. 396, 7: Bac. Ab. Outlawry. (D.)

When outlawry is pleaded in Abatement, the plaintiff shall not reply that the outlawry is erroneous, for it is good till reversed.

Lutw. 36.

As to the time and manner of pleading outlawry, see post, under Division II. of this title Abatement.

Outlawry in a county palatine cannot be pleaded in any of the courts of Westminster, for the plaintiff is only ousted of his law within that jurisdiction. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 200: Fitz. Coron. 233. It has been suggested, but surely without reason, that outlawry in the county palatine of Lancaster may be pleaded in the courts of Westminster; because that county was erected by act of parliament in the time of E. 3; whereas those of Chester and Durham are by prescription. 12 E. 4. 16: Doct. Plac. 396: Bac. Ab. Outlawry. (D.)

b. A person excommunicated is disabled to do any judicial act; as to prosecute any action at law (though he may be sued); be a witness, &c.: but see now 53 G. 3. c. 127. § 3.

Excommunication is a good plea even to an executor or administrator, though they sue in auter droit; for an excommunicated person is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses; also it is one of the effects of excommunication, that he cannot be a prosetherefore cannot represent the deceased. 1

Inst. 134: 43 E. 3. 13: Thel. 11.

But in an action brought by officers with their corporation, the defendant shall not plead excommunication in the officers; because a corporation cannot be excommunicated as such; and they suc and answer by attorney. Thel. 11: 30 E. 3. 4.: 1 Inst. 134: 4 Inst. 340.

Excommunication is no plea in a qui tam action, the statute giving the informer ability to sue. 12 Co. 61.

When excommunication is pleaded in the plaintiff, he shall not reply that he has appealed from the sentence; for it is in force until repealed, and whilst it is in force he cannot appear in any of the courts of justice; but he may reply that he is absolved, for then his disability is taken away. Bro. Excom. 3: 3

Bulst. 72: 20 H. 6. 25: Roll. 226.

When prohibition is brought against a bishop, and he pleads excommunication against the plaintiff, and in the excommunication there is no cause thereof shown, this is not a good plea; for in such case it will be intended, that the excommunication was for endeavouring to hinder the bishop's proceeding, by application to the temporal court; and if such excommunication were allowed, it would destroy all prohibitions. Thel. 10, 11: 28 E. 3. 27: 8 Co. 68. But the law is now altered as to excommunication by 53 G. 3. c. 127. b 2, 3; by which it is provided that persons expenalty or disability whatsoever.

c. Alienage is a plea in abatement, now discouraged, and but seldom used; the following, however, appears to be still law on the subject:

It may be pleaded in abatement, in an action real, personal, or mixed, that the demandant or any such person in rerum natura. See Com. plaintiff is an alien, if he be an alien enemy; and in an action real or mixed, that he is an alien, though he be in amity. But in an action personal, it is no plea that he is an alien if he be in amity. 1 Inst 129. b.; Ast. Ent. 11: 9 E. 4. 7: Yelv. 198: 1 Bulst. 154: Bro. tit. Denizen: Bac. Ab. Aliens. (D.)

Where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff is an alien, in abatement of the writ, it is triable where the writ is brought, and the replication must conclude to the country; but otherwise, it is said, where it is pleaded in bar, that the plaintiff is an alien, the replication must conclude with an averment. Salk. 2: West. 5: Amb. 394.

After the party suing has declared, the party impleaded may demand over of the writ; and then if there be any fault or insufficiency in the count for a cause apparent in itself, or if there be a variance between the count and the writ, or between the writ and a record, party impleaded ought to show it by his plead-defendant, for the same thing, the second will not now grant over of the writ, so that writ shall abate; and it is not meessare tent these does in abstement are disused. I Bos.

Defendant may plead in abatement of a dewas a writ in being at the time of suing out claration where the action is by original; but if it be by bill he must plead in abatement of the bill only. 5 Mod. 144. A little variance between the declaration and the bond pleaded will not vitiate the declaration; but uncertainty will abate it. Plowd. 84. The variance of the declaration from the obligation, or other deed on which it is grounded, will sometimes abate the action. Hob. 18, 116: Moor. 645. But at the present day the objection of variance between the bond or deed and the declaration, is taken at the trial, as a ground of nonsuit as to what variances are and are not fatal: see Bac. Ab. The necessity there was in the old law, that there should always be some person to do the feudal duties, to fill the possession, and to answer the actions which might be brought for the fief, introduced the maxim that the free-

165. But it was admitted there were some | from nobody, but that there was a " suspension nanced and discouraged as much as possible, and allowed upon none but the most urgent occasions. The chief reasons of this may be found in Blackstone's argument in the case of Perryn and Blake; and Mr. Hargrave's observations on the rule in Shelly's case. To these reasons the modern law has added her marked and unremitted odium of every restraint upon alienation; it being clear that no restraint could be more effectual than the admission of a suspension of the inheritance. The same principles have in some degree given rise to the well known rule of law, that a preceding estate of freehold is indispensably necessary for the support of a contingent remainder; and they influence in some degree the doctrines respecting the destruction of contingent remainders. See 1 Inst. 216. a. and 342 b. and the notes there.

"In a grant to John for life, and afterwards to the heirs of Richard, the inheritance is plainly neither granted to John nor Richard, nor can it vest in the heirs of Richard till his death, nam nemo est hæres viventis; it remains, therefore, in waiting or abeyance during the life of Richard. This is likewise always the case of a parson of a church, who hath only an estate therein for the term of his life, and the inheritance remains in abeyance. And not only the fee but the freehold also may be in abeyance; as, when a parson dies, the freehold of his glebe is in abeyance until a successor is named, and then it vents in the successor. 2 Comm. c. 7. p. 107.

This opinion, which may now be considered as exploded, was founded on a notion, generally speaking true enough, that the operation of livery was immediate and entire, and therefore that the livery to John, in the case put, carried the remainder over with it at the same time out of the grantor; and if the remainder passed from the grantor, as it clearly cases in which the inheritance, when separated of the complete or absolute operation of such from the freehold, might be so. But this abey-ance or suspension of the inheritance could heritance, till the intended channel for the renot but be considered with a very jealous eye, and it was agreed that it should be discounted ance." This principle will be found to explain all the cases in the text: whatever portion or the inheritance cannot take effect in præsenti remains in the grantor or his heirs; and it the inheritance can never pass, as in the case of the church, it always remains there. See Fearne on Con. Rem. 359, 364, (6th ed.)

With respect to the case of a freehold in abeyance, that seems, upon other grounds, as objectionable as the former; feudal principles always requiring an immediate tenant of the freehold for the performance of the services, and to answer to the action of a stranger. The case put of the glebe during a vacancy of the church is not perhaps easy of solution; that which Mr. Christian proposes in a note on this passage is not entirely satisfactory. He would place the freehold in the future successor, who is to be brought into view and notice by institution and induction. But if it is in him, it is not there usefully for either of the purposes for which alone the law requires it to be in any one,—the services are not performed, and there is no one to answer the præcipe of a stranger. The same objection indeed applies if we place it in the heir of the founder or the ordinary. Perhaps it may be thought not unreasonable to admit this to be an exception to the general rule; an estate altogether is the creature of legal reasoning, to be moulded, raised, or extinguished accordingly; and it may be fairly argued that as the freehold can exist in no one to any useful legal purpose, during the vacancy of the church, it may not exist at all. This is a conjecture hazarded with great diffidence, but which may be allowed in a question of more curiosity than practical importance. Coleridge's Note, 2 Black. Comm. 107. n. 2.

It will most commonly happen, however, that the abiding-by is qualified; as, for instance, in the case of a bill, the holder will state that it came fairly into his hands in the course of business, and he will abide by it, under that protestation and qualification, and as in no shape accessory to the forgery if there be one. Abettors and Accomplices also come in some measure under the name, though the former cessories. An Abettor is one who stirs up, perior in the guilt, whom he could aid, abet, incites, instigates, or encourages, or who commands, counsels, or procures another to commit felony (and this is now extended to minor offences; see post); and in many, indeed in almost all cases, is now considered as much a principal as the actual felon, in some cases more, as in the case of murder. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 29. § 7, 8. and c. 33. § 98 -103. An Accomplice is one of many equally concerned in a felony; and the word is generally applied to those who are admitted to give evidence against their fellow criminals, for the furtherance of justice, which might otherwise be eluded; and this is done on the ancient principle of law relative to Approvers. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 37. § 3. 7. and notes; 4 Comm. 329.

Foster, 350. And this rule hath also other exceptions; for, in case of murder by poisoning, a man may be a principal felon by preparing and laying the poison, or persuading another to drink it (Keb. 52.) who is ignorant of the poisonous quality (Foster, 349.), or giving it to him for that purpose; and yet not administ before the fact. 1 Hale's P. And as no one can advise and abet such a crime without an intention to have it done, there can be no accessories before the fact, since the very advice and abetment amounts to principal treason. But this will not hold in the inferior species of high treason, which do not amount to the legal idea of compassing the death of the king, queen, or prince. For in these, no advice to commit them, unless the thing be actually performed, will make a man a principal traitor. Foster, 342. In petit treason, murder, and felonies, with or without benefit of clergy, there may be accessories; except only in those offences, which, by judgment of law, are sudden and unpremeditated, as manslaughter and the like, which, therefore, cannot have any accessories

In treason all are principals, propter odium delicti; in trespass all are principals, because the law, quæ de minimis non curat, does not descend to distinguish the different shades of guilt in petty misdemeanors. It is a maxim that accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis; 3 be guilty of a higher crime than his principal, being only punished as a partaker of his guilt. So that if a servant instigates a stranger to kill his master, this being murder in the stranger as principal, of course the servant is accessory only to the crime of murder, though, had he been present and assisting, he would have been guilty, as principal, of petty treason, and the stranger of murder. 2 Hawk. And it is also settled (Foster, 125.) that whoever procureth a felony to be committed, though it be by the intervention of a third person, is an accessory before the fact. It is likewise a rule, that he who in anywise commands or counsels another to commit an unlawful act is accessory to all that ensues upon that unlawful act, but is not accessory to any act distinct from the other: as if A. commands B. to beat C., and B. beats him so that he dies, B. is guilty of murder as principal, and A. as accessory; but if A. commands B. to burn C.'s house, and he in so doing commits a robbery, now A., though the parent assists the child or the child his accessory to the burning, is not accessory to parent, if the brother receives the brother, the the robbery, for that is a thing of a distinct master his servant, or the servant his master,

There can be no accessories either before or after a homicide per in infortunium or se de-Inst. 139; and therefore an accessory cannot fendendo, for it is presumed to be sudden; and if it come with deliberation it is murder. 1 Hale, 437. 616: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 24. Nor any accessories before in manslaughter. 1 Hale, 450: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 24: East, P. C. 353.

3. An accessory after the fact may be, where a person, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, harbours, relieves, comforts, aids, or assists the felon. 1 Hale's P. C. 618: Brooke's Ab. P. C. 446. In the next place, he must parliament in such cases sometimes varies the receive, relieve, comfort, or assist him. And, case. Thus the statute of 3 H. 7. c. 2. against generally, any assistance whatever given to a taking away maidens, &c., makes the offence, telon, to hinder his being apprehended, tried, and the procuring and abetting, yea, and wit- or suffering punishment, makes the assister tingly receiving also, to be all equally princi- an accessory. As furnishing him with a pal felonies, and excluded of clergy. I Hale's horse to escape his pursuers, money or victuals to support him, a house or other shelter 2. Sir Matthew Hale (5 Hale's P. C. 615, to conceal him, or open force or violence to 616.) defines an accessory before the fact to be rescue or protect him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 414, 5. was committed, doth yet procure, counsel, or to enable him to break gaol, or to bribe the for it such procurer, or the like, be present, W. 3. c. 7, the receiving a pirate or any vessel he is guilty of the crime as principal. If A. or goods piratically taken renders the rethen advise B. to kill another, and B. does, in coivers accessory to the piracy. But to rethe absence of A., now B. is principal, and lieve a felon in gaol with clothes or other accessory by the receiving him, knowing him to be an accessory to felony. 1 Hale, 622.

The felony must be complete at the time of the assistance given; else it makes not the assistant any accessory. As if one wounds another mortally, and after the wound given, but before death ensues, a person assists or receives the delinquent, this does not make him accessory to the homicide; for till death ensues, there is no felony committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 447. But so strict is the law, where a felony is actually complete, in order to do effectual justice, that the nearest relations are not suffered to aid or receive one another. If or even if the husband relieves his wife, who highly necessary, though the punishment is receivers become accessories, ex post facto. and such accessories as offend before the fact 3 Inst. 108: 2 Hawk, P. C. 320. But a feme is committed. covert cannot become an accessory by the receit and concealment of her husband; for she is presumed to act under his coercion, and therefore she is not bound, neither ought she to discover her lord. 1 Hale's P. C. 621. 4. The general rule of the ancient law was, that accessories shall suffer the same punishment as their principals; if one be liable to death, the other is also liable. 3 Inst. 188. Why, then, it may be asked, are such elaborate distinctions made between accessories and principals, if both are to suffer the same punishment? For these reasons; 1. To distinguish the nature and denomination of crimes, that the accused may know how to defend himself when indicted; the commission of an actual robbery being quite a different accusation from that of harbouring the robber. 2. Because, though by the ancient common law the rule is as before laid down, that both shall be punished alike, yet by the statutes relating to the benefit of clergy, now abolished, a distinction was made between them; accessories after the fact being allowed the benefit of elergy, denied to the principals, and accessories before the fact, in many cases; as among others in petit-treason, murder, robbery, and wilful burning. 1 Hale's P. C. 615. And perhaps if a distinction were constantly to be made between the punishment of principals and accessories, even before the fact, the latter to be treated with a little less severity than the former, it might prevent the perpetration of many crimes, by increasing the difficulty of finding a person to execute the deed itself; as his danger would be greater than that of his accomplices, by reason of the difference of his punishment. Beccar. c. 37. See post. 3. Because no man formerly could be tried as accessory till after the principal was convicted, or at least he must have been tried at the same time with him, though that law is now much altered. 4. Because, though a man be indicted as accessory and acquitted, he may afterwards be indicted as principal; for an acquittal of receiving or counselling a felon is no acquittal of the felony itself: but it is a matter of some doubt, whether if a man be acquitted as principal, he can be afterwards indicted as accessory before the fact; since those offences are frequently very nearly allied, and therefore an acquittal of the guilt of one may be an acquittal of the other also. 1 Hale's P. C. 625, 626: 2 Hawk. P. C. 529, 530: Foster, 361. But it is clearly held, that one acquitted as principal may be indicted as accessory after the fact; since that is always an offence of a different species of guilt, principally tending to evade the public justice, and is subsequent in its commencement to the other. Upon these reasons the distinction of principal and accessory will appear to be court having jurisdiction to try the principal, may have any of them committed a felony, the still much the same with regard to principals

By the old common law, the accessory could not be arraigned till the principal was attainted, unless he chose it, for he might waive the benefit of the law; and therefore principal and accessory might and may still be arraigned and plead, and also be tried together. But otherwise if the principal had never been indicted at all, had stood mute, had challenged above thirty-five jurors peremptorily, had claimed the benefit of clergy, had obtained a pardon, or had died before attainder, the accessory in any of these cases could not be arraigned; for non constitit whether any felony was committed or no, till the principal was attainted; and it might so happen that the accessory should be convicted one day, and the principal acquitted the next, which would be absurd. However, this absurdity could only happen where it was possible that a trial of the principal might be had subsequent to that of the accessory; and therefore the law still continues that the accessory shall not be tried so long as the principal remains liable to be tried hereafter.

By § 9. of 7 G. 4. c. 64. for improving the administration of criminal justice in England. accessories before the fact (by counselling, procuring, or commanding) to any felony at common law or by statute, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and may be indicted either as accessory with the principal felon, or after his conviction, or for substantive felony, whether the principal be convicted or not, and shall be punished as an accessory, and may be tried by the court having jurisdiction to try the principal, wherever the offence may have been committed, by land or sea, within the king's dominions or without, and if committed in a distant country from the principal of-fence, may be tried in either; but no such accessory, when once so tried, shall be again indictable for the same offence.

By § 10. accessories after the fact, to any felony, may be tried (but as accessories only and after conviction of the principal) in like manner as accessories before the fact.

By § 11. of the same act, accessories, either before or after the fact in felony, may be prosecuted after the conviction of the principal, although the principal die, or be pardoned, or otherwise delivered before attainder, and shall suffer the same punishment as such accessory would have been liable to if the principal had been attainted.

By § 3. of 9 G. 4. c. 31. accessories before the fact to murder shall suffer death as felons. By the acts 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. for England, and 9 G. 4. c. 54. for Ireland, an accessory before the fact may be tried and punished as such, either with the principal, or after his conviction, or as a substantive felon, by any although the offence be committed on the seas, or abroad. When offences are committed in different counties, accessories may be tried in either. Accessory after the fact may be tried either in the county where the principal offence, or that of the accessory, was committed. Accessory may be prosecuted after conviction of principal, though he be not attainted, &c.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 61. (which introduces new provisions in the law by constituting principals in the first and second degree, and accessories in misdemeanors) it is enacted, "that every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable by indictment under this act shall be liable to be indicted and punished as a principal offender." And in the same words it is so enacted in stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 26.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 61. it is enacted, "that in the case of every felony punishable under this act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact shall be punishable with death or otherwise, in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this act punishable, and every accessory after the fact, to any felony punishable under this act (except only a receiver of stolen property) shall, on conviction, be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years." See Abettors in cases of misdemeanors by the same section, and see tit. Receivers.

In stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 26. this clause is enacted in the same words as to all cases of felony punishable by that act, except only the words "receivers of stolen property"

To aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of a felony makes the party (if he be present, but not the party actually committing the offence) a principal in the second degree; in other cases it constitutes him an accessory; but to aid, abet, or assist in the commission of a misdemeanor makes him what is termed an abettor, whose punishment depends on the nature of the offence of the principal. See 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. 962.

Persons not present, or sufficiently near to give assistance, cannot be principals, but are accessories. C. C. R. 336.

By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 31. accessories after the fact to murder may be transported for life, or imprisoned with hard labour, in the gaol or house of correction, not exceeding four years.

5. The old doctrine of approvements, when one criminal appealed or accused his accomplices in order to obtain his pardon, is now grown into disuse; and the statutes indemnifying or rewarding discoverers are repealed by 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 27.

ACCORD. Fr.] Is an agreement between two or more persons, where any one is injured by a trespass, or offence done, or on a contract, to satisfy him with some recom-pence; which accord, if executed and per-formed, shall be a good bar in law, if the other party after the accord performed, bring an action for the same trespass, &c. Terms de

When a duty is created by deed in certainty, as by bill, bond, or covenant, to pay a sum of money, this duty accruing by writing, ought to be discharged by matter of as high a nature; but when no certain duty arises by deed, but the action is for a tort or default, &c. for which damages are to be recovered, there an accord with satisfaction is a good plea. 6 Rep. 43. In accord one promise may be pleaded in discharge of another, before breach; but after breach, it cannot be discharged without a release in writing. Mod. 44. Accord with satisfaction upon a covenant broken, is a good plea in satisfaction and discharge of the damages. Lutw. 359. And accord made before the covenant broken, had been adjudged a good bar to an action of covenant, as it may be in satisfaction of damage to come. I Danv. Ab. 546; but see contra, 1 Taunt. 428: 7 Price, 604: 3

East, 251: Bac. Ab. Accord. (B.) (7th ed.)

If a contract without deed is to deliver goods, &c. there money may be paid by accord in satisfaction; but if one is bound in an obligation to deliver goods, or to do any collateral thing, the obligor cannot by accord give money in satisfaction thereof: though when one is bound to pay money, he may give goods or any other valuable thing in satisfaction. 9 Rep. 78: 1 Inst. 212. Where damages are uncertain, a lesser thing may be done in satisfaction, and in such a case an accord and satisfaction is a good plea; but in action of debt on a bond, there a lesser sum cannot be paid in satisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 88. Accord with satisfaction is a good plea in personal actions, where damages only are to be recovered; and in all actions which suppose a wrong vi et armis, where a capias and exigent lie at the common law, in trespass and ejectment, detinue, &c. accord is a good plea: so in an appeal of maihem. But in real actions it is not a good plea. 4 Rep. 1. 9. 70: 9 Rep. 77. Of late it hath been held, that upon mutual promises an action without execution, as well as an arbitrament. Raym. 450: 2 Jones, 158. Acceptance of the thing agreed on in these accords is the only material thing to make them binding. Hob. 178: 5 Mod. 86.

In pleading accord is the safest by way of satisfaction, and not of accord alone. For if it be pleaded by way of accord, a precise execution thereof in every part must be pleaded: but, by way of satisfaction, the defendant need only allege, that he paid the plaintiff such a sum, &c. in full satisfaction of the accord, which the plaintiff received. 9 Rep. 80. The defendant must plead that the plaintiff accepted the thing agreed upon in full satisfaction, &c. And if it be on a bond, it must be in satisfaction of the money mentioned in the condition, and not of the bond: which cannot be discharged but by writing under hand and seal. Cro. Jac. 254, 650; Bac. Ab. Accord and Satisfaction. (7th ed.) And the accord and satisfaction must be shown in pleading to be of the whole matter in the declaration, and therefore where in assumpsit on several promises the defendant pleaded accord and satisfaction of the cause of action, the plea was bad, as it did not go to the whole declaration. 2 Chit. Rep. 303; and see 5 Barn. & A. 886. See further Com. Dig. tit. Accord. See tit. Acceptance, Award, Bond, Estate, Lease, Rent, Payment.

The reasoning in cases whether accord and satisfaction is to be allowed a good bar to an action, is often extremely subtle. The general principle is, that it is a good bar where the party seeks pecuniary damages only, or conjointly with the restitution of a chattel real or personal, for some personal wrong, or the breach of some contract whether by parol or specialty; but that it is not a good bar where the object is the recovery of a freehold, or where the admission of it would operate to discharge a subsisting contract under seal.

To make an accord sufficient in cases where such a plea is available, the following rules are important to be observed: 1. It must be in full satisfaction of the injury complained of, and must leave no part uncovered; thus, in trespass for taking cattle, an accord that the plaintiff should have his cattle again would be insufficient, for mere restitution leaves uncovered the damage sustained by the removal and intermediate loss of possession. 2. It must be complete and executed: a promise to give, and an agreement to accept, something at a future day will not avail; nor will it be better, if the day be past, and the defendant at the day tendered the performance of the agreement, which the plaintiff refused to accept. 3. It must be to give or do something which has legal value: and 4. That value must not, upon the face of it, and of necessity, be less than that of the thing in lieu of which it is given or done. Thus, if not lie of a thing certain: if a man delivers lies, and consequently, there being equal re- the defendant has promised to deliver 100 medy on both sides, an accord may be pleaded bushels of wheat of a certain quality, at a certain time and place, and has failed so to do, it would be no answer to an action to state the plaintiff's acceptance of 50 bushels of the same quality, and at the same time and place in satisfaction thereof. But where the inferiority is not necessary, nor upon the face of the thing, no actual inferiority to be made out by evidence, is a legal objection; as in the case put, a change of quality, time, or place, might make the 50 equal to the 100, and consequently a legal satisfaction for the non-delivery of them. Coleridge's note in 3 Buck. Comm. c. 1.

ACCOUNT or ACCOMPT; computus.] Is a writ or action which lies against a bailiff or receiver to a lord or others, who, by reason of their offices and business, are to render accompt, but refuse to do it. F. N. B. 116.

This action is now seldom used; but the most liberal, extensive, and beneficial action is for money had and received, by defendant to plaintiff's use, which will lie in almost every case where one hath money of another's in his hands, which he ought to pay him. This form of action is equivalent to a bill in equity. An action on the case on insimul computasset is also usual for the balance of a settled account. See Godfrey v. Saunders, 3 Wils. and 3 Comm. 162. The action of account is now very seldom resorted to, since it is held that the balance of an account, however numerous the items, may be recovered in assumpsit. 5 Taunt. 431: 1 Marsh, 115: see vide, 2 Camp. 238. The action of account, however, lies in the following cases.

If a person receives money due to me upon an obligation, &c. I may either have an action of accompt against him as my receiver; or action of debt, or on the case, as owing me so much money as he had received. 1 Lill. 33. If I pay money in my own wrong to another, I may bring an action against him for so much money received to my use: but then he may discharge himself by alleging it was for some debt, or to be paid over by my order to some other person, which he hath done, &c. 1 Lill. 30. But if a man have a servant, whom he orders to receive money, the master shall have accompt against him, if he were his receiver. Co. Lit. 172. If money be recieved by a man's wife to his use, action of accompt lies against the husband, and he may be charged in the declaration as his own receipt. Co. Lit. 295. Account does not lie against an infant, but it lies against a man or woman, that is guardian, bailiff or receiver, being of age and dis-covert: and though an apprentice is not chargeable in this action, for what he usually receives in his master's trade, yet upon collateral receipts he shall be charged as well as another. Co. Lit. 172: Roll. Ab. 117: 3 Leon. 92.

As to other actions of accompt, they will

10l. to merchandize with, he shall not have fourteen years old, he must charge him as account of the 10l. but of the profits, which guardian; but if it be for taking the profits are uncertain; and this is one reason why this action will not lie for the arrears of rent. Danv. Ab. 215. Action of account may be sues a stranger that doth intermeddle with brought against a factor that sells goods and merchandizes upon credit, without a particular commission so to do, though the goods are bona peritura. 2 Mod. 100. If there are two demands in a declaration, to which the defendant pleads an accompt stated, the plaintiff can never after resort to the original contract, which is thereby merged and discharged in the accompt; if A. sells his horse to B. for 10l. and there being divers other dealings between them, they come to an accompt upon the whole, and B. is found in arrear 5l. A. must bring his insimul computasset for it; but if there be only one debt betwixt the parties, entering into an accompt for that would not determine the first contract. 1 Mod. Rep. 206: 2 Mod. 44. It has been held, that mutual demands on an accompt are not extinguished by settling it, and promise to pay the balance; wherefore assumpsit lies for the original debt. Fitzgib. 44. A man having received of another 100l. to be employed in merchandize abroad, covenants at his return to accompt to him; this doth not alter the case; but, notwithstanding the covenant, action of accompt may be brought. 2 Bulst. 256. And if I deliver to another person goods or money beyond sea, to be delivered again to me in England at a certain place, and he delivers it not, I may be relieved by this action. F. N. B. 18.

Accompt may be brought against the following persons:

If a man makes one his bailiff of a manor, &c. he shall have a writ of accompt against him as bailiff; where a person makes one receiver, to receive his rents or debts, &c. he shall have accompt against him as receiver; and if a man makes one his bailiff and also his receiver, then he shall have accompt against him in both ways. Also a person may have a writ of accompt against a man as bailiff or receiver, where he was not his bailiff or receiver; as if a man receive money for my use, I shall have an accompt against him as receiver; or if a person deliver money unto another to deliver over unto me, I shall likewise have accompt against him as my receiver: so if a man enter into my lands to my use, and receive the profits thereof, I shall have accompt against him as bailiff. 9 H. 6: 36 H. 6: 10 R. 2. Fitz. Accompt. 6.

A judgment in accompt, as receiver, is no bar to action of accompt as bailiff; but 'tis said a bailiff cannot be charged as receiver, nor a receiver as bailiff; because then he might be twice charged. 2 Lev. 127: 1 Danv. Abr. 220, 221. The heir may have writ of accompt, before or after his full age, against a guardian in socage, and if he sue the guar-after that age, then he must sue him as bailiff. Lit. 124: F. N. B. 118. Where an heir his land, he shall charge him in accompt as guardian. F. N. B. 18.

A man devises lands to be sold by his executors, and the money thence arising to be distributed amongst his daughters; action of accompt lies in this case, for the daughters against the executors. Jenk. Cent. 215: 2 Roll. Ab. 285. An action of accompt lies against a bailiff, not only for what profits he hath made and raised, but also for what he might have made and raised by his care and industry, his reasonable charges and expences deducted. Co. Lit. 172. In this instance the action of accompt may be preferable to that for money had and received .- One merchant may have an accompt against another, where they occupy their trade together; and if one charges me as bailiff of his goods ad mercandizandum, I must answer for the increase, and be punished for my negligence;

If a bailiff or receiver make a deputy, action of accompt will not lie against the deputy, but if he charges me as receiver ad computandum, I must be answerable only for the bare money or thing delivered. F. N. B.

but against him. 1 Leon, 32.

117: Co. Lit. 272: 2 Leon. Ca. 245.

Statutes.—In the writ of accompt the process by the common law was summons, attachment and distress infinite. The statute of Marlbridge (52 H. 3. c. 23.) gave attachment by the body, if the bailiff had no lands by which he might be distrained. 2 Inst. 380.—By the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) c. 11. if the accountant be found in arrearages, the auditors that are assigned to him have power to award him to prison.-In the process of outlawry, &c. the stat. 13 E. 3. c. 23. gives an action of accompt to the executors of a merchant; the stat. 25 E. 3. c. 5. to executors of executors; the stat. 31 E. 3. c. 11. to administrators; and by the stat. 3 and 4 Ann. c. 16. actions of account may be brought against the executors and administrators of every guardian, bailiff, and receiver, and by one joint-tenant, tenant in common, his executors and administrators, against the other as bailiff, for receiving more than his share, and against their executors and administrators; and the auditors appointed by the court may examine the party on oath.

It may be proper to say something concerning the plea and judgment in account; and though the order may seem somewhat irregular, it will be necessary first to explain the nature of the judgment, which being rightly understood, the distinctions as to the method of pleading will be more easily conceived.

The usual judgment is quod computet, on which the defendant is taken by capias ad comdian for profits of his lands taken before he is putandum; but there are two judgments in this writ; for if the defendant cannot avoid | Oath. Vide Comyns's Digest, tit. Accompts .the suit by plea, judgment is first given, That he do accompt; and having done this before the auditors, there is another judgment entered, that the plaintiff shall recover of the defendant so much as is found in arrear. 11 Rep. 40. In a late case two principal officers of the court were, on motion, appointed auditors after a judgment quod computet. 2 Chitt. R. 10: and see 3 Dow. & Ry. 596. The first judgment is but an award of the court, like a writ to inquire of damages; and these two judgments depend one upon another; for if judgment be to accompt, and the party die be-fore he hath accounted, the executor cannot proceed in the action, but it must be begun again; and no writ of error will lie upon the first till after the second judgment. 11 Rep. 40.

With respect to the plea, the following distinctions are to be noticed:

What may be pleaded in bar to the action, shall not be allowed to be pleaded before the auditors. Cro. Car. 82. 161: Bac. Ab. Accompt. (F.) (7th ed.) Some pleas are in bar of the accompt, and others in discharge before auditors; and some pleas will be allowed before auditors, that will not be in bar to the accompt. Dyer, 21: 11 Rep. 8. In accompt the plaintiff declared of the receipt of money by the hands of a stranger; the defendant pleaded a gift of the money afterwards by the plaintiff: this was a good plea as well in bar of the action as before auditors. Winch. 9.

The pleas in this action are, quod nunquam fuit receptor; quod plene computavit, &c. It is no plea by an accomptant that he was robbed, unless he alleges it was without his default and negligence, and then it will be a good plea. Co. Lit. 89. That the defendant never was bailiff, is the general bar; and it is a good plea in bar, by claiming a property in the things to be accounted for. 29 E. 3. c. 47. A defendant, as receiver, cannot wage his law where he receives the money by another's hands: it is otherwise where he received it of the commissioners of the Sick and Hurt. the plaintiff himself. 1 Cro. 919.

It may be proper to add, that the process in accompt is summons, pone, and distress; and, upon a nihil returned, the plaintiff may proceed to outlawry. The statute of limitations, 21 J. 1 c. 16. doth not bar a man who is a merchant from bringing action of accompt for merchandize at any time; but all other actions of accompt are within the statute.

In Chancery, upon an accompt of fifteen or twenty years' standing, the defendant may be allowed to prove, on his own oath, what he cannot otherwise make proof of; but here the particulars must be named, as to whom the money was paid, for what, and when, &c. 1 C. Rep. 146. And a defendant shall be discharged upon his oath of sums under 40s.; though it is held a plaintiff shall not so charge another, or be allowed any thing in equity on his oath. 2 C. Cas. 249: 1 Vern. 283. See penditure, debt, &c. of Great Britain, to be

ACCOUNTS PUBLIC. By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 52. the patents formerly granted to Lord Sondes and Lord Mountstuart, as auditors of the imprest, were vacated, and the annual sum of 7000l. each, made payable to them during their respective lives. \(\) 1.3.

Under this act his Majesty was empowered to appoint five commissioners by letters patent. These were styled the Commissioners for auditing the public accounts; and held their offices quamdiu se bene gesserint.

The commissioners under this act were invested with all the powers, and subject to the same duties and control, as the auditors of the imprest formerly were; except as altered by the act.

Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 59. extended the provisions of 25 Geo. 3. c. 52. for better examining and auditing the public accounts of the board of Ordnance, the commissioners of the Navy, the commissioners for victualling the Navy, and

39 Geo. 3. c. 83. transferred to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts the duties then performed in the offices of the auditors of the land revenue. § 1—10. See also 39 and 40 Geo. 3. c. 54: 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 39: 54 Geo. 3. c. 83. for more effectually charging public accountants with payment of interest, for allowing them interest in certain cases, and for compelling payment of balances due from them.

By stat. 41 Geo. 3. c. 22. extended by 48 Geo. 3. c. 91. his Majesty was empowered to appoint five commissioners for the more effectual examination of accounts of public expenditure for the forces in the West Indies, and to report to the commissioners for auditing public accounts in England.

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 4. the Treasury shall annually cause accounts of the revenues, ex-the like provisions are made for laying the like accounts before parliament by the Treasury of Ireland, by 44 Geo. 3. c. 58. By 50 Geo. 3. c. 117. and 53 Geo. 3. c. 86. accounts of the increase and diminution of public salaries, pensions, and allowances, shall be annually laid before parliament. By 46 Geo. 3. c. 141. "for more effectual provision for the more speedy and regular examination and audit of the public accounts of this kingdom;" after reciting 25 Geo. 3. c. 52: 45 Geo. 3. c. 55: and 45 Geo. 3. c. 91. it enacts that the offices of comptroller of army accounts, and of auditor of public accounts, be henceforth distinct. His Majesty is empowered to appoint commissioners for auditing public accounts, not exceeding ten in the whole, and to grant salaries to the commissioners, viz. to the chairman 1500l. per annum, and 1200l. to each of the other commissioners. The lords of the treasury are empowered to allow salaries to officers, clerks, &c. out of the consolidated fund, and to subdivide commissioners into boards, and apportion their business .- But no vacancy is to be filled up without authority of parliament, until the number of commissioners shall be reduced to five; and the majority of commissioners of any board competent to act, &c. § 1—7.—Such commissioners are ineligible to a seat in parliament by § 22. of the said act.

See further provisions for enforcing these acts, 47 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 9: 49 Geo. 3. c. 95:for extending them to accounts of the Paymaster-General, 48 Geo. 3. c. 49. 128:--to the Barrack Master General, 47 Geo. 2. st. 1. c. 13: 48 Geo. 3. c. 79. 90:-for the examination of the civil and military accounts of Ireland, 52 Geo. 3. c. 51, 52:-and for securing the due application of money in the hands of public accountants there, 54 Geo. 3. c. 83.

Several recent statutes relating to these will be found under Public Accounts.

ACCRETION of land by Alluvion. See

tit. Occupancy.

ACCROCHE, from the Fr. accrocher, to hook or grapple unto.] It signifies to encroach, and is mentioned in the stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 8. to that purpose. The French use it for delay; as accrocher un proces, to stay the proceedings in a suit.

ACCUMULATIVE JUDGMENT. As the law stood previous to the passing of a recent statute, Accumulative Judgment could only be given in cases of misdemeanor, but not in conviction for felony, because the party attainted was considered to be dead in law: the stat. 6 G. 4. c. 25. § 4. enacts that the allowance of the benefit of clergy to any person convicted of felony shall not render the party dispunishable for any act of felony committed before the time of such allowance; and now by the stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 10. if a per-made up to January 5, and laid before parlia- victed of felony, the court is empowered to ment on or before 25th March yearly .-- And pass a second sentence to commence after the expiration of the first; and by § 11. offenders committing felony after a previous conviction for felony, may be transported for life, or for not less than seven years, or imprisoned not exceeding four years; and, if a male, be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped in addition to such imprisonment.

ACCUSATION, accusatio.] The charging any person with a crime. By Magna Charta no man shall be imprisoned or condemned on any accusation, without trial by his peers, or the law. None shall be vexed upon any accusation, but according to the law of the land: and no man may be molested by petition to the king, &c. unless it be by indictment, or presentment of lawful men, or by process at common law. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 4: 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. None shall be compelled to answer an accusation to the king, without presentment, or some matter of record. Stat. 42 Ed. 3. c. 3. See stat. 38 Ed. 3. c. 9. By stat. 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. § 12; and 1 P. & M. c. 10, 11, in treason there must be two lawful accusers. As to self-accusation, see tit. Evidence. See tit. Malicious Prosecution.

AC ETIAM. These words are unnecessary, and are omitted in the process prescribed by the 2 W. 4. c. 39.

AC ETIAM BILLÆ:-And also to a bill to be exhibited for 201. debt, &c.] Words in, or a clause of, a writ, where the action requires bail. The stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. which enjoins the cause of action to be particularly expressed in the writ or process which holds a person to bail, hath caused the adding of this clause in writs to the usual complaints of trespass, which latter gives cognizance to the court, while that of debt authorises the arrest. See Tidd, 166. (9th ed.) This ought not to be made out against a peer of the realm, or upon a penal statute, or against an executor or administrator, or for any debt under 10l. in the superior courts; which sum is now raised to 20l. by 7 and 3 G. 4. c. 71. Nor in any action of account, action of covenant, &c., unless the damages are 10l. or more; nor in action of trespass, or for battery, wounding, or imprisonment, except there be an order of court for it, or a warrant under the hand of one of the judges of the court out of which the writ issues. 1 Lill. Ab. 13: see North's Life of Lord Keeper Guilford, fol. 90. 100: Impey's Instructor Clericalis, K. B. and C. P.: and this Dictionary, tit. Arrest, Bail, Process, Capias, Common Pleas: Tidd's Prac. 166. (9th ed.) And now by the rules of Hilary term, 1832, in all the courts, a variance between the ac etiam and the declaration, or the want of an son under sentence for another crime is con- | ac etiam, where the defendant is arrested, shall

ACHERSET. An ancient measure of corn, conjectured to be the same with our quarter, or eight bushels.

ACHOLITE, Acholitus.] An inferior church servant, who, next under the subdeacon, followed or waited on the priests and deacons, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other servile attendance.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT-MONEY, is a sum paid in some parts of England by the copyhold tenants on the death of their landlords, as an acknowledgment of their new lords; in like manner as money is usually paid on the attornment of tenants.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGIIS. A writ of justices lying for the surety against a creditor who refuses to acquit him after the debt is satisfied. Reg. of Writs, 158.

ACQUIETANTIA DE SHIRIS ET HUNDREDIS. To be free from suits and services in shires and hundreds.

ACQUIETARE, quietum reddere.] To acquit. Dr. Wilk. Gloss. It also sometimes signifies to pay. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 199.

ACQUITTAL, from the French word Aguitter, and the Latin compound Acquietare.] To free or discharge. It signifies, in one sense, to be free from entries and molestations of a superior lord for services issuing out of lands; (see Terms de Ley;) and in another signification (the most general) it is taken for a deliverance and setting free of a person from the suspicion of guilt; as he that on trial is discharged of a felony, is said to be acquietatus de felonia; and if he be drawn in question again for the same crime, he may plead auter foits acquit; as his life shall not be twice put in danger for the same offence. 2 Inst. 385.

Acquittal in fact, is when a person is found not guilty of the offence by a jury, on verdict, &c. But in murder, if a man was acquitted, appeal might formerly be brought against him. 3. Inst. 273. But appeals are now abolished by 59 G. 3. c. 46.

If one be acquitted on an indictment of murder, supposed to be done at such a time; and after indicted again in the same county, for the murder committed at another time: here, notwithstanding that variance, the party may plead auter foits acquit, by averring it to be the same felony; so where a person is indicted a second time, for robbery upon the same person, but at another vill, &c. 2 Hawk.

be indicted de novo seven years afterwards, and cannot plead this acquittal; as he may upon the special matter found by the petty jury, and judgment given thereon. Ibid. 246. See also Leach's Hawkins, c. 26. § 64.

If a person is lawfully acquitted on a malicious prosecution, he may bring his action, &c. for damages, after he hath obtained a copy of the indictment; but it is usual for the judges of gaol delivery to deny a copy of an acquittal to him who intends to bring an action thereon, when there was a probable cause for a criminal prosecution. Carth. Rep. 421: see Leach's Hawkins, c. 23. § 142. &c. And it is not settled whether a party tried for felony, and acquitted, has, or not, a right to have a copy of the record of acquittal. See 10 Barn. & Cres. 70. By stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. if either principal or accessory be acquitted on an indictment for murder, the court may remit him to prison, or bail him, at their discretion, till the year and day (for appeal) be passed.

The statute 3 H. 7. c. 1. though not expressly repealed, has become a dead letter, as appeals for murder are abolished.

ACQUITTANCE, Acquietantia.] Signifieth a discharge in writing, of a sum of money, or debt due; as, where a man is bound to pay rent, reserved upon a lease, &c. and the party to whom due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand, witnessing that he is paid; this will be such a discharge in law, that he cannot demand and recover the sum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced. de Ley, 15: Dyer, 6. 25. 51. An acquittance is a discharge and bar in the law to actions, &c. And if one acknowledges himself to be satisfied by deed, it may be a good plea in bar, without any thing received; see per Heath, J., 2 Taunt. 143; but an acquittance, without seal, is only evidence of satisfaction, and not pleadable.

It is observed, that a general receipt or acquittance in full of all demands, will discharge all debts, except such as are on specialty, viz. bonds, bills, and other instruments sealed and delivered; on which account those can be destroyed only by some other specialty of equal force, such as a general release, &c.; there being this difference between that and the general acquittance. See Cro. Jac. 650.

But in some cases a court of equity will order accounts to be opened, even after an acquittance in full of all demands.

And now, in the superior courts of law, the producing an acquittance will not bar the action, if the plaintiff can by any means show a mistake, and that he has not been paid, or paid so much as the acquittance is for. Sec 5 Barn. & A. 607: 1 Dow. & Ry. 211: 3 Barn. & Cres. 421. acc.

In some cases payment may be refused, unless an acquittance is given. Thus the P. C. Where a man is discharged on special obligor is not bound to pay money upon a him by the obligee; nor is he obliged to pay the money before he hath the acquittance. But in case of an obligation with a condition, it is otherwise; for there one may aver payment. And by stat. 3 and 4 Ann. c. 16 if an action of debt is brought upon a single bill, and the defendant hath paid the money, such payment may be pleaded in bar of the action.

A servant may give an acquittance for the use of his master, where such servant usually receives his master's rents, &c. and a master shall be bound by it. Co. Lit. 112. See Bac. Ab. Master and Servant. (K.) (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.) The manner of tender and payment of money shall be generally directed by him who pays it, and not by him who receives it; and the acquittance ought to be given accordingly.

ACRE. See Measure.

ACRE, from the German Acker, Ager.] A quantity of land, containing in length 40 perches, and in breadth 4 perches; or in proportion to it, be the length or breadth more or less. By the customs of various countries, the perch differs in quantity, and consequently the acre of land. It is commonly about 16 feet and a half, but in Staffordshire it is 24 feet. According to the stat. 24 H. 8. c. 14. concerning the sowing of flax, it is declared that 160 perches make an acre, which is 40 multiplied by 4; and the ordinance of measuring land, 33 Ed. 1. st. 6. agrees with this account. The word acre formerly meant an open ground or field; as castle-acre, west-acre, &c. and not a determined quantity of land. The general calculation is that there are 4840 square yards in an acre. See Turner v. Probyn, 1 Anst. 66.

ACRE, or ACRE FIGHT; an old sort of duel fought by single combatants, English and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms, with sword and lance; this duelling was also called camp fight, and the combatants, champions, from the open field that was the place of trial.

ACT BEFORE ANSWER, is when the lords ordain probation to be led, before they determine the relevancy, and then take both at once under their determination. Scotch Dict.

ACT OF CURATORY, is the act extracted by the clerk upon any one's acceptation of

ACT OF GRACE. In Scotland the act so termed is 1696, c. 32. for providing maintenance for debtors imprisoned by their creditors. It is usually applied in England to insolvent acts and general pardons. See Debt-

ACT OF PARLIAMENT. See Statute. ACTILIA. Military utensils. Du Cange. ACTION, Actio.] Is the form of a suit given by law for recovery of that which is one's due; or it is a legal demand of a man's tion. But detinue is not an action mixed, not-right. Co. Lit. 285. The learned Bracton withstanding the thing demanded, and dam-single bond, except an acquittance be given thus defines it, Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur. Actions are either criminal or civil; criminal to have judgment of death, as appeals of death, robbery, &c., or only to have judgment for damage to the party, fine to the king and imprisonment, as appeals of maihem, &c. Co. Lit. 284: 2 Inst. 40. But appeals are now abolished by 59 G. 3. c. 46. and all criminal proceedings are now at suit of the king, and are called prosecutions. Civil actions are such as tend only to the recovery of that which, by reason of any contract, tort, or wrong of another, is due to us; as action of debt upon the case, &c. 2 Inst. 61.

Under criminal actions may, perhaps, be classed actions penal, which lie for some pen-

Actions upon statute, brought upon the breach of any statute, whereby an action is given to the person injured or grieved that lay not before; as, where one commits perjury to the prejudice of another, the party that is injured may have a writ upon the statute. Such action is now, however, obsolete. But there are many other such actions, as the action for an escape out of execution, on 1 R.2. c. 12; the action against a tenant for double value for not quitting according to notice, on 4 G. 2. c. 28. § 1; and if a statute prohibit a thing, and do not prescribe any mode of remedy, it may be remedied by an action on the statute. See 1 Chitt. Pl. 127: 4 Barn. & Cress. 962: 1 Mac Clel. & Y. 457.

Actions popular, given on the breach of some penal statute, which every man hath a right to sue for himself and the king, by information, action, &c. And because this ac-tion is not given to one especially, but generally to any that will prosecute, it is called action popular; and from the words used in the process (qui tum pro domino rege sequitur quam pro se ipso, who sues as well for the king as for himself) it is called a qui tam action. See tit. Information.

Civil actions are divided into real, personal, and mixed. Action real is that action whereby a man claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee or for life: and these actions are possessory, or auncestrel; possessory, of a man's own possession and seisin; or auncestrel, of the possession or seisin of his ancestor.

Action personal is such as one man brings against another, on any contract for money or goods, or on account of any offence or trespass: and it claims a debt, goods, chattels,

&c. or damages for the same.

Action mixed is an action that lieth as well for the thing demanded, as against the person that hath it; in which the thing is recovered, and likewise damages for the wrong sustained; it seeks both the thing whereof a man is deprived, and a penalty for the unjust detenan action merely personal, brought only for goods and chattels.

In a real action, setting forth the title in the writ, several lands held by several titles may not be demanded in the same writ; in personal actions several wrongs may be comprehended in one writ. 8 Rep. 87. A bar is perpetual in personal actions, and the plaintiff is without remedy, unless it be by writ of error or attaint: but in real actions, if the defendant be barred, he may commence an action of a higher nature, and try the same again. 5 Rep. 33. Action of waste sued sued against a tenant for life, is in the realty and personalty; in the realty, the place wasted being to be recovered, and in the personalty, as treble damages are to be recovered. Co. Lit. 284.

Real and mixed actions are now, with a few exceptions, abolished. See Limitations of Actions, II.

Many personal actions die with the person. Real actions survive. If lessee for years commit waste, and dies, action of waste may not be had against his executor or administrator, for waste done by the deceased. And where a keeper of a prison permits one in execution to escape, and afterwards dieth, no action will lie against his executors. This must be understood of that kind of keeper to whom the prison actually belongs, as the marshal, the warden of the Fleet, &c., not of a gaoler who acts as servant to a sheriff, &c.; for in such case, the death of the gaoler is not any bar to an action against the sheriff, to whom, in fact, the prison actually belongs. Co. Lit. 53. Action of debt lies not against executors upon a contract for the eating and drinking of the testator. 9 Rep. 87. But an action on the case on promises will lie against an executor or administrator on the promises of their testator or intestate.

In all actions merely personal arising ex delicto, for wrongs actually done or committed by the defendant, as trespass, battery, and slander, the action dies with the person; 4 Inst. 315; and it never shall be revived either by or against the executors or other represen-For neither the executors of the plaintiff have received, nor those of the defendant committed, in their own personal capacity, any manner of wrong or injury. But in actions arising ex contractu, by breach of promise and the like, where the right descends to the representatives of the plaintiff, and those of the defendant have assets to answer the demand, though the suits shall abate by the death of the parties, yet they may be revived against, or by, the executors. 3 Comm. 302.

Personal representatives may now maintain actions of trespass, as in cases for injuries committed to the real estate of the deceased within six months before his death, and the like actions may be brought against personal ages for withholding it be recovered; for it is representatives for wrongs done by their testators to others in respect of their property, real or personal, under certain restrictions. Sec Executor, VI. 1.

> And with respect to the writs by which actions may now be commenced in the courts at Westminster, see Process. See also Limitation of Actions, Pleading, Trial, Venue,

> The true ground of this rule appears to be, that executors or administrators represent not so much the persons as the personal estate of their testators; and this leads to a qualification, with which the rule should be stated: that the action which dies with the person must be for a wrong which can, neither by implication of law, nor averment on the record, appear to operate to the injury of the personal estate. Accordingly, where an action was brought by an administrator for a breach of promise of marriage with the intestate, a female, the judgment was arrested, because loss of marriage in itself by no means implied an injury to the personal estate of a female, which the administrator represented (on the contrary, marriage was generally an extinction of it); and if any injury to that estate had in fact arisen by the defendant's conduct, none was stated on the record. Chamberlain v. Williamson, 2 M. & S. 408: and see Kingdom v. Nottle, 1 Maule & S. 355: King v. Jones, 1 Marsh, R. 107.

> Again, actions are either local or transitory. Actions real and mixed, ejectment, waste, trespasses quare clausum fregit, &c. are to be laid in the same county where the land lieth: personal and transitory actions, as debt, detinue, covenant, (except where founded on privity of estate only, in which cause they are local), assault and battery, &c, may be brought in any county. Co. Lit. 282. Except against justices and officers of corporations and parishes (under stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12.), or against officers acting under particular acts of parliament; which frequently direct actions against them to be laid in the respective counties where the facts happen. Actions transitory may be laid in any county, although the stat. 6 R. 2. enacted, that writs of debt, account, &c. should be commenced in the county where the contracts were made; for that statute was never put in use; and yet generally actions have been laid in the county where the cause of them was arising, except as above. If the cause of action arise in two counties, an action may be brought in either county; but if a nuisance be erected in one county, to the damage of a man in another, the assise must be brought in confinio comitatuum. Mich. 8 Ann. B. R. By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. all suits on penal statutes shall be laid in the county where the offence was committed. See tit. Venue.

An action for rent, for use and occupation, is not a local action. 5 W. P. T. 25.

Actions likewise are said to be perpetual and temporary. Perpetual, those which can- counts are of the same nature, and the same not be determined by time; and all actions may be called perpetual that are not limited to time for their prosecution: temporary actions are those that are expressly limited; and since the statute of limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16.), all actions seem to be temporary; or not so perpetual, but that they may in time be prescribed against; a real action may be prescribed against within five years, on a fine levied, or recovery suffered. See tit. Limitation of Actions.

Actions are also joint or several; joint, where several persons are equally concerned, and the one cannot bring the action, or cannot be sucd, without the other; several, in case of trespass, &c. done, where persons are to be severally charged, and every trespass committed by many is several. 2 Leon. 77.

As to joining several matters in one action, the following is to be observed:-

In personal actions several wrongs may be joined in one writ; but actions founded upon a tort, and on a contract, cannot be joined, for they require different pleas and different process. 1 Keb. 847: 1 Vent. 366. So where there is a tort by the common law, and a tort by statute, they may not be joined; though where several torts are by the common law, they may be joined, if personal. 3 Salk. 202: see also post, tit. Joinder and Misjoinder.

Trover and assumpsit may not be joined; but in an action against a common carrier, the plaintiff may declare in case upon custom of the realm, and also upon trover and conversion; for not guilty answers to both. 1 Danv. Ab. 4. Debt upon an amerciament, and upon a mutuatus, may be joined in one declaration. Wils. p. 1. 248. So case for a misfeasance and negligence may be joined with a count in trover, in the same declara-tion. Ib. p. 2. 319. Two counts may be joined in the same declaration, where there is the same judgment in both. Ib. p. 2. 321. And any action may be joined, where the plea of not guilty goes to all. 8 Rep. 47. But, it seems, ejectment and battery cannot be joined; for after verdict, where several damages were found, the plaintiff was allowed to release those for the battery, and had judgment for the ejectment. 1 Danv. 3. If this is law, it shows that causes of action cannot in every instance be joined, where the same plea will go to the whole. The doctrine in Danvers seems to be law; for supposing ejectment, assault and battery, &c. joined in one action, and a general verdict on not guilty for the plaintiff, a new execution on such a judgment must be framed. Indeed the joining two such actions seems rather absurd. Various fallacious rules have been stated, on the result of the authorities, as to what actions may and may not be joined; but the result seems to be, that when the same plea may be pleaded, and the same judgment given on all the counts of the declaration, or where the in the right of the testator or intestate, though judgment is to be given on them, although the pleas be different, as in case of debt on bond, and debt on simple contract, which may be joined, they may be joined; and perhaps the nuture of the cause of action is the best test to decide whether the counts may be joined. See 2 W. Saund. 117. e. f.: Bac. Ab. Actions in General (C.) (Ed. Gwillim and Dodd): Tidd, 10, 11. (9th ed.) Although persons may join in the personalty, they shall always sever in actions concerning the realty; and waste being a mixed action, savouring of the realty, that being worthy, draws over the personalty with it. 2 Mod. 62. A person cannot, as administrator, &c. join an action for the right of another, with any action in his own right; because the costs will be entire, and it cannot be distinguished how much he is to have as administrator, and how much for himself. 1 Salk. 10. See a variety of cases, well selected and digested on this subject, Com. Dig. tit. Action: see Joinder in Action.

It remains now to consider,

I. By whom, and against whom, Actions may be brought.

II. What particular Actions are adapted to particular Cases.

It may be previously observed, that an action does not lie before a cause of action accrued; and if it be not pleaded in abatement, yet if it appears on the record, it may be moved in arrest of judgment; 2 Lev. 197: Carth. 114; vide Sho. 147; or assigned for error. Cro. Eliz. 325. See farther, Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Abatement (G. 6.), and Action.

In some cases, certain things are required by act of parliament to be done by the plaintiff previous to the commencement of an action, or he cannot recover; as in actions against justices of the peace, &c. 24 G. 2.

c. 44. and many other acts.

I. In all actions there must be a person able to sue. Murray v. East India Company, 5 Barn. & A. 204. The party sued must be one suable for the thing laid; and the plaintiff is to bring his right and proper action which the law gives him for relief. 1. Shep. Abr. There are three sorts of damages or wrongs, either of which is a sufficient foundation for an action. 1. Where a man suffers damage in his fame and credit. 2. Where one has damage to his person, as by battery, imprisonment, &c. which respects his liberty. 3. Where a person suffers any damage in his property. Carth. Rep. 416.

A man attainted of treason or felony, convict of recusancy, an outlaw, excommunicated person, convict of præmunire, an alien enemy, &c. cannot bring an action, till pardon, reversal, absolution, &c. But executors or administrators, being outlawed, may sue not in their own right. A feme covert must | tend to his loss of preferment in marriage or sue with her husband; and infants are to sue by guardian, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Actions may be brought against all persons, whether attainted of treason or felony, a convict recusant, outlawed, or excommunicate, &c.; see Bac. Ab. Actions in General (B.); and a feme covert must be sued with her husband. A scire facias, or any writ to which the defendant may plead, or by which the plaintiff may recover, is an action. 6 Rep. 3: Salk. 5. See tit. Abatement, Baron, and Feme, &c.

II. There are various kinds of actions, suited to different cases, as actions of Cove-NANT, DEBT, DETINUE, TRESPASS, TROVER, &c., which see under their respective titles.

But where the law has made no provision, or, rather, where no general action could well be framed beforehand, the ways of injuring, and methods of deceiving being so various, every person is allowed to bring a special thereto. Cro. Eliz. 250. Likewise to say a action on his own case. 1 New. Abr. 44: man was in gaol for stealing any thing is not Co. Lit. 56. a: 6 Mod. 53, 54.

This action is, in practice, become the most universal of any; as most of the other actions may, under particular circumstances, be resolved into this, which it will be necessary, therefore, to consider somewhat largely.

ACTION UPON THE CASE is a general action given for redress of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and not particularly provided against by law, in order to have satisfaction for damage; and (by stat. 19 H. 7. c. 9) in actions upon the case, the like process is to be had as in actions of trespass or debt. It is called action on the case, because the whole cause or case, as much as in the declaration (except time and place), is set down in the writ; and there is no other action given in the case, save only where the plaintiff hath his choice to bring this or another action. Formerly, all civil actions were sued in the Court of Common Pleas, and there the foundation of the suit is a writ, called an original, whereupon the capias is grounded, and which original contains the nature of the plaintiff's complaint at large; and it is the same where suits are commenced in B. R. by original out of Chancery.

In all cases where a man has a temporal loss, or damage, by the wrong of another (not amounting to a trespass, for, if it do, his remedy is by action of trespass), he may have an action upon the case to be repaired in damages. But the particular damage must be specially

This action, as hath been intimated, lies in a great variety of instances, which are particularly enumerated in Comyns's Digest, and in Bacon's Abridgment, Action on the Case. (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.) Of these the chief are, service, or to his disinheritance, or which occasion him any particular damage. This action, therefore, will lie for charging another with any capital or other crime. To say of another he is a traitor, action lies. 1 Bulster. 145. But if one call another a seditious, traitorous knave, no action lieth; because the words imply an intention only, and not an unlawful act. 4 Rep. 19. Nor to say of a man he deserves to be hanged; nor to call another a rogue generally, or say he will prove him to be a rogue; though it will lie to say a man is a rogue on record. 4 Rep. 15: Danv. 92. Words which charge a person with being a murderer, highwayman, or thief, in express terms, are held actionable. 1 Roll. Abr. 47. Though for saying such a one would have taken his purse on the highway, or have robbed him, an action lies not; for nothing is shown to be done in order thereto. Cro. Eliz. 250. Likewise to say a actionable, for the words do not affirm the theft. Danv. 140. But to say, I think A. B. committed such a felony; or, I dreamt he stole a horse, &c.; these words are actionable. Dal. 144: 1 Danv. 105. If a felony be done, and common fame is that such a person did it, although one may charge or arrest him on suspicion of that felony, yet a man may not affirm that he did the same, for he may be innocent all the while, and therefore affirming it hath been held actionable. Hob. 138. 203. 381.

It was heretofore held, that no action would lie for words importing a charge of murder, without an averment that the person said to be killed was dead; but the latter and better opinion is, that the party shall be intended to be dead, unless the contrary appears in the pleadings. 1 Vent. 117: Cro. Jac. 489: Sid. 53: Cro. Eliz. 560. 823. Though quære if the party is proved alive? So words accusing of sodomy. 1 Sid. 373.

When such words are spoken of another maliciously, for which, if true, the party spoken of might be punished criminally, action lies; as, to say of a person, he hath perjured himself; or that he would prove him perjured; or that he was forsworn in the court of Chancery, Common Pleas, &c. are actionable; but not to call a person a forsworn man, unless it be said as to an oath in a court of record. 3 Inst. 163: Danv. 87. 89: 6 Term. Rep. 691: 8 East, 427: Bac. Ab. Slander. (B. 3.) To say a man hath forged an obligation, &c. and he will prove it; this is actionable. Danv. 130.

Some writers make a difference where the subsequent words are introduced by the word and; as, you are a thief, and have stolen, &c., which are additional, and shall not correct; and the word for; as you are a thief, for you 1. ACTION ON THE CASE FOR WORDS; which is brought for words spoken, which affect a person's life, reputation, office, or trade, or the words "thief," "stealing," take their be held to intend feloniously stealing, if a felony could be committed of the subjectmatter. Little doubts can now arise on these matters, which formerly occupied the courts. If it clearly appear that the words could not imply felonious stealing, the action will fail; if, for example, the defendant said, "You stole an acre of my land," the statement would be bad upon demurrer, if it appeared on the trial that the words had been applied in a sense not felonious, the plaintiff would be nonsuited; and, finally, if after verdict for the plaintiff, it appeared that the term as used was capable of a felonious sense, the verdict could be supported. See Starkie on Slander, 1. 93. (2d ed.) The words, he is a maintainer of thieves, and keeps none but thieves in his house, will not support an action, unless it be averred that he knew them to be thieves. · Cro. Eliz. 746.

To say an alchouse-keeper keeps a bawdy-house, action lies. Cro. Eliz. 582. Though to say of an innkeeper, that he harbours rogues, &c. is not actionable; for his inn is common to all guests. 2 Roll. Rep. 136. To say of another he hath (not that he had) the French pox, action will lie. Cro. Jac. 430. See Noy, 151. To call a man a whore-master, or a woman whore, no action lies; for these are merely spiritual offences. Danv. Abr. 80. But calling a woman a whore in London is actionable, as she is liable to be punished by the custom of the city. See Com. Dig. tit. Action upon the Case for Defamation. (D.10.) But this custom has never been proved, so as to maintain an action at Westminster. Doug.

Words likewise are actionable which tend to the disgrace or detriment of a person in office, or of a man in the exercise of his profession or trade.

Calling an officer in the government, &c. Jacobite, hath been held actionable; not of a private person. 7 Mod. Ca. 107. To say a justice of peace doth not administer justice, is actionable. Cro. Eliz. 358. And so for other disgrace in his office. But words relating to a man's office must have a plain and direct meaning, to charge him with some crime that is punishable, and be spoken of his office, or otherwise they are not actionable. 6 Mod. 200. Thus the plaintiff, being a justice of peace, the defendant said, Mr. Stukely covereth and hideth felonies, and is not worthy to be a justice of peace; actionable, for though his office is not named, the words necessarily refer to it. 4 Rep. 16: 1 Leon. 335: 1 Vent. 50.

Slander, &c. brought by a doctor of the civil law, who was also a justice of peace, and chancellor of the bishoprick of Norwich, for these words, he is not fit to be a chancellor or justice of peace; he is a knave, a rascal, and a villain; he is not fit to practise; he ought to have his gown pulled over his ears; actionable. 2 Lutw. 1288.

The defendant spoke to an officer, (viz.)

complexion from the subject-matter, and will be held to intend feloniously stealing, if a felony could be committed of the subject-matter. Little doubts can now arise on these have foisted in words in the order of your commission; actionable. Style, 436.

In offices of profit, for such words as impute the want either of understanding, ability, or integrity to execute them, this action lies. But in offices of honour, words that impute want only of ability, are not actionable; as to say of a justice of peace, he a justice of peace! he is an ass, and a beetle-headed justice; the reason is, because a man cannot help his want of ability, as he may his want of honesty; otherwise where words impute dishonesty or corruption. 2 Salk. 695. But as a magistrate may be removed for gross ignorance as well as for corruption, he ought to be allowed to bring an action for an imputation of such ignorance; and it is not clear now that such action will not lie. See Starkie on Slander, 1. 121. (2d ed.) If special damage can be proved, it is actionable; and indeed in every case, where special damage can be proved, an action will lie.

As to words tending to the disgrace or detriment of a man in his profession or trade; where the words are disgracing to a man's profession, they also must appear to be spoken precisely of it; for to say a person hath cozened one in the sale of certain goods, is not actionable; unless you show that the party lived by such selling; 1 Roll. Abr. 62; or derived emolument from it.

To say of a doctor in divinity, Doctor S. is robbing the church; and at another time, Doctor S. hath robbed the church; actionable.

Cro. Car. 301. 417.

In case, &c. in which the plaintiff declared, that he was instituted and inducted into a parsonage in, &c., and that he executed the office of a pastor in that church for the space of four years, and that the defendant said of him, You are a drunkard, a whore-master, a common swearer, and a common liar, and you have preached false doctrine, and deserve to be degraded; after a verdict for the plaintiff, it was objected that the words are not actionable, because they import no civil or temporal damage to the plaintiff; but adjudged actionable; for if true, he may be degraded, and so lose his freehold. Allen, 63.

These words spoken of a preaching parson, Parrat is an adulterer, and had two children by B. G's. wife, and I will cause him to be deprived for it; not actionable, for it is a spiritual defamation, and punishable in that court. Cro. Eliz. 502. But as such words might lead to his deprivation, it would seem they would be held actionable.

To say of a counsellor, that he is no lawyer; that they are fools who come to him for law, and that he will get nothing by the law, action lies. 1 Danv. 113. And it is the same to say, he hath disclosed secrets in a cause.

To call a doctor of physic fool, ass, empiric,

and mountebank, or say he is no scholar, are | may bear an action; but if there be any actionable. Cro. Car. 270. So to say of a colour for what is said, they will not be acschoolmaster, put not your son to him, for he will come away as very a dunce as he went. Hetl. 71. Where one says of a midwife, that many have perished for her want of skill, an action will lie. Cro. Car. 211. If one calls a merchant bankrupt action lies. 1 Leon. And to call a trading person bankrupt or knave, is actionable. 1 Danv. 90. Also, if one say of a merchant that he is a beggarly fellow, and not able to pay his debts; or say of a person that he is a runaway, and dares not show his face, by reason whereof he is disgraced, and injured in his calling, these are actionable. Raym. 184. To say of a cornfactor, you are a rogue and swindling rascal; you delivered me 100 bushels of oats worse by six shillings a bushel than I bargained for, is actionable. Thomas v. Jackson, 3 Bing. R. 104. The action may be brought by any person in any lawful employment, but not in one which is not strictly lawful, as a jobber in the funds. 2 Boss. & Pull. 284. Words imputing insolvency to an innkeeper have been held actionable, though they were spoken when innkeepers were not within the bankrupt laws. Whittington v. Gladwin, 5 Barn. & C. 150.

Words tending to the loss of preferment in marriage, &c. are actionable. Thus, to say that a woman hath a bastard, or is with child; or that a certain person hath had the use of her body, whereby she loses her marriage, action lies, i. e. by reason of the special damage. If a man is in treaty with a woman to marry, and another tells him she is under a pre-contract; this doth not imply a scandal, but yet, if false, an action will lie if she loses her marriage by means of those words. To say of a man that he lay with a certain woman, &c. by which he loses his marriage, is actionable; for in these cases there is a temporal damage 1 Danv. 81. But such words could not be actionable unless they actually pooduced damage by the loss of the marriage.

As to words tending to a person's disinheritance, if one says of another that has land by descent, that he is a bastard; action upon the case lies, as it tends to his disinheritance. Co. Ent. 28. But to say of a son and heir apparent, that he is a bastard, action lies not until he is disinherited, or is prejudiced thereby. 1 Danv. 83. To slander the title of another person to his lands is actionable; but the words must be false, and be spoken by one that neither hath, nor pretendeth title to the land himself: and who is not of counsel to him that pretends right; qui immiscet se rei alienæ. 4 Rep. 17. If a man shall pretend title to the land another hath in possession, and hath no colour of title to it; and shall say he hath such a deed or conveyance of it, where in truth he hath none, or if he hath he knows it to be so; in this case the words & Cres. 473.

tionable. Cro. Jac. 163: Yelv. 80. 88: 1 Stark. on Slander, 288 (2d ed.): Bac. Ab. Slander. (C.) (7th ed.) And the party of whom the words are spoken must have, or be likely to have, some special damage by the speaking of them; as that he is hindered in the sale of his lands, or in his preferment in marriage, &c., without which it is said action doth not lie. 1 Cro. 99: Cro. Jac. 213. 397: Poph. 187: 2 Bulst. 90. The affirming that another hath title to the land, where actionable. See 4 Rep. 175.

If A. says, that B. said, that C. did a certain scandalous thing, C. shall have action against A. with averment that B. never said so, whereby A. is the author of the scandal, supposing B. did not in fact say so. Cro. Jac.

It is to be observed in general, that though scandalous words are spoken before a man's face, or behind his back, by way of affirmation or report, when drunk or sober; and although they are spoken in any other than the English language, if they are understood by the hearers, they are actionable; also, words may be actionable in one county which are not so in another, by the different construction, &c. 4 Rep. 15: Hob. 165. 236. But if the defendant can make proof of the words, he may, in an action for damages, plead a special justification. Co. Ent. 26. The words to maintain this action must be direct and certain, that there may be no intendment against them; but as some words separate, without others joined with them, are not actionable, so some words that are actionable may be qualified by the precedent or subsequent words, and all the words are to be taken together. 4 Rep. 17: 1 Cro. 127: Moor Ca. 174. 331: vide 4 Rep. 20: Hob. 126: Bac. Ab. Slander. (R.) Where words spoken are somewhat uncertain, they may, by apt averments, be made certain and actionable. 2 Bulst. 227. So by the pleadings of the parties, and verdict of a jury for the plaintiff. Cro. Jac. 107. The thing charged by the words must be that which is possible to have been done; for if it be of a thing altogether and apparently impossible, no action lies. 4 Rep. 16. No action will lie for words spoken in pursuit of a prosecution in an ordinary course of justice; as where a lawyer, in pleading his client's cause, utters words according to his instructions; as saying of one he is a bastard, when this is to defend the party's own title where he himself doth claim to be heir of the land that is in question, these words will not bear an action. Cro. Jac. 90: 4 Where the words are pertinent to the issue in the cause, no action lies against the advocate, although the words may be considered by the court too strong. Hodgson v. any, it is a counterfeit and forged deed, and Scarlett: 1 Barn. & A. 232: and see 4 Barn.

and when and where spoken, and before whom, and the damage thereby to the plaintiff; that his credit was, and how impaired, with the aggravating circumstances; but it matters not whether the plaintiff doth in his declaration set forth all the circumstantial words as they are spoken; so as to show the very words that are actionable, which must be set out accurately, and without any variation in the sense; for if the sense vary, it is fatal, and it is not sufficient to set out the words according to their substance and effect. 11 Mod. 78. 84: 3 Barn. & A. 503: Bac. Ab. Stander. (S.) The rule as to construing words in mitiori sensu is now exploded, and they are to be construed according to their ordinary and popular acceptation. Cowp. 275: 5 East, 463: 9 East, 96. In general, malice, in fact, need not be proved, since, if the words are slanderous, a malicious intention is inferred: but if the words are spoken in the honest discharge of social duties (whether legal or moral), as in giving the character of a servant, or in giving a bona fide caution to an employer, as to supposed malpractices committed by his steward, &c. &c., the action will not lie unless express malice is proved against the defendant. See Starkie, c. 13 (2d ed.): 4 Barn. & C. 274: 3 Camp. 282. 233: 1 Camp. 268: 2 Price.

There is no branch of the law in which the decided cases are so contradictory to each other, and the decisions so frequently irreconcileable to their avowed principles, as this action on the case for words; many cases in the old authors are certainly not law, and the fairest observation on the subject is, that "what words are actionable or not, will be more satisfactorily determined by an accurate application of the general principles on which such actions depend, than by a reference to adjudged cases, especially those in old authors." See the case of Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177. where the principles are well explained. 2. Action on the case likewise lies upon AN ASSUMPSIT OR UNDERSTANDING; and such action is founded on a contract either express or implied by law, and the verdict gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92: Moor, 667. See tit. Assump-

3. It has been premised, that a special action on the case lies in all instances wherein no general action could be framed; it will be necessary, therefore, to point out some of those particular cases to which it is most peculiarly applicable.

It was formerly held, that if my fire, by misfortune, burnt the goods of another man, for this wrong he should have action on the case against me; and if my servant put a

In this action the nature of the words must and this burnt my house, and the house of be set forth, with the manner of speaking them, my neighbour, action of the case lay for him against me. 1 Danv. 10. But this action is now destroyed by stat. 6 Ann. c. 31. See tit. Fire, Waste.

Action on the case likewise lies against carriers and others upon the custom of England. See tit. Carrier.

A common innkeeper is chargeable for goods stolen in his house. See tit. Inns and Innkeeper.

This action lies for deceit in contracts, bargains, and sales. If a vintner sells wine, knowing it to be corrupt, as good and not corrupt, though without warranty, action lies. Danv. 173. So if a man sells a horse, and warrants him to be sound of his limbs, if he be not, action on the case lies. A person warrants a horse, wind and limb, that hath some secret disease known to the seller, but not to the buyer, this action may be brought; though if one sell a horse, and warrant him sound, and he hath at the time visible infirmities, which the buyer may see, action on the case will not lie. Yelv. 114: Cro. Jac. 675: 2 Bing. 183: Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (E.) (7th ed.) There must be an express warranty; for a sound price does not imply a warranty. 2 East, 322. Where one sells me any wares or commodities, and is to deliver that which is good, but delivers what is naught; or sells any thing by false or deceitful weights and measures, with or without warranty, action on the case lies; and so where a man doth sell corrupt victuals, as bread, beer, or other things for food, and knows it to be unwholesome. Dyer, 75: 4 Rep. 18: Cro. Jac. 270: 2 East. 314: 4 Barn. & Cres. 108: 6 Taunt. 108: Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (E.) if the buyer or his servant shall see and taste the victuals, &c. and like and accept the same, no action can be maintained. 7 H. 4. 16. Nor will case lie upon a warranty of what is out of a man's power, or of a future thing; as that a horse shall carry a man thirty miles a day, or the like. Finch, 188. If a man sells certain packs of wool, and warrants that they are good and merchantable, if they are damaged, action on the case lies against him. 1 Danv. 187: Bac. Ab. ubi supra. The bare affirmation by the seller of a particular sort of diamond without warranting it to be such, will not maintain an action. And when a man warrants a horse sound, and at the same time misrepresents the place from whence the horse came, if the warranty is complied with, the sale will not be vitiated by the misrepresentation. 5 Dow. & Ry. 169: Cro. Jac. 4. 196. But where a man hath the possession of a personal thing, the affirming it to be his own is a warranty that it is so; though it is otherwise in case of lands, where the buyer at his peril is to see that he hath title. 1 Salk. 210. If a person sells to another cattle or goods that are not his own, candle or other fire in any place in my house, action on the case lies; so if he warrants cloth

For neglect or mulfeazance; as if a tailor, &c. undertakes to make a suit of clothes, and spoils them, action lies; and if a carpenter promises to repair my house before a certain day, and doth not do it, by which my house falls; or if he undertakes to build a house for me, and doth it ill, action on the case lies. 1 Danv. 32. If a surgeon neglects his patient, or applies unwholesome medicines, whereby the patient is injured, this action lieth. And if a counsel retained to appear on such a day in court, doth not come, by which the cause miscarries, action lies against him: so if, after retainer, he become of counsel to the adversary against the plaintiff. 11 H. 6. 18.

Where a smith promises to shoe my horse well, if he pricks him, action on the case lies; and so when he refuses to shoe him, on which I travel without, and my horse is damaged. For stopping up a water-course or way; breaking down a party-wall; stopping of ancient lights, and for any private nuisance to a man's water, light, or air, whereby a person is damnified, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 427: Yelv.

This action lies also for killing another person's dogs, by means of traps placed near to the highway, and baited with flesh, for the purpose of leading the animal to its destruction. Townsend v. Wathen, 9 E. R. 277. And for firing at wild fowl in a decoy. Carrington v. Taylor, 11 E. R. 571. But not at rooks in a rookery, for they are noxious birds. 2 Barn. & C. 934.

If I lend another my horse to ride so far, and he rides farther, or forward and backward, or doth not give him meat, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 14. And where one lends me a horse for a time, if he take him from me within that time, or disturb me before I have done what I hired him for; action on the case lies: and though I ride the horse out of the way in my journey, he may not take him 8 Rep. 146. A servant is trusted with goods and merchandize consigned to him by a merchant, to pay the customs for them, and dispose of them to profit; if he deceive the merchant, and have allowance for it on his account; and, to defraud the king, lands some of the goods without paying the customs, by which they are forfeited, action on the case lieth. If the plaintiff's house in Cheapside adjoins the defendant's, and the defendant pull his house down, and in consequence thereof the plaintiff's house in part falls, the plaintiff cannot have an action against him without alleging and proving a right to have his house to lean against the defendant's. An action on the case for permissive waste does not lie against a tenant by léase who has not covenanted to repair. 4 Taunt. 764. See

tit. Waste. Action on the case may likewise be brought for malicious prosecutions: where a suit is without ground, and one is arrested, action on the case lies for unjust vexation. If some of the charges in the indictment are maliciously preferred, though others are not so, an action lies: 4 Taunt. 616; and it is no answer that the defendant proceeded by advice of counsel, if the advice were ill founded, or the facts were improperly stated to counsel. 5 Taunt. 277: 2 Barn. & C. 693. In general the plaintiff must give some evidence of want of probable cause for the prosecution, but this being a negative, very slight proof is sufficient to call on the defendant to show probable cause. 1 Barn. & Adol. 133. The action lies for falsely and maliciously arresting a person for more than is due (see 3 Barn. & C. 139.) whereby the defendant is imprisoned for want of bail. A stet processus is not such a determination of the action as is sufficient to support the action. 1 Moo. & Malk, 495. There must be an actual arrest of the body in order to maintain the action. If the party gives bail in consequence of a message from the officer having the writ, he cannot sue for a malicious arrest. 6 Barn. & C. 528: 2 New R. 211: Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (H.) (7th ed.) If the party making the arrest, acted bona fide under the advice of competent counsel, and really believed he had a good cause of action, he is not liable to this action. 3 Barn. & C. 693: and see 1 Stark. Ca. 502. This action also lies for maliciously suing out a commission of bankrupt or lunacy. 1 Barn. & castle formerly belonging to the family of new door, if the reversion is injured by it, Adol. 133: 1 Gow. Ca. 50. If a creditor, having his debtor in execution, refuse to accept from him the debt or costs when tendered, and to sign an authority for his discharge, he is liable to an action. 4 Barn. & C. 25. An action likewise lies against sheriffs, for default in executing writs, permitting escapes, &c.

Actions on the case likewise lie for conspiracy, escape, rescous, nuisances, &c. which see under the several titles. And for a general abridgement of the law on this subject, see Com. Dig. tit. Action: Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

ACTION PREJUDICIAL (otherwise called preparatory or principal) is an action which arises from some doubt in the principal; as in case a man sues his younger brother for lands descended from his father, and it is objected against him that he is a bastard; now this point of bastardy is to be tried before the cause can any further proceed; and therefore it is termed prejudicialis, quia prias judicanda. Bract. lib. 3. c. 4. numb. 6: Cowel.

ACTION OF A WRIT, is a phrase of speech used, when one pleads some matter, by which he shows the plaintiff had no cause to have the writ he brought, yet it may be that he may have another writ or action for the same matter. Such a plea is called a plea to the action of the writ; whereas, if by the plea it should appear that the plaintiff hath no cause to have an action for the thing demanded, then it is called a plea to the action.

ACTION OF ABSTRACTED MUL-

TURES, is an action for multures against those who are thirled to a mill, and come not. Scotch Dict.—An action to compel persons to grind at a mill according to their tenure.

ACTION FOR POYNDING OF THE GROUND, is so called because it is founded upon some infeoftment for an annuity (whether annual rent, life-rent, or feu duty, &c.) that affects the ground; and the ground being thus debitor, it is called debitum fundi, for which both moveables found upon the ground may be poynded (distrained), and these failing, the property affected by this servitude may be apprized or adjudged, even in prejudice of intervening singular successors. ACTION IN THE SCOTCH LAW, is a prosecution by any party of their right, in order to a judicial determination thereof. Scotch Dict.

ACTIONARE, i. e. In jus vocare, or to prosecute one in a suit at law. Thorn's Chron.

ACTO, Acton, Aketon, Fr. Hauqueton.] A coat of mail. Du Fresne.

ACTON BURNEL. The statute of 11 Ed. 1. ann. 1283, ordaining the statute merchant: it was so termed from a place named Acton-Burnel, where it was made; being a shire. Cowel: Terms de Ley. See tit. Statute Merchant.

ACTOR. The proctor or advocate in civil courts or causes. Actor dominicus, was often used for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor ecclesia, was the ancient forensick term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villa, was the steward or head bailiff of a town or village. Cowel.

ACTS DONE, are distinguished into acts of God, the acts of the law, and acts of men. The act of God shall prejudice no man: as, where the law prescribeth means to perfect or settle any right or estate, if by the act of God the means, in some circumstances, become impossible, no party shall receive any damage thereby. Co. Lit. 123: 1 Rep. 97. As in an action on the case a bargeman may justify, by pleading that there were several passengers in his barge, and a sudden tempest arising, all the goods in the barge were thrown overboard to save the lives of the passengers. See tit. Carrier.

The acts of the law are esteemed beyond the acts of man; and when to the perfection of a thing divers acts are required, the law hath most regard to the original act. 8 Rep. 78. The law will construe things to be lawfully done, when it standeth indifferent whether they should be lawful or not: but whatsoever is contrary to law is accounted not done. Co. Lit. 42: 3 Rep. 74. Our law doth favour substantial more than circumstantial acts; and regards deeds and acts more than words; and the law doth not require unnecessary things. Plowd. 10.

As to acts of men; that which a man doth by another, shall be said to be done by himself; but personal things cannot be done by another. Co. Lit. 158. A man cannot do an act to himself, unless it be where he hath a double capacity; no person shall be suffered to do any thing against his own act; and every man's acts shall be construed most strongly against himself. Plowd. 140. But if many join in an act, and some may not lawfully do it, it shall be adjudged the act of him who might lawfully do the same. Dyer, 192. Acts that men are forced by necessity and compulsion to do, are not regarded: and an act done between persons shall not injure a stranger not party or privy thereto. Plowd. 19: 6 Rep. 16.

Where mutual acts are to be done, who is to do the first act. See tit. Condition.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. See tit. Statute.

ACTS OF SEDERUNT, are ordinances of the Court of Session, under authority of the act 1540, c. 93. by which authority is given to make such statutes as may be necessary for the ordering of processes and the expediting of justice. The court is also authorised, by other acts of parliament, to make Vol. I.-6

Burnel, and afterwards of Lovel, in Shrop-I enactments relative to certain matters therein pointed out. Scotch Dict.

ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEM-BLY OF THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. The acts of the general assembly issued under their legislative powers, are binding on all the members and judicatories of the church. The form of their procedure in these enactments is regulated by an act of the church (1697) termed the barrier act. Scotch Dict.

ACTUARY, actuarius.] A clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the Con-

ADCREDULITARE. To purge one's-self of an offence by oath. Leges Ina, c. 36.

ADDITION. The title or estate, and place of abode, given to a man besides his name.

See tit. Abatement, I. 3. c.

ADELING, Ethling or Edling, from the Saxon ædelan, noble or excellent.] A title of honour among the Anglo-Saxons; properly belonging to the king's children; it being usual for the Saxons to join the word ling to the paternal name, signifying a son, or the younger. King Edward the Confessor having no issue, and intending to make Edgar, his nephew, the heir of the kingdom, gave him the stile and title of Adeling. It was also used among the Saxons for the nobles in general. Spelm. Gloss. Lamb.

ADELINGIA. Athelney, in Somerset-

ADEMPTION. A taking away of a legacy. See Legacy.

AD INQUIRENDUM. A judicial writ commanding inquiry to be made of anything relating to a cause depending in the king's courts. It is granted upon many occasions for the better execution of justice Reg. Judic.

See tit. Writ of Inquiry.

ADJOURNMENT, adjournamentum, Fr. adjournement.] A putting off until another time or place. An adjournment in cyrc (by stat. 2 E. 3. c. 11. and 25 E. 3. c. 18.), is an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre will sit again. A court, the parliament, and writs, &c. may be adjourned; and the substance of the adjournment of courts is to give licence to all parties that have anything to do in court to forbear their attendance till such a time. Every last day of the term, and every eve of a day in term, which is not dies juridicus, or a law day, the court is adjourned. 2 Inst. 26. The terms may be adjourned to some other place, and there the King's Bench and other courts at Westminster be held: and if the king puts out a proclamation for the adjournment of the term, this is a sufficient warrant to the keeper of the Great Seal to make out writs accordingly; and proclamation is to be made, appointing all persons to keep their day, at the time and place to which, &c. 1 And. 279: 1 Lev. 176. Though by Magna Charta the court of Common Pleas is to be held at Westminster, yet necessity will of a plague, a civil war, &c. In the first year of Charles I. a writ of adjournment was delivered to all the justices, to adjourn two returns of Trinity term: and in the same year Michaelmas term was adjourned until crastino animarum to Reading; and the king by proclamation signified his pleasure, that his court should be there held. Cro. Car. 13. 27. In the 17th of Charles II. the court of B. R. was adjourned to Oxford, because of the plague; and from thence to Windsor; and afterwards to Westminster again. 1 Lev.

On a foreign plea pleaded in assize, &c. the writ shall be adjourned into the Common Pleas to be tried; and, after adjournment, the tenant may plead a new plea pursuant to the first; but if he pleads in abatement a plea triable by the assize, on which it is adjourned, he cannot plead in bar afterwards, &c. 1 Danv. Ab. 289. The justices of assize have power to adjourn the parties to Westminster, or to any other place; and by the express words of Magna Charta (cap. 12.) they may adjourn, &c. into C. B. before the judges there. Dyer, 132.

If the judges of the court of King's Bench, &c. are divided in opinion, two against two, upon a demurrer, or special verdict (not on a motion), the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber, to be determined by all the judges of England. 4 Mod. 156: 5 Mod.

ADIRATUS, strayed, lost. See Bract. l. 3. tract. 2. c. 32.

ADJUDICATION. The English use this term to express the act of giving judgment: but in Scotch law it is used to express the diligence by which land is attached in security and payment of debt, or by which a feudal title is made up in a person holding an obligation to convey without procuratory or precept. There is thus, 1st, The adjudication for debt; 2d, The adjudication in security; and 3d, The adjudication in implement. Scotch Dict.

ADJUDICATION SPECIAL, is when the lords of session, proportionably to the sums due, adjudge to the creditor some part of the creditor's lands, with a fifth part more, beside composition due to the superior, and the expences for obtaining infcoftment: but if the debitor do not consent to such an adjudication, in the terms of the act of Parl. 1672, all his lands and other heritable subjects are adjudged in the same manner as they were formerly apprized. Scotch Dict.

ADJUDICATION AFTER THE OLD FORM, is when the hareditas jacens (the heir having renounced) is adjudged to the creditor for payment of his money. Scotch Dict.

ADJUDICATION UPON OBLIGE-MENT, is when a man having obliged him-sometimes supersede the law, as in the case | him, the lords adjudge upon his refusal to perform. Scotch Dict.

> AD JURA REGIS. A writ brought by the king's clerk presented to a living, against those that endeavour to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title. Reg. of Writs, 61.

ADLEGIARE, or aleier in Fr.] To purge himself of a crime by oath. See the laws of king Alfred, in Brompt. Chron. cap. 4. 13.

ADMEASUREMENT, Writ of admensuratio.] Is a writ brought for remedy against such persons as usurp more than their share. It lies in two cases; one is termed admeasurement of dower (admensuratio dotis), where a man's widow after his decease holdeth from the heir more land, &c. as dower, than of right belongs to her: and the other is admeasurement of pasture (admensuratio pasture), which lies between those that have common of pasture, where any one or more of them surcharge the common. Reg. Orig. 156. 171. In the first case the heir shall have this writ against the widow, whereby she shall be admeasured, and the heir restored to the overplus: and in the last case it may be brought against all the other commoners, and him that surcharged; for all the commoners shall be admeasured. Terms de Ley, 23. See tit. Common and Dower.

ADMINICLE, adminiculum.] Aid, help. or support. See stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

In the Scotch law adminicle is a term used in the action of proving the tenor of a lost deed; and applicable to any deed or even scroll tending to establish the existence or terms of the deed in question. Scotch Dict.
ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE, in criminal cases, is improved and provided for in England by stats. 7 G. 4. c. 64. and 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28; and in Ireland by 9 G. 4. c. 54. The effects of those acts may be thus shortly stated, referring to the various apposite titles for minuter particulars.

The cases in which parties may or may not be admitted to bail, when taken before justices of peace, are defined :- The justices are to take the examinations in writing, and certify the bailment, and bind over witnesses to appear at the trial.-Like duties and powers are given to coroners on inquests for murder. The plea of not guilty shall put the prisoner on trial without more; and the court may order that plea to be entered if the offender refuse to plead .- The king shall only challenge for cause.—Peremptory challenges of the offender restrained.—Attainder of a former self to infeoft another in lands disponed by crime not pleadable in bar.-Jury shall not inquire of the flight of a prisoner, nor of his temp. E. 1. and the first Admiral of England, lands.-The benefit of clergy abolished in all cases of felony .-- No felonies shall be capital but such as were excluded from clergy, or as shall be made punishable with death.-The court may order hard labour, or solitary confinement, as part of imprisonment.—Trial of accessories regulated (see tit. Accessories) .-Offences committed in the boundaries of counties may be tried in either; or in any county through which any coach or vessel may pass in any journey during which any offence may be committed.—Property of partners may be laid in any one of them.—Property in public buildings need not be laid in any one.-Indictments shall not be delayed by dilatory pleas of misnomer, &c., but shall be amended. After verdict judgment shall not be staid for immaterial omission in indictments, &c .-Effect of free or conditional pardons.—Recognizances to prosecute shall not be estreated without judge's order.

By stat. 1. W. 4. c. 70. for the more effectual administration of justice in England and Wales, regulations are made for the appointment of additional judges of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, and for the performance of their duties, as also for the future commencement and continuance of the terms (as to which see also 1 W. 4. st. 2. c. 3.) and sittings from return of writ of errorpermitting attorneys of King's Bench and Common Pleas to practise in the Court of Exchequer-for extending the jurisdiction of the courts at Westminster to the courts Palatine of Chester and to Wales, putting an end to the peculiar jurisdiction in those parts of England—appointing the assizes to be held in Chester and Wales as in England-extending to those parts rules as to rendering defendants in discharge of their bail-regulating the passing of fines of lands there, and the accounts of sheriffs-regulating the time of holding Quarter Sessions—the proceedings in ejectment in cases of right of entry, accruing after Hilary and Trinity Terms. This act is very extensive and miscellaneous, and not remarkably well arranged or accurately worded.

ADMINISTRATOR, Lat.] He that hath the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the Ordinary, for which he is accountable when thereunto required. For matters relating to this title, and to Administration in general, see tit. Executor.

ADMINISTRATRIX, Lat.] She that hath goods and chattels of an intestate committed

ADMIRAL. Admiralius, admirallus, admiralis, capitaneus or custos maris, from the French ameral, or from the Saxon, aen mereal, over all the sea; and in ancient time the office of the admiralty was called custodia maritima Anglia. Co. Lit. 260. Many other fanciful derivations are recapitulated in Spelman's Glossary, and see Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty. The term appears to have been first used by name, was Richard Fitz Alan, Earl of Arundel, 10 Ric. 2. A high officer or magistrate, having the government of the king's navy; and (in his court of Admiralty) the determining of all causes belonging to the sea, and offences committed thereon. The office is now usually executed by commissioners, who, by stat. 2 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. are declared to have the same authorities, jurisdictions, and powers as the Lord High Admiral, who is usually understood by this term in law, not adverting to the naval distinctions. And by stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 65. (the heirpresumptive to the crown being then Lord High Admiral) like powers were given to him as by any statutes are given to the commissioners.

Under this head therefore shall be included all that relates as well to such Admiral as to the Court of Admiralty.

The warden of the Cinque Ports has the jurisdiction of Admiral within those ports exempt from the admiralty of England. Inst. 223: 2 Inst 556: 2 Jon. 67: 1 Jenk. 85. It appears that anciently the Admirals of Eng. land had jurisdiction of all causes of merchants and mariners, happening not only upon the main sea, but in all foreign parts within the king's dominions, and without them, and were to judge them in a summary way, according to the laws of Oleron and other sea laws. Inst. 75. In the time of king Ed. 1. and king John, all causes of merchants and mariners, and things arising upon the main sea, were tried before the lord Admiral: but the first title of Admiral of England, expressly conferred upon a subject, was given by patent of king Rich. 2. to the earl of Arundel and Surry. In the reign of Ed. 3. the court of admirally was established, and Ric. 2. limited its juris-

For the construction of this statute, see 2 Bulstr. 323: 3 Bulstr. 205: 13 Co. 52.

By stat. 15 R. 2. c. 3. it is declared, that all contracts, pleas, and quarrels, and other things done within the bodies of counties by land or water, and of wreck, the admiral shall have no conusance, but they shall be tried, &c. by the law of the land; but of the death of a man, and of mayhem done in great ships, being in the main stream of great rivers beneath the points nearest the sea, and in no other place of the same river, the admiral shall have comusance; and also to arrest ships in the great flotes, for the great voyages of the king and the realm, saving to the king his forfeitures; and shall have jurisdiction in such flotes during such voyages, only saving to lords, &c. their liberties.

boat which had struck on a sand-bank distant about 100 yards from the shore, the offender is properly tried at an Admiralty Sessions, for the offence is committed where the death happens, and not at the place from whence the cause of death proceeds. Leach, 432.

By the stat. 2 H. 4. c. 11. reciting 13 R. 2. c. 5. it is enacted, that he that finds himself aggrieved against the form of the statute, shall have his action by writ grounded upon the case against him that so pursues in the admiralty, and recover double damages against him, and he shall incur the pain of 10l. if he be at-tainted.

By stat. 27 H. 8. c. 4. all offences of piracy, robbery, and murder done on the sea, or within the admiral's jurisdiction, shall be tried in such places of the realm as shall be limited in the king's commission, directed to the lord admiral, and his lieutenant and deputies, and other persons, to determine such offences after the common course of law, as if the same offences had been done on land.

By the stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15. " all treasons, felonies, robberies, murders, &c. upon the sea, or within the admiralty jurisdiction, shall also be tried in such shires and places in the realm as shall be limited by the king's commission, as if done on land, and the consequences of the offences are the same." See 3 Inst. 111, 112. But in cases which would be manslaughter at land, the jury is always directed to acquit. Foster, 288. See Homicide, under stat. 28 H. 8. c. 15.

ADMIRALTY. There are in fact two Courts of Admiralty, that which is properly called the Instance Court, which the statutes of R. 2. were made to restrain; and the Prize Court. Both courts have indeed the same judge, but in the former he sits by virtue of a commission under the great seal, which enumerates the objects of his jurisdiction, but specifies nothing relative to prize: in the latter court he sits by virtue of a commission which issues in every war, under the great seal, to the Lord High Admiral (or commissioners for executing that office), requiring the Court of Admiralty, and the lieutenant and judge of the same court, "to proceed upon all and all manner of captures, seizures, prizes, and reprisals of ships and goods, which are or shall be taken, and to hear and determine according to the course of the Admiralty and the law of nations;" and upon this a warrant issues to the judge. The manner of proceeding, and the system of litigation and jurisprudence, are different in the two courts. The jurisdiction of the Prize Court is exclusive; for it has been determined solemnly, that though for taking a ship on the high seas an action will lie at common law, yet when it is taken as prize, though wrongfully taken and without a war, for the taking no action can be maintained. Nor is the jurisdiction con-statutes of R. 2. that if a loaded musket be i fined to captures at sea: captures in port or fired at the distance of 200 yards from the on land, where the surrender has been to a sea, and a man is by such shot killed in a naval force, or a mixed force of the army and navy, are equally and exclusively triable by the Prize Courts. See Douglas's Rep. 594.

> Although the Prize Court proceeds under a commission issuing at the commencement of a war, its jurisdiction is not peremptorily determined by peace. Where a vessel having been captured by an enemy's privateer in time of war, was recaptured after the period prescribed by a treaty of peace for the cessation of hostilities, and the commander of the privateer claimed the vessel to be restored to him by suit in the Prize Court, the jurisdiction of the court was affirmed, and a prohibition refused. Maddock's Rep. 15: Dodson's Rep. 2. 78: Case of the Harmony: see Bac. Ab. Court of Admiralty. Addenda E. vol. 2.855.

> It was held, Yelv. 134. that accessories to robbery, &c. could not be tried; but this is remedied by 11 and 12 W. 3. c. 7.; by which their aiders and comforters, and the receivers of their goods are made accessories, and to be tried as pirates by 28 H. 8. c. 15; also the said statute 11 and 12 W. 3. directs how pirates may be tried beyond sea, according to the civil law, by commission under the great seal of England. See tit. Piracy.

> Commissioners under 28 H. 8. c. 15. have jurisdiction of offences committed seven or eight miles from the river's mouth, or open sea, and sixteen miles below any bridge, and where men of war might ride at anchor; although such spot be within the body of a county, and where the common law tribunals have also a concurrent jurisdiction. G.C.B. 243. As to the boundary between the county and the high seas, see Bac. Ab. tit. Piracy. (Ed. by Gwillin and Dodd.)

> The stat. 10 A. c. 10. directs how the trial shall be had of officers and soldiers, that, either upon land out of Great Britain, or at sea, hold correspondence with a rebel enemy.

See tit. Piracy, Treason.

All ports and havens are infra corpus comitatus, and the admiral hath no jurisdiction of any thing done in them; but they are within the 28 H. 8. c. 15., and crimes committed in them may be tried by the commissioners under that act. See Rex v. Bruce, Russ. & Ry. c. 243: Bac. Ab. Piracy. (7th ed.) Between high and low water-mark, the common law and admiral have jurisdiction by turns; one upon the water, and the other upon the land. 3 Inst. 113. The admiralty have no jurisdiction where a vessel is injured in the Thames within the body of a county. 3 Term Rep. 315.

By the statutes for disciplining the navy, every commander, officer, and soldier of ships of war, shall observe the commands of the admiral, &c. on pain of death or other punishment. See tit. Navy.

Under these statutes the lord admiral hath power to grant commissions to inferior vice-| agreement at land be under seal, so as to be admirals, &c. to call courts martial, for the trial of offences against the articles of war; and these courts determine by plurality of voices, &c. See tit. Navy.

The admiralty is said not to be a court of record, by reason it proceeds by the civil law. 4 Inst. 135. But the admiralty has jurisdiction where the common law can give no remedy: and all maritime causes, or causes arising wholly upon the sea, it hath cognizance of. Vide as to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, 1 Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty: Bac. Ab. tit. Court of Admiralty. (7th ed.) admiralty hath jurisdiction in cases of freight, mariners' wages, breach of charter-parties, though made within the realm; if the penalty be not demanded; and likewise in case of building, mending, saving, and victualling ships, &c. so as the suit be against the ship, and not against the parties only. 2 Cro. 216: see Bac. Ab. Merchant (E.) of Mariners. (7th ed.) Mariners' wages are contracted on the credit of the ship, and they may all join in suits in the admiralty; whereas at common law they must all sever: the master of a ship contracts on the credit of the owners, and not of the ship; and therefore he cannot prosecute in the admiralty for his wages. 1 Salk. 33. It is allowed by the common lawyers and civilians, that the lord admiral hath cognizance of seamen's wages, and contracts, and debts for making ships; also of things done in navigable rivers, concerning damage done to persons, ships, goods, annoyances of free passage, &c.; and of contracts, and other things done beyond sea, relating to navigation and trade by sea. Wood's Inst. 218. But if a contract be made beyond sea, for doing of an act or payment of money within this kingdom; or the contract is upon the sea, and not for a marine cause, it shall be tried by a jury; for where part belongs to the common law, and part to the admiral, the common law shall be preferred. And contracts made beyond sea may be tried in B. R., and a fact be laid to be done in any place in England, and so tried here. 2 Bulstr. 322.

Where a contract is made in England, and there is a conversion beyond sea, the party may sue in the admiralty, or at common law, 4 Leon. 257. An obligation made at sea, it has been held, cannot be sued in the admiral's court, because it takes its course, and binds according to the common law. Hob. 12. The court of admiralty cannot hold plea of a matter arising from a contract made upon the land, though the contract was concerning things belonging to the ship: but the admiralty may hold plea for the seamen's wages, &c. because they become due for labour done on the sea; and the contract made upon land is only to ascertain them. 3 Lev. 60. Though where there is a special agreement in writing, by which seamen are to receive their wages in any other manner than usual; or if the 152: Denzen v. Jeffries: see as to hypotheca-more than a parol contract, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 31: see Hob. 79. In such cases the courts of common law will prohibit the admiralty from proceeding. Bac. Ab. Merchant

The case referred to from Hobart is that of Palmer v. Hope, but it does not seem to warrant the position. The libel in the admiralty court there stated an agreement, made super altum mare, that Pope should carry certain sugars, which agreement was afterwards put in writing in the port of Gado, on the coast of Barbary; a breach was then assigned. The court resolved "that a prohibition lay, because the original contract, though it was made at sea, yet was changed when it was put in writing sealed; which being at land, changed the jurisdiction: but if it had been a writing only, without seal, a mere memorandum of the agreement had made no change." By this is to be understood that the sealed contract destroyed the original parol contract, which a mere writing would not have done; and as that new contract was made on land, though out of the king's dominions, still it was not within the admiralty jurisdiction. It cannot, therefore, be inferred from this case, that the admiralty court cannot hold plea of any contract under seal. This rule, however, is positively laid down in other cases. Opy v. Addison, 12 Mod. 38: 1 Salk. 31: Day v. Searle, 2 Stra. 968: and lastly, in Howe v. Napier, 4 Burr. 1950. But on examination it may appear that the position is not warranted, "that the admiralty court has not jurisdiction" where the specialty contract is made on the sea, and to be performed on the sea, or when it relates to a subject matter over which the court has jurisdiction; and the case of Meristone v. Gibbons, 3 Term Rep. 267. entirely overruled former cases, and ascertained the principle to be, that whether the admiralty have or have not jurisdiction, depends on the subject matter. It was there determined that the admiralty court had jurisdiction respecting an hypothecation bond, though executed on land, and under seal, because it had jurisdiction over the subject matter of the hypothecation of ships: and it was expressly denied that the circumstance of the instrument being under seal could deprive them of their juris-

If the master pawns the ship on the high sea out of necessity for tackling or provision, without the consent of the owners, it shall bind them; but it is otherwise where the ship is pawned for the master's debt: the master can have no credit abroad, but upon the security of the vessel; and the admiralty gives remedy in these cases. 1 Salk. 35. The master hath a right to hypothecate the ship for any debt incurred on her account. Co. Lit. 134. 140. Though the agreement is made, and the money lent at land. 1 Lord Raym. tion, Abbott on Shipping, (5th ed.) p. 127: Bac. | the king's proctor may exhibit a libel in the Ab. Merchant (G.) of Hypothecation. (7th ed.) Sale of goods (taken by piracy) in open market is not binding by the admiralty law; the owner may therefore retake them; but at common law the sale is binding, of which the admiralty must take notice. 1 Roll. Ab .: 1 Vent. 308.

If a ship is taken by pirates upon the sea, and the master, to redeem the ship, contracts with the pirates to pay them 50l., and pawns his person for it, and the pirates carry him to the isle of S., and there he pays it with money borrowed, and gives bond for the money, he may sue in the admiralty for the 50l., because the original cause arose upon the sea, and what followed was but accessory and consequential. Hard. 183.

If goods delivered on ship-board are embezzled, all the mariners ought to contribute to the satisfaction of the party that lost his goods, by the maritime law, and the cause is to be tried in the admiralty. 1 Lill. 368. By the custom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third person, in causa maritima et civili, and they shall be delivered to the plaintiff, after defaults, on caution to restore them, if the debt &c. be disproved in a year and a day; and if the party refuse to deliver them, he may be imprisoned quousque, March Rep. 204.

The court of admiralty may cause a party to enter into bond in nature of caution or stipulation, like bail at common law; and if he render his body, the sureties are discharged; and execution shall be of the goods, or of the body, &c. not of the lands. Godb. 260: 1 Shep. Ab. 129: see 1 Salk. 33: T. Ray, 78: 2

Lord Ray, 1286: Fitz. 197.

This fidejussory caution is only an accumulative remedy, the better to enable the court of admiralty to preserve the property, but it does not supersede the jurisdiction in rem.

3 Term Rep. 323, 342, 346,

A person in execution, on judgment in the admiral's court, upon a contract made on the land in New England, was discharged, being out of the admiralty jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 603: 1 Cro. 685. And where sailors' clothes were bought in St. Katherine's parish, near the Tower, London, which were delivered in the ship; on a suit in the admiralty for the money, prohibition was granted, for this was within the county: so of a ship lying at Blackwall, &c. Owen, 122: Hughes's Ab. 113. But the admiralty may proceed against a ship, and the sails and tackle, when they are on shore, although alleged to be detained at land; yet, upon alleging offer of a plea, claiming property therein, and refusal of the plea, on this suggestion a prohibition shall be had. 1 Show. 179.

If an English ship takes a French ship, the French being in enmity with us, and such ship is libelled against, and after due notice on the exchange, &c., declared a lawful prize, admiralty court, to compel the taker (who converted the lading to his own use) to answer the value of the prize to the king; although it was objected, that by the first sentence, the property was vested in the king, and that this second libel was in nature of an action of trover, of which the court of admiralty cannot hold plea. Carth. 399 .- [This must be understood of a capture without the authority of letters of marque or reprisal.]

If the owner of a ship victuals it, and furnishes it to sea, with letters of reprisal, and the master and mariners, when they are at sea, commit piracy upon a friend of the king, without the notice or assent of the owner, yet by this the owner shall lose his ship by the admiralty law, and our law ought to take notice thereof. 1 Roll. Ab. 530: but see 1

Roll. Rep. 285.

By the civil law and custom of merchants, if the ship be cast away, or perish through the mariners' defaults, they lose their wages; so if taken by pirates, or if they run away; for if it were not for this policy, they would for-sake the ship in a storm, and yield her up to enemies in any danger. 1 Sid. 179: 1 Mod. 93: 1 Vent. 146. And as a seaman is bound to exert himself to the utmost for the ship, a promise made to him by the master, when the ship is in danger, to pay extra wages, is void. Peake's Ca. 72: 2 Camp. 317: 1 Camp. 527: and see Abbott on Shipping, 440.

The admiralty court may award execution upon land, though not hold plea of any thing arising on land. 4 Inst. 141. And upon letters missive or request, the admiralty here may award execution on a judgment given beyond sea, where an Englishman flies or comes over hither, by imprisonment of the party, who shall not be delivered by the common law. 1 Roll. Ab. 530. When sentence is given in a foreign admiralty, the party may libel for execution of that sentence here; because all courts of admiralty in Europe are governed by the civil law. Sid. 418. Sentences of any admiralty in another kingdom are to be credited, that ours may be credited there, and shall not be examined at law here; but the king may be petitioned, who may cause the complaint to be examined; and, if he finds just cause, may send to his ambassador where the sentence was given, to demand redress, and upon failure thereof, will grant letters of marque and reprisal. Raym. 473.

If one is sued in the admiralty, contrary to the statutes 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 5; and 15 R. 2. c. 3. he may have a supersedeas, to cause the judge to stay the proceedings, and also have action against the party suing. 10 Rep. 75. If it appear that the court of admiralty is proceeding in a question over which it has no jurisdiction, a court of common law will grant a prohibition without imposing any terms on the party applying for it. 3 Term. Rep. 315.

A ship being privately arrested by admiralty process only, and no suit, it was adjudged a prosecution within the meaning of the statutes; and double damages, &c. shall be recovered. 1 Salk. 31, 32.

By stat. 8 Eliz. c. 5. if an erroneous judgment is given in the admiralty, appeal may be had to delegates appointed by commission out of chancery, whose sentence shall be final. See 5 Inst. 339. But from the Prize Court (see post) appeal lies to commissioners consisting of the privy council. Doug. 614. Appeals may be brought from the interior admiralty courts to the lord high admiral: but the lord warden of the Cinque Ports hath jurisdiction of admiralty exempt from the admiralty of England. A writ of error doth not lie upon a sentence in the admiralty, but an appeal. 4 Inst. 135. 339. There are also vice-admiralty courts in the king's foreign dominions, from which (except in case of prizes) appeals may be brought before the courts of admiralty in England as well as to the king in council. 3 Comm. 69.

The admiral, of right, had anciently a tenth part of all prize goods, but which is taken away by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 4; which vests the property of all ships taken and condemned as prize in the admiralty courts, in the admirals, captains, sailors, &c. being the captors, according to the proportions to be settled by the king's proclamation. This statute also enables the admiralty to grant letters of marque. (See tit. Privateers.) For the mode of proceeding in condemning prizes, see Doug. 614: and 4 Term Rep. 382: 2 H. B. 533: 6 Parl. Ca. 203. as to the commissioners of appeal.

Prize acts are usually passed at the commencement of every war, the provisions in which vary from time to time. The last act was 55 G. 3. c. 160.

By the stat. 22 G. 2. c. 3. his majesty's commission to all the privy counsellors then and for the time being, and to the lord chief baron of the court of Exchequer, the justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, and barons of the said court of Exchequer, then and for the time being, for hearing, and determining appeals from sentences in causes of prizes pronounced in the courts of admiralty, in any of his majesty's dominions, declared valid, although such chief baron, justices, and barons are not of the privy council. But no sentence shall be valid, unless the major part of the commissioners present be of the privy council. See Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty; and this Dict. tit. Navy.

By stat. 39 G. 3. c. 37. all offences whatever committed on the high seas shall be liable to the same punishment as if committed on shore, and shall be tried and adjudged in the same manner as felonies, &c. are directed by the 28 H. 8. c. 15. See Bac. Ab. tit. Piracy.

Persons tried for murder or manslaughter, and found guilty of manslaughter only, shall be entitled to the benefit of clergy, and be subject to the same punishment as if committed on land: § 2.

39 and 40 G. 3. c. 80. § 35. offences committed upon the high seas may be prosecuted within the nearest county.

The admiralty have no jurisdiction to try offenders on the stat. 11 G. 1. c. 29. for procuring the destruction of a ship, if there is no evidence of such destruction having been procured by the owners of such ship upon the high seas within the admiralty jurisdiction, but only on shore within the body of a county. Easterby and Macfarlane, East's Pleas of the Crown (Addenda), p. xxx.: Abbot on Merchant Ship, 153. n. 1.

By stat. 1 G. 4. c. 90. persons convicted of any capital offence on the sea, out of the body of any county, by virtue of 28 H. 8. c. 159. which, if committed on the land, would be clergyable, shall receive the benefit of clergy, and be punishable as if such offence had been committed on the land. See post, 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 12. and § 11. of the last mentioned stat, empowering the transportation for life, &c. of offenders having been previously convicted of felony. By stat. 7 G. 4. c. 38. an admiralty commissioner or justice of the peace is empowered to take the information of witnesses relating to offences committed on the seas within the admiralty jurisdiction, and to commit or bail the offender.

By stat. 7 G. 4. c. 64. § 27. the court of admiralty is empowered to order the payment of the costs and expences of prosecutors in cases of felony and misdemeanors committed on the high seas.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 77. it is enacted, "That where any felony or misdemeanor punishable under this act shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England, the same shall be dealt with, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other felony or misdemeanour committed within that jurisdiction.

This section is enacted in the same words in § 43. of stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. as to what are offences within that act.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 12. it is enacted, "That all offences prosecuted in the high court of admiralty of England shall, upon every first and subsequent conviction, be subject to the same punishments, whether of death or otherwise, as if such offences had been committed upon land." (And as to Ireland, see 9 G. 4. c. 55. § 74; c. 56. § 55: 10 G. 4. c. 34. § 41.)

By 53 G. 3. c. 151. forging, &c. the name of the registrar of the high court of admiralty or high court of appeals for prizes, or his deputy, or any documents made by them, in order to receive the money of the suitors of such courts, or knowingly uttering the same, are guilty of felony.

The powers of the High Court of Delegates in maritime cases have been transferred to his Majesty in council. See Privy Council.

ADMISSION, admissio.] Is properly the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the parson presented to serve the cure of any a church has presented to it, the bishop upon examination admits the clerk by saving admitto te habilem. Co. Lit. 344. a. Action on the case will not lie against the bishop, if he refuse to admit a clerk to be qualified according to the canons (as for any crime or impediment, illiterature, &c.); but the remedy is by writ quære non admissit, or admittendo clerico, brought in that county where the refusal was. 7 Rep. 3. As to the causes of refusal by the ordinary to admit to a benefice, see tit. Parson, Quare Impedit.

ADMITTANCE. See Copyhold.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO. Upon the right of presentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, or on assise of darrein presentment, the execution is by this writ; directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop, or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. 3 Comm. 402: Reg. Orig. 31. 33. See tit.

Parson and Quare Impedit.

If a person recovers an advowson, and six months pass; yet, if the church be void, the patron may have a writ to the bishop; and if the church is void when the writ comes to the bishop, the bishop is bound to admit his clerk. Vide Hut. 24: Hob. 152. 4: 2 Inst. 273: 3 Com. Dig. Where a man recovers against another than the bishop, this writ shall go to the bishop, and the party may have an alias and a pluries, if the bishop do not execute the writ, and an attachment against the bishop, if need be. New Nat. Br. 84. In a quare impedit betwixt two strangers, if there appears to the court a title for the king, they shall award a writ unto the bishop for the king.

AD QUOD DAMNUM. A writ to inquire whether a grant intended to be made by the king will be to the damage of him or others; F. N. B. 221, 2; and it ought to be issued before the king grants certain liberties; as a fair, market, &c. which may be prejudicial to others; it is directed to the sheriff.

Terms de Ley, 25.

Stat. 27 Ed. 1. st. 2. § 1. ordains that such as would purchase new parks shall have writs out of chancery to inquire concerning the same. In like manner they shall do, that will purchase any fair, market, warren, or other liberty. § 4.

This writ is likewise used to inquire of lands given in mortmain to any house of re-church. Co. Lit. 344. a. When a patron of ligion, &c. And it is a damage to the country, that a freeholder who hath sufficient lands to pass upon assizes and jury, should alien his lands in mortmain, by which alienation his heir should not have sufficient estate after the death of the father to be sworn in assizes and juries. F. N. B. 221.

The writ of ad quod damnum is also had for the turning and changing of ancient highways; which could not be done without the king's licence obtained by this writ, on inquisition found that such a change will not be detrimental to the public. Terms de Ley, 26: Vaugh. Rep. 314. Although now a highway may, by the statute law, be diverted by order of two magistrates. Ways turned without the authority of this writ are not esteemed highways, so as to oblige the inhabitants of the hundred to make amends for robberies; nor have the subjects an interest therein to justify going there. 3 Cro. 267. If any one change an highway without this authority, he may stop the way at his pleasure. See tit. Highway.

The river Thames is an highway, and cannot be diverted without an ad quod damnum; and to do such a thing ought to be by patent of the king. Noy, 105.

If there be an ancient trench or ditch coming from the sea, by which boats and vessels used to pass to the town, if the same be stopped in any part by outrageousness of the sea, and a man will sue the king to make a new trench, and to stop the ancient trench, &c. they ought first to sue a writ of ad quod damnum, to inquire what damage it will be to the king or others. F. N. B. 225. (E.)

And if the king will grant to any city the assize of bread and beer, and the keeping of weights and measures, an ad quod damnum shall be first awarded, and when the same is certified, &c. then to make the grant.

It appears by the writs in the register, that in ancient times, upon every grant, confirmation, &c. or licence made by the king, a writ ad quod damnum was to be first awarded, to inquire of the truth thereof, and what damage the king might have by the same; but now the practice is contrary, and in the patents of common grants of licence, a dispensation by non obstante is inserted. Though it be returned on an ad quod damnum, that there is no damage to the public, this is not conclusive that the act done may not be an indictable nuisance. See Rex v. Russell, 6 Barn. & C.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. A writ of entry that lay for the lessor or his heirs where a lease has been made of lands or tenements, for the term of life or years; and after the term is expired, the lands are withheld from the lessor by the tenant, or other person possessing the same. F. N. B.

Now by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. tenants wilfully holding over, after demand and notice in ing or causing to be advertised any public writing for delivering possession, shall pay entertainment or meeting for debating on the double the yearly value. See tit. Ejectment.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRÆTERIT. Abolished. See Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

ADVENT, adventus.] A time containing about a month preceding the feast of the nativity (the advent or arrival) of our Saviour. It begins from the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or next to it, and continues to the feast of Christ's nativity, commonly called Christmas. Our ancestors showed great reverence and devotion to this time, in regard to the approach of the solemn festival; for in adventu domini nulla assisa debet capi. But the stat. West. 1. (3 E. 1.) c. 51. ordained that, notwithstanding the usual solemnity and times of rest, it should be lawful (in respect of justice and charity, which ought at all times to be regarded) to take assizes of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, &c. in the time of Advent, Septuagesima, and Lent. This is also one of the seasons, from the beginning of which to the end of the octave of the Epiphany, the solemnizing of marriages is forbidden, without special licence, as we may find from these ADULTERY, adulterium, quasi ad alterius thorum; Anno 1 H. 7. c. 7. and in divers old authors termed advowtry.] The sin of incontinence between two married persons; or if but one of the persons be married, it is nevertheless adultery: but in this last case it is called single adultery, to distinguish it from the other, which is double. This crime was severely punished by the laws of God, and the ancient laws of the land (see the laws of King Edmund, c. 4: laws of Canute, par. 2. c. 6. 50: Leg. H. 1. c. 12.); the Julian law, among the old Romans, made it death; but in most countries at this time the punishment is by fine, and sometimes banishment; in England it is punished ecclesiastically by penance, &c. It is a breach of the peace, and as such anciently indictable, but not now. Salk. 552. The usual mode of punishing adulterers at present is by action of crim. con. (as it is commonly expressed) to recover damages; which are assessed by the jury, in proportion to the heinousness of the crime, and are frequently very heavy and severe, when this action is maintainable, finding a separation. See 5 T. R. 357: 6 E. R. 244.

If the husband be privy to the illicit intercourse, he cannot sue the adulterer. 2 T. R. 166. Gross and open infidelity on the part of the husband, was held by Lord Kenyon a bar to the action. 4 Ep. Ca. 16. But Lord Alvanley subsequently held that it only went to reduce the damages. 4 Ep. Ca. 237. The defendant may show that the woman made the first advances, in order to reduce the damages; 1 Sel. N. P. 25; or that she has committed adultery with others. B. N. P. 296. coe on Evid. 358. (2d. cd.)

As to the dissolving marriages for adultery, by acts of parliament passed for that purpose; and the question how far the guilty party should be permitted to marry again, and particularly with the partaker of the crime, see a very curious tract, first published in 1801, and afterwards in 1821 and 1830, entitled, Nuptice Sacræ; or an Inquiry into the Scriptural Doctrine of Marriage and Divorce, by Doctor Ireland, Dean of Westminster."

ADVOCATE. The patron of a cause assisting his client with advice, and who pleads for him: it is the same in the civil and ecclesiastical law as a counsellor at the common law. The ecclesiastical, or church advocate, was originally of two sorts; either an advocate of the causes and interest of the church, retained, as a counsellor and pleader of its rights; or an advocate, advocatus, an advowee or avowee. Blount: Fleta, lib. 5. c. 14: Britt. c. 29. Both these offices at first belonged to the founders of churches and convents, and their heirs, who were bound to protect and defend their churches, as well as to nominate or present to them. But when the patrons grew negligent in their duty, or were not of ability or interest in the courts of justice, then the religious began to retain law advocates, to solicit and prosecute their causes. Vide Spelman; and this Dict. tit. Barrister.

ADVOCATIONE DECIMARUM. writ that lies for tithes, demanding the fourth part, or upwards, that belong to any church.

Reg. Orig. 29.

ADVOW, or Avow, advocare.] To justify or maintain an act formerly done; see Avowry; it also signifies to call upon or produce; anciently, when stolen goods were bought by one, and sold to another, it was lawful for the right owner to take them wherever they were found, and he in whose possession they were found, was bound advocare, i. e. to produce the seller to justify the sale; and so on till they found the thief. Afterwards the word was taken for any thing which a man ac-knowledged to be his own, or done by him, and in this sense it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 5. p. 4.

ADVOWSON, Advocatio.] The right of presentation to a church or benefice: and he who hath this right to present, is styled patron: because they that originally obtained the right of presentation to any church, were maintainers of, or benefactors to, the same church: it being presumed that he who founded the church will avow and take it into his protection, and be a patron to defend it in its just rights. When the Christian religion was first established in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make bishops: and afterwards, in imitation of them, several lords of manors founded particular churches on some part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe; reserving to them-

Before the stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. which selves and their heirs, a right to present a fit person to the bishop, when the same should become void. See 2 Comm. 21-3: and tit.

Under this head shall be considered,

I. The several kinds of advowson. II. How advowsons may lapse.

III. How they may be gained by usurpa-

IV. Of the right of presentation.

For the law relating to appropriation and impropriations of benefices, see tit. Appropri-

I. Advowsons are of two kinds; appendant, and in gross: Appendant, is a right of presentation dependant upon a manor, lands, &c. and passes in a grant of the manor as incident to the same; and when manors were first created, and lands set apart to build a church on some part thereof, the advowson or right to present to that church became appendant to the manor. Advowson in gross, is a right subsisting by itself, belonging to a person, and not to a manor, lands, &c. So that when an advowson appendant is severed by deed or grant from the corporeal inheritance to which it was appendant, then it becomes an advowson in gross. Co. Lit. 121, 122.

If he that is seised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, grants one or two acres of the manor together with the advowson, the advowson is appendant to such acre; especially after the grantee hath presented.

Watson's Complete Incumbent, c. 7.

But this feoffment of the acre with the advowson ought to be by deed, to make the advowson appendant; and the acre of land and the advowson ought to be granted by the same clause in the deed; for if one, having a manor with an advowson appendant, grant an acre parcel of the said manor, and by another clause in the same deed grant the advowson; the advowson in such case shall not pass as appendant to the acre; but if the grant had been of the entire manor, the advowson would have passed as appendant. So if a husband, seised in right of his wife of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, doth alien the manor by acres to divers persons, saving one acre, the advowson shall be appendant to that acre. Or if a lessee for life of a manor to which an advowson belongs, alien one acre, with the advowson appendant, the advowson is thereby appendant to that acre. Wats. c. 7.

The right of advowson, though appendant to a manor, castle, or the like, may be severed from it in other ways, and being severed, becomes an advowson in gross; and this may be effected divers ways: as, 1. If a manor or other thing to which it is appendant is granted, and the advowson excepted. 2. If the advowson is granted alone, without the thing to which it was appendant. 3. If an advowson appendant is presented to by the patron, as an advowson in gross. Gibs. 757.

A disappendancy may also be temporary; | cause such grants might (indeed inevitably that is, the appendancy, though turned into gross, may return: as, 1. If the advowson is excepted in a lease of a manor for life; during the lease it is in gross, but when the lease expires it is appendant again. 2. If the advowson is granted for life, and another enfeoffed of the manor with the appurtenances; in such case, at the expiration of the grant, it shall be appendant; and so in other cases.

But with respect to the king, by the statute of prærogativa regis, 17 E. 2. c. 15. the king giveth or granteth land, or a manor, with appurtenances; without he make express mention in his deed or writing, of advowson, the king reserveth to himself such advowsons, albeit that among other persons it hath been observed otherwise.

Yet when he restoreth, as in case of the restitution of a bishop's temporalities; then advowsons pass without express mention, or any words equivalent thereto. 10 Co. 64.

The law, in the case of a common person. is thus set down by Rolle, out of the ancient books: if a man, seised of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, aliens that manor, without saying with the appurtenances (and even without naming the advowson), yet the advowson shall pass, for it is parcel of the manor. 2 Roll. Ab. 60.

An advowson being an inheritance incorporeal, and not lying in manual occupation, cannot pass by livery; but may be granted by deed, or by will, either for the inheritance, or for the right of one or more turns, for as many as shall happen within a time limited.

But this general rule, with regard to advowsons in gross, next avoidances, and the like, is to be understood with two limitations.

First, That it extends not to ecclesiastical persons of any kind or degree, who are seised of advowsons in the right of their churches; nor to masters and fellows of colleges, nor to guardians of hospitals, who are seised in right of their houses; all these being restrained (the bishops by the 1 Eliz. c. 19. and the rest by the 13 Eliz. c. 10.) from making any grants but of things corporeal, of which a rent or annual profit may be reserved: and advowsons and next avoidances, which are incorporeal and lie in grant, cannot be of that sort; and therefore such grants, however confirmed, are void against the successor; though they have been adjudged to be good against the grantors (as bishop, dean, master, or guardian) during their own times. See 45 G. 3. c. 101.

Secondly, A grant of the next avoidance may be assigned before the avoidance happens. 2 Roll. Ab. 45. &c. But an avoidance cannot be granted by a common person after it is fallen: while the church is absolutely void. Mo. 89: Dy. 129. b. 26. a. 283. a.: and see 2 Wils. 197; and a grant of the advowson made after the church is actually fallen vacant is equally void; not as is said in the old books, because it is a chose in action, but be- must be under seal. The presentation to a would) encourage simony. 2 Burr. 1510, 11. See tit. Simony; and see Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Advowson.

If two have a grant of the next avoidance, and one releaseth all right and title to the other while the church is void: such release is void. But the king's grant of a void turn hath been adjudged to be good. 3 Leon. 196:

Dy. 283. a: Hob. 141.

If one be seised of an advowson in fce, and the church doth become void, the void turn is a chattel; and if the patron dieth before he doth present, the avoidance doth not go to his heir, but to his executor. Wats. c. 9. When a prebendary having the advowson of a rectory in right of his prebend, dies while the church is vacant, his personal representative has the right of presentation for that term, and not his successor. Rennell v. Bishop of Lincoln, 7 Barn. & C. 113.

But if the incumbent of a church be also seised in fee of the advowson of the same church and die, his heir, and not his executors, shall present; for although the advowson doth not descend to the heir at the death of the ancestor, and by his death the church become void, so that the avoidance may be said in this case to be severed from the advowson before it descend to the heir, and vested in the executor; yet both the avoidance and descent to the heir happening at the same instant, the title of the heir shall be preferred as the more ancient and worthy. Wats. c. 9. fo. 72: sec Watkins on Descents, p. 62: 3 Lev. 47.

Tenant by the curtesy may be of an advowson, when the wife dies before avoidance. 1 Inst. 29. a.

By last will and testament, the right of presenting to the next avoidance, or the inheritance of an advowson, may be devised to any person; and if such devise be made by the incumbent of the church, the inheritance of the advowson being in him, it is good, though he die incumbent; for although the testament hath no effect but by the death of the testator, yet it hath an inception in his lifetime. And so it is, though he appoint by his will who shall be presented by the executors, or that one executor shall present the other; or doth devise that his executors shall grant the advowson to such a man.

Advowsons are either presentative, collative, or donative.

An advowson presentative is, where the patron does present or offer his clerk to his bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in his

This may be done either by word or writing. The king may present by word, or in writing under any seal; who, otherwise, cannot do any legal act, but by matter of record, or by letters patent under the great seal. But where a coporation aggregate doth present, it parson. If a feme coveret hath title to present, the presentation may be by husband and wife, and in both their names, except in case of the Wood's Inst. 155. &c. queen consort.

An advowson collative is that advowson which is lodged in the bishop; for collation is the giving of a benefice by a bishop, when he is the original patron thereof, or he gains a

Collation differs from institution in this; that institution is performed by the bishop upon the presentation of another, and collation is his own act of presentation, and it differeth from a common presentation, as it is the giving of the church to the parson; and presentation is the giving or offering the parson to the church. But collation supplies the place of presentation and institution; and amounts to the same as institution, where the bishop is both patron and ordinary. 1 Lil. Ab. 273.

A bishop may either neglect to collate, or he may make his collation without title; but such a wrongful collation doth not put the true patron out of possession; for after the collatee of the bishop is instituted and inducted, the patron may present his clerk; collation in this case being to be intended only as a provisional incumbency to serve the church. 1 Inst. 344.

Where a bishop gives a benefice as patron, he collates by writ jure pleno; when by lapse, jure devoluto. The collation by lapse is in the right of the patron. F. N. B. 31. See post, Lapse, II.

An advowson donative is, when the king or other patron (in whom the advowson of the church is lodged) does, by a single donation in writing, put the clerk into possession without presentation, institution, or induction.-Donatives are either of churches parochial, chapels, prebends, &c. and may be exempt from all ordinary jurisdictions, so that the ordinary cannot visit them, and consequently cannot demand procurations. If the true patron of a church or chapel donative doth once present to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and instituted, it becomes a church presentative, and shall never have the privilege of a donative afterwards. Yet if a stranger presents to such a donative, an institution is given, all is void. 1 Inst. 158: see contra, 1 Salk. 541: 2 Con. 23.

The right of donation descends to the heir (the ancestor dying seised, where the church became void in his lifetime) and not to the executor; which it would had it been a presentative benefice. 2 Wilson, 150, 1.

There is not any case in the books to exclude the heir of a donative from his turn in this case. And a patron of a donative can never be put out of possession by an usurpa-Id. Ibid.

II. A Lapse is a title given to the ordinary, to collate to a church by the neglect of the patron to present to it within six months after vicarage doth of common right belong to the of presenting from the patron to the bishop; from the bishop to the archbishop; from the archbishop to the king. The term in which the title by lapse commences, from one to the other successively, is six months, or half a year, according to the calendar, not accounting twenty-eight days to the month, as in other cases, because this computation is by the ecclesiastical law; and because tempus semestre, in the stat. of West. 2. chap. 5. is intended of half a year, the whole year containing 365 days; which being divided, the half year for the patron to present is 182 days. The for the patron to present is 182 days. day in which the church becomes void is not to be reckoned as part of the six months. Wood's Inst. 160: Hob. 30: 4 Rep. 17:6

> Where a patron presents his clerk before the bishop hath collated, the presentation is good notwithstanding the six months are past, and shall bar the bishop, who cannot take any advantage of the lapse: and so if the patron makes his presentation before the archbishop hath collated, although twelve months are past; but if the bishop collates after twelve months, this bars not the archbishop. 2 Roll. Ab. 369: 2 Inst. 273. If a bishop doth not collate to benefices of his own gift, they lapse at the end of six months to the archbishop; and if the archbishop neglects to collate within six months to a benefice of his gift, the king shall have it by lapse. Dr. & Stud. c. 36. And if a church continues void several years by lapse, the successor of the king may present. Cro. Car. 258. But if the king hath a title to present by lapse, and he suffers the patron to present, and the presentee dies, or resigns before the king hath presented, if the presentation is real, and not by covin, he hath lost his presentation; for lapse is but for the first and next turn, and by the death of the incumbent a new title is given to the patron; though it hath been adjudged that the king in such case may present at any time as long as that presentee is incumbent. 2 Cro. 216: Moor, 244. When the patronage of the church is litigious, and one party doth recover against the other in a quare impedit, if the bishop be not named in the writ, and six months pass while the suit is depending, lapse shall incur to the bishop; if the bishop be named in the writ, then neither the bishop, archbishop, or king, can take the benefice by lapse: and yet it is said, if the patron, within the six months, brings a quare impedit against the bishop, and then the six months pass without any presentation by the patron, lapse shall incur to the bishop. 2 Roll. Ab. 365: 6 Rep. 52: 1 Inst. 344: Hob. 270.

Where the bishop is a disturber, or the church remains void above six months by his fault there shall be no lapse. 1 Inst. 344. A clerk presented being refused by the bishop for any sufficient cause, as illiterature, ill life, &c. he is to give the patron notice of it, that another voidance. Or a lapse is a devolution of a right | may be presented in due time; otherwise the bishop shall not collate by lapse; because he shall not take advantage of his own wrong, in not giving notice to the patron as he ought to do by law. Dyer, 292. And if an avoidance is by resignation, which must necessarily be to the bishop, by the act of the incumbent, or by deprivation, which is the act of the law, lapse shall not incur to the bishop till six months after notice given by him to the patron: when the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent, &c. the patron must present in six months, without notice from the bishop, or shall lose his presentation by lapse. Dyer, 293, 327: 1 Inst. 135: 4 Rep. 75. And it is expressly provided, by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12. that no title conferred by lapse shall accrue upon any deprivation ipso facto, but after six months' notice of such deprivation given by the ordinary to the patron.

In the cases of deprivation and resignation, where the patron is to have notice before the church can lapse, the patron is not bound to take notice from any body but the bishop himself, or other ordinary, which must be personally given to the party, if he live in the same county; and such notice must express in certain the cause of deprivation, &c. If the patron live in a foreign country, then the notice may be published in the parish church, and affixed on the church door. Cro. Eliz. 119: Dyer, 328. And this notice must be given, even though the patron himself prosecute the incumbent to deprivation. 6 Rep. 29.

There are avoidances by act of parliament, wherein there must be a judicial sentence pronounced to make the living void: if a man hath one benefice with cure, &c. and take another with cure, without any dispensation to hold two benefices, in such case the first is void by the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13. if it was above the value of 8l. During an avoidance, it is said that the house and glebe of the benefice are in abeyance: but by the stat. 28 H. S. c. 11. the profits arising during the avoidance are given to the next incumbent towards payment of the first fruits; though the ordinary may receive the profits to provide for the service of the church, and shall be allowed the charges of supplying the cure, &c., for which purpose the church-wardens of the parish are usually appointed.

If a clerk is instituted to a benefice of the yearly value of 8l. and, before induction, accepts another benefice with cure, and is instituted, the first benefice is void by the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13: for he who is instituted only, is properly said to have accepted a benefice within the words of the act. 4 Rep. 78. See title Cession.

But if he is inducted into a second benefice, the first is void in facto et jure, and not voidable only, quoad, the patron, and until he presents another; and in such case the patron ought to take notice of the avoidance at his peril, and present within the six months. Cro. Car. 258,

In cases where there ought to be notice, if none is given by the bishop or archbishop in a year and a half, whereby lapse would come to the king if it had been given; here the lapse arises not to the king, where no title arose to the inferior ordinary. Dyer, 340. And it has been adjudged, that lapse is not an interest, like the patronage, but an office of trust reposed by law in the ordinary; and the end of it is, to provide the church a rector, in default of the patron; and it cannot be granted over; for the grant of the next lapse of a church, either before it falls, or after, is void. F. N. B. 34. Also if lapse incurs, and then the ordinary dies, the king shall present, and not the ordinary's executors, because it is rather an administration than an interest. 25 E. 3. 4. A lapse may incur against an infant or feme covert, if they do not present within six months. 1 Inst. 246. But there is no lapse against the king, who may take his own time; and plenarty shall be no bar against the king's title, because nullum tempus occurrit regi. 2 Inst. 273: Dyer, 351. By presentation and institution a lapse is prevented; though the clerk is never inducted: and a donative cannot lapse either to the ordinary or the king. 2 Inst. 273: see 2 Comm. 276, and 4 Comm.

III. The usurpation of a church benefice is when one that hath no right presents to the church; and his clerk is admitted and instituted into it, and hath quiet possession six months after institution before a quare impedit brought. It must commence upon a presentation, not a collation, because by collation the church is not full; but the right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the usurper. 1 Inst. 227: 6 Rep. 30.

No one can usurp upon the king; but an usurpation may dispossess him of his presentation, so as he shall be obliged to bring a quare impedit. 3 Salk. 389. One copareener or joint-tenant cannot usurp upon the other; but where there are two patrons of churches unit-ed, if one presents in the other's turn, it is an usurpation. Dyer, 259. A presentation which is void in law, as in case of simony, or to a church that is full, makes no usurpation. 2 Rep. 93.

In this case of usurpation the patron lost, by the common law, not only his turn of presentment, but also the perpetual inheritance of the advowson; so that he could not present again upon the next avoidance, unless, in the mean time, he recovered his right by a real action, viz. a writ of right of advowson. 3 Comm. 243. See farther, tit. Darrein Presentment, Quare Impedit.

The writ of advowson and an assize of darrein presentment have been abolished, and advowsons are within the recent statute of limitation. See Limitation of Actions, II. 1; also Quare Impedit.

But bishops in ancient times, either by carelessness or collusion, frequently instituting thereby defrauding the real patrons of their right of possession; it was in substance enacted by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 5. § 2, "that if a possessory action be brought within six months after the avoidance, the patron shall (notwithstanding such usurpation and institution) recover that very presentation;" which gives back to him the seisin of the advowson. Yet still, if the true patron omitted to bring his action within six months, the seisin was gained by the usurper, and the patron, to recover it, was driven to the long and hazardous process of a writ of right; to remedy which it was farther enacted by stat. 7 A. c. 18. "that no usurpation shall displace the estate or interest of the patron, or turn it to a mere right; but that the true patron may present upon the next avoidance, as if no such usurpation had happened." So that the title of usurpation is now much narrowed, and the law stands upon this reasonable foundation: that if a stranger usurps my presentation, and I do not pursue my right within six months, I shall lose that turn without remedy, for the peace of the church, and as a punishment for my own negligence; but that turn is the only one I shall lose thereby. Usurpation now gains no right to the usurper, with regard to any future avoidance, but only to the present vacancy; it cannot indeed be remedied after six months are past; but during those six months it is only a species of disturbance. 3 Comm. 244.

IV. Advowsons were formerly most of them appendant to manors, and the patrons parochial barons; the lordship of the manor, and patronage of the church, were seldom in different hands till advowsons were given to religious houses; but of late times the lordship of the manor and the advowson of the church have been divided; and now not only lords of manors, but mean persons, have, by purchase, the dignity of patrons of churches, to the great prejudice thereof. By the common law the right of patronage is the real right fixed in the patrons or founders, and their heirs, wherein they have as absolute a property as any other man hath in his lands and tenements: for advowsons are a temporal inheritance and lay fee; they may be granted by deed or will, and are assets in the hands of heirs or executors: Co. Lit. 119. A recovery may be suffered of an advowson; a wife may be endowed of it; a husband tenant by the curtesy; and it may be forfeited by treason or felony. 1 Rep. 56: 10 Rep. 55. If an advowson descends to coparceners, and the church after the death of their ancestors becomes void (by stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) st. 1. c. 5.) the eldest sister shall first present. And when coparceners, joint-tenants, &c. are seised of an advowson and partition is made, to present by turns; by stat. 7 A. c. 18. each shall be seised of their separate estate.

Presentation is properly the act of a patron offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, clerks upon the presentation of usurpers, and to be instituted in a church or benefice of his thereby defrauding the real patrons of their wift, which is void. 2 Lil. Ab. 351.

An alien born cannot present to a benefice in his own right; for if he purchases an advowson, and the church becomes void, the king shall present after office found that the patron is an alien. 2 Nels. 1290. And by stat. 7 R. 2. c. 12. no alien shall purchase a benefice in this realm, nor occupy the same, without the king's licence, on pain of a premunire.

Papists are disabled to present to benefices, and the universities are to present, &c. But a popish recusant may grant away his patronage to another, who may make presentation, where there is no fraud. See stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. § 18, 19: 1 W. & M. c. 26: 12 A. c. 14: and 1 Jon. 19. But by stat. 11 G. 2. c. 17. § 5, grants of advowsons by papists are void, unless made for a valuable consideration to a protestant purchaser, and only for the benefit of protestants; and devises of advowsons by papists are also void. And see the Catholic Relief Act, 10 G. 4. c. 7. which leaves these provisions in force.

A guardian by socage or by nurture cannot present to a vacant living in right of the infant heir, or in his name, because he can make no benefit of it, or account for it, though it is sometimes practised, and made good by time. Therefore the infant shall present, of whatsoever age. Vide Co. Lit. 17. b. If a common patron presents first one clerk, and then another, the bishop may institute which he pleases; unless he revokes the presentation of one of them before he is admitted by the bishop. If there is a right of nomination in one, and a right of presentation in another, to the same benefice; he that has the right of nomination is the true patron, and the other is obliged to present the clerk which is nominated. 1 Inst. 156.

All persons who have ability to purchase or grant, have likewise ability to present to vacant benefices; but a dean and chapter cannot present the dean; nor may a clergyman who is patron present himself, though he may pray to be admitted by the ordinary, and the admission shall be good. It seems a prebendary, having the advowson of a living annexed to his prebend, may present himself. 7Barn. & C.303.

Coparceners are but as one patron, and ought to agree in the presentation of one person; if they cannot agree, the eldest shall present first alone, and the bishop is obliged to admit his clerk, and afterwards the others in their order shall prefer their clerks; jointtenants and tenants in common, must regularly join in presentation, and if either present alone, the bishop may refuse his clerk; as he may also the clerk presented by the major part of them; but if there are two joint-tenants of the next avoidance, one may present the other, and two joint-tenants may present a third, but not a stranger.

If a rector is made bishop, the king shall present to the rectory unless he grant to the and he hath a right to present on an avoidbishop, before he is consecrated, a dispensation to hold it with his bishoprick; but if an incumbent of a church is made a bishop, and the king presents or grants that he should hold the church in commendam, which is quasi a presentation, a grantee of the next avoidance or presentation hath lost it, the king having the next presentation. See 2 Stra. 841. that this presentation is not confined to the lifetime of the bishop promoted. If the king present to a church by lapse, where he ought to present pleno jure, and as patron of the church, such a presentation is not good; for the king is deceived in his grant, by mistaking his title, which may be prejudicial to him; the presenting by lapse entitling only that presentation: the lord chancellor presents to the king's benefices under 201. &c. 2 Roll. Ab. 354: 3 Inst. 156: Co. Lit. 186: 2 Nels. Ab. 1288. 1290: 2 Lil. 351.

The king may repeal a presentation before his clerk is inducted; and this he may do by granting the presentation to another, which, without any farther signification of his mind, is a revocation of the first presentation.

Dyer, 290. 360.

If two patrons present their clerks to a church, the bishop is to determine who shall be admitted by a jus patronatus, &c. Moor,

A clerk may be refused by the bishop, if the patron is excommunicate, and remains in contempt 40 days. 2 Ro. Ab. 355. As to refusal for the insufficiency of the clerk presented, see tit. Parson.

If the bishop refuses to admit the clerk presented, he must give notice of his refusal, with the cause of it, forthwith; and on such notice the patron must present another clerk, within six months from the avoidance, if he thinks the objection against his first clerk contains sufficient cause of refusal; but if not, he may bring his quare impedit against the bishop. 2 Rol. Ab. 364. See ante, Lapse II.

If a defendant, or any stranger, presents a clerk pending a quare impedit, and afterwards the plaintiff obtains judgment, he cannot by virtue of that judgment, remove him who was thus presented; but he is to bring a scire facias against him to show cause quare executionem non habet; and then, if it be found that he had no title, he shall be amoved. The way to prevent such a presentation, is to take out a ne admittas to the bishop; and then the writ quare incumbravit lies, by virtue whereof the incumbent shall be amoved, and put to his quare impedit, let his title be what it will; but if a ne admittas be not taken out, and another incumbent should come in by good title, pendente lite, he shall hold it. Sid. 93: Cro. Jac. 93.

When a bishop hath a presentation in right of his bishoprick, and dies, neither his executor may present, but then he must enter for tor, nor heir, shall have the void turn, but the forfeiture of the grantee, in the life time ance after the seizure, on death of the bishop.

Tenant in tail of an advowson, and his son and heir joined in the grant of the next presentation, tenant in tail died; this grant was held void as to the son and heir, because he had nothing in the advowson at the time he joined with his father in the grant. Hob. 45.

If a presentation itself bears date while the church is full, of another clerk, it is void; and where two or more have a title to present by turn, one of them presents, his clerk is admitted, instituted, and inducted, and afterwards deprived, he shall not present again, but that presentation shall serve his turn: though where the admission and institution of his clerk is void, there the turn shall not be served; as if, after induction, he neglects to read the thirty-nine articles, &c. his institution is void by the stat. 13 Eliz.; and the patron may present again. F. N. B. 33: 5

The right of presenting to a church may pass from one seised of the same by the patron's acknowledging of a statute, &c. which being extended, if the church becomes void, during the conusee's estate, the conusee may present. Owen, 49.

Where a common person is patron, he may present by parol, as well as by writing, to the bishop. Co. Lit. 120. A presentation doth not carry with it the formality of a deed; but it is in the nature of a letter missive by which the clerk is offered to the bishop; and it passeth no interest, as a grant doth, being no more than a recommendation of a clerk to the ordinary to be admitted. But where a plaintiff declared upon a grant of the next presentation, and on over of the deed, it appeared to be only a letter written by the patron to the father of the plaintiff, that he had given his son the next presentation; adjudged that it would not pass by such letter, without a formal deed. Owen, 47.

Right of presentation may be forfeited in several cases; as by attainder of the patron, or by outlawry, and then the king shall present: and if the outlawry be reversed where the advowson is forfeited by the outlawry, and the church becomes void after, the presentation is vested in the crown; but if at the time of the outlawry, the church was void, then the presentation was forfeited as a chattel, and on reversing the same, the party shall be restored to it. By appropriation without licence from the crown, right of presentation may be forfeited; though the inheritance in this case is not forfeited, only the king shall have the presentation in nature of a distress, till the party hath paid a fine for his contempt. By alienation in fee of the advowson by a grantee for life of the next avoidance, a presentation is forfeited; and after such alienation the granking, in whose hands are the temporalities; of the incumbent, to determine his estate before the presentation vests in him on the in-299: 2 Roll. ADVOWSON OF THE MOIETY OF THE CHURCH, advocatio medietatis ecclesiæ.] Is where there are two several patrons, and two several incumbents in one and the same church, the one of the one moiety, the other of the other moiety thereof. Co. Lit. 17. b. Medictas advocationis, a moiety of the advowson is where two must join in the presentation, and there is but one incumbent: but see stat. 7 A. c. 18. mentioned in tit. Ad-

AERIE, aeria accipitrum.] An airy of goshawks, is the proper term for hawks, for that which of other birds we call a nest. And it is generally said to come from the French word aire, a hawk's nest. Spelman derives it from Sax. eghe, an egg, softened into eye (used to express a brood of pheasants), and thence eyrie, or, as above, aerie, a place or repository for eggs. The liberty of keeping these aeries of hawks was a privilege granted to great persons: and the preserving the aeries in the king's forests was one sort of tenure of lands by service.

ÆTATE PROBANDA. A writ that lay to inquire whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands into his own hands. It was directed to the escheator of the country; but is now disused, since words and liveries are taken away by the statute. Reg. Orig. 294.

AFFEERER'S, afferatores, from the Fr. affier, to affirm, or affeurer, to set the price or assize.] Are those who, in courtsleet, upon oath, settle and moderate the fines and amercements; and they are also appointed for moderating amercements in courts-baron.

AFFIDATUS. A tenant by fealty.

AFFIDAVIT. An oath in writing; and cumbent's death. And by simony it may be to make affidavit of a thing, is to testify it likewise forfeited and lost. Moor, 269: Ploud. upon oath. An affidavit, generally speaking, is an oath in writing, sworn before some person who hath authority to administer such oath: and the true place of habitation, and true addition of every person who shall make an affidavit, is to be inserted in his affidavit. 1 Lill. Ab. 44. 46. Affidavits ought to set forth the matter of fact only, which the party intends to prove by his affidavit; and not to declare the merits of the cause, of which the court is to judge. 21 Car. 1. B. R. plaintiff or defendant (having authority to take affidavits) may take affidavit in a cause depending; yet it will not be admitted in evidence at the trial, but only upon motions. Lill. 44. When an affidavit hath been read in court, it ought to be filed, that the adverse party may see it, and take a copy. Pasch. 1655. An affidavit taken before a master in Chancery, will not be of any force in the court of King's Bench, or other courts, nor ought to be read there; for it ought to be made before one of the judges of the court wherein the cause is depending, or a commissioner in the country, appointed for taking affidavits. Sty. 455. By stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 5. the judges, &c. of the courts at Westminster by commission may empower persons in the several counties of England to take affidavits concerning matters depending in their several courts, as masters in Chancery extraordinary used to do. Where affidavits are taken by commissioners in the country according to the stat. 29 Car. 2. and it is expressed to be in a cause pending between two certain persons, and there is no such depending, those affidavits cannot be read, because the commissioners have no authority to take them (and for that reason the party cannot be convicted of perjury upon them); but if there is such a cause in court, and affidavits taken concerning some collateral matter, they may be read. Salk. 461.

Stealing affidavit from the place of its deposit is a transportable felony. 7 and 8 G.4.

c. 29. § 21. See tit. Records.

Affidavits are usually for certifying the service of process, or other matters touching the proceedings in a cause; or in support of, or against motions, in cases where the court determines matters, &c. in a summary way.

If a person exhibits a bill in equity for the discovery of a deed, and prays relief thereupon, he must annex an affidavit to his bill, that he has not such deed in his possession, or that it is not in his power to come at it; for otherwise he takes away the jurisdiction of the common law courts, without showing any probable cause why he should sue in equity. 1 Chan. Ca. 11. 231: 1 Vern. 59. 180. 247.

But if he seeks discovery of the deed only, or that it may be produced at a trial at law, he need not annex such affidavit to his bill; for it is not to be presumed that in either of these cases he would do so absurd a thing, as exhibit a bill if he had the deed in his possession. 1 Vern. 180, 247.

In bills of interpleader, the party who prefers it must make affidavit that he does not collude with either of the other parties. 1 New. Ab. 66.

An affidavit must set forth the matter positively, and all material circumstances attending it, that the court may judge whether the deponent's conclusion be just or not. 1 New. 4h. 66.

And therefore on motion to put off a trial for want of a material witness, it must appear that sufficient endeavours were made use of to have him at the time appointed, and that he cannot possibly be present, though he may on farther time given. 7 Mod. 121: Comb. 421, 422: Tidd, 771. (9th ed.)

There being one affidavit against another relating to a judgment, the matter was referred to a trial at law upon a feigned issue, to satisfy the conscience of the court as to the fact alleged. Comberb. 399.

See stat. 17 G. 2. c. 7. for taking and swearing affidavits to be made use of in any of the courts of the county palatine of Lancaster.

Where there is a good cause of action and a proper affidavit, defendant may be held to bail; and the court (of K. B.) will not go out of the affidavit or prejudice the cause, by entering into the merits. I Salk. 100. Plaintiff therefore must stand or fall by this affidavit, it being the constant and uniform practice not to receive a supplemental or explanatory affidavit on the part of plaintiff; nor a counter or contradictory one on the part of defendant. 2 Str. 1157; 1 Wils. 335.

AFFIDAVITS. By the 3 and 4 W. 4. c. 42. § 42. the powers of the courts of law and equity at Westminster to grant commissions to take affidavits, have been extended to Scotland and Ireland. Some other regulations with respect to affidavits, particularly those to hold to bail, have been introduced by the recent rules of court, which will be found in the books of practice.

AFFIDAVIT TO HOLD TO BAIL. An affidavit to hold to bail stated that the debt arose on a bill of exchange or order for, &c. drawn by A. upon and accepted by the defendant, payable to the plaintiff; upon this affidavit alone the court refused to order the bail-bond to be delivered up. Wills v. Adcock, T. R. 27.

But the instrument declared upon appearing not to be a bill of exchange, the court, on reading the affidavit and the declaration, ordered the bail-bond to be given up upon the defendant's filing common bail. Ibid.

An affidavit to hold to bail upon a promissory note is insufficient, unless it state the date of the note, or that it was payable on demand, or was due or payable at a day then past. 2 Maule & Sel. Rep. 141. 475: see Tidd. 184. (9th ed.)

Vol. I .-- 8

It is sufficient to state in an affidavit to hold to bail, that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum, "for money had and received on account of the plaintiff," without adding "received by the defendant." Coppinger v. Beaton, 8 T. R. 338.

So also an affidavit to hold to bail stating that the defendant "was justly indebted to the plaintiff in 1001. upon and by virtue of a certain bill of exchange drawn by the defendant, and long since due and unpaid," is sufficient without stating in what character the bill was due to the plaintiff, whether as payee or indorsee. Bradshaw v. Saddington, 7 E.

But such an affidavit, merely stating that the defendant was "indebted to the plaintiff in 54l. for goods sold and delivered;" (without adding by the plaintiff to the defendant) is insufficient. Perks v. Severn, 7 E. R. 194: Cathrow v. Hagger, 8 E. R. 106: Taylor v. Forbes, 11 E. R. 315: 2 Maule & Sel. Rep. 603.

So is an affidavit stating that the debt was due for interest of money under and by virtue of an agreement. 10 E. R. 358. And so it is when it only states the goods to be bargained and sold without saying delivered. 12 E. R. 338. An affidavit must state on what account the money is due. 4 Taunt. 154. By the rules of the three courts, Hilary Term, 1832, affidavits to hold to bail for money paid to the use of the defendant, or for work and labour done, shall not be deemed sufficient, unless they state the money to have been paid, or the work and labour to have been done at the request of the defendant, and no supplemental affidavit is to be allowed to supply any deficiency in the affidavit to hold to

A co-assignee of a debt arising out of bills of exchange in his possession may sue in the name of the original creditor, and hold the defendant to bail on his own affidavit, swearing positively as to all the facts required which are within his own knowledge, and to the best of his knowledge and belief as to such as are within the knowledge of his principal and co-assignees. Creswell v. Lovell, 8 T. R. 418: Tidd, 182. (9th ed.)

The court will not discharge a defendant on a common appearance under 34 G. 2. c. 9. § 7. on the ground of the plaintiff's residing in Holland. Pieters and another v. Luytjes, 1 B. & P. 1.

An affidavit of debt contracted abroad, made by a plaintiff in a foreign country before a magistrate of that country, is a sufficient foundation for a judge's order to hold the defendant to special bail. Omealy v. Newell, 8 E. R. 364. So is such an affidavit made before the chief justice of K. B. in Ireland signed by him and properly verified here. 1 Maul. & Sel. Rep. 302.

The court refused to discharge a defendant out of custody on the ground that the affidaentitled in the cause. Clarke v. Cawthorne, 7 T. R. 321.

In an affidavit to hold to bail in trover for a bill of exchange, it should be stated that the bill remains unpaid. Ibid. (Tidd's Prac. 188.

In E. 37 G. 3. similar rules had been obtained in Levi v. Ross, and Gaunt v. Marsh; on a similar objection, court inquired into the practice, and consulted the other judges; and when Clarke v. Cawthorne was disposed of, the court discharged the rules in both these cases; in support of which rules were cited R. v. Jones, 2 Str. 704: R. v. Pierson, And. 313: Bevan v. Bevan, 3 T. R. 601: R. v. Harrison, 6 T. R. 642. n; against the rules was cited King, q. t. v. Coles, 6 T. R. 640.

It is now settled that affidavits of any causes of action before process sued out must not be entitled in any cause. Reg. Gen. T .:

37 G. 3: 7 T. R. 454.

But an affidavit not entitled in any court, and only with the words "by the court" written under the indictment, is insufficient.

3 Maul. & Sel. 157.

If a defendant, on being informed that a bailable writ has been issued against him, voluntarily give a bail-bond, he cannot afterwards object to the insufficiency of the affidavit to hold to bail. Norton v. Danvers, ibid.

Such an objection cannot be taken advantage of after plea. Levy v. Duponte, ibid. 376. n.

An affidavit to hold to bail sworn in Ireland, but made for the purpose of being used in this country, ought to contain all the essential requisites of such an affidavit made in England; amongst others (according to a late act), that the defendant had not made a tender of the money in notes of the Bank of England. Nesbitt v. Pym, ibid. 376. n.

It is no objection to an affidavit to hold to bail, that it is not entitled "in the King's Bench," or that it appears to have been taken before "A. B. commissioner, &c." without adding "of the court of King's Bench," if in fact he were a commissioner of that court. Kennet and Avon Canal Company v. Jones, ibid. 451.

Affidavit to hold to bail in trover, stating, "That the plaintiff's cause of action against the defendant was for converting and disposing of divers goods of the plaintiff, of the value of 250l. which he refused to deliver, though the plaintiff had demanded the same, and that neither the defendant, or any person on his behalf, had offered to pay to the plaintiff the 250l. or the value of the goods," was holden to be insufficient. Wooley v. Thomas,

The plaintiff in an affidavit to hold to bail, must give himself an addition, otherwise the vit on which he had been holden to bail was | gul generales of Hilary Term, 2 W. 4. the addition of any person making an affidavit shall be inserted therein.

By stat. 37 G. 3. c. Affidavit to hold to bail. "No person shall be holden to special bail, unless the affidavit to hold to bail contain therein, that no offer has been made to pay the sum of money in such affidavit mentioned, &c. in notes of the governor and company of the Bank of England expressed to be payable on demand (fractional parts of the sum of 20s. only excepted,)" and court of King's Bench held an affidavit to hold to bail for 1190l. 11s. 3d. defective, on the grounds, that the tender of the debt in Bank notes was not properly negatived, according to the provisions of the above act. Jennings v. Mitchell, 1 East, 17. But see now 43 G. 3. c. 18. § 2. and this Dict. title Bank of England. But by the 59 G. 3. c. 49. § 1. the restrictions on payments in cash under the Bank acts ceased on the 1st May, 1823. So that it is no longer necessary to negative a tender of the debt in Bank notes in an affidavit to hold to bail. See as to the affidavit, Tidd's Prac. 178. et. seq.

AFFINAGÉ, Fr. affinage.] Refining of metal, purgatio metalli; hence, fine and refine.

AFFINITY, is the tie arising from marriage betwixt the husband and the blood-relations of the wife, and betwixt the wife and the blood relations of the husband. Thus the relations of the husband stand in the same degree of affinity to the wife in which they are related to the husband by consanguinity; but there is no affinity betwixt the kinsmen themselves; thus the husband's brother and the wife's sister have no affinity. See Consanguinity.

To AFFIRM, affirmare.] To ratify or confirm a former law or judgment; so is the substantive affirmance used, stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. And the verb itself, by West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Fines, § 152. 19 H. 7. c. 20. See also the next word.

AFFIRMATION. An indulgence allowed by law to the people called Quakers, who, in cases where an oath is required from others, may make a solemn affirmation that what they say is true. By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 32. Quakers or Moravians required to give evidefendant will be discharged on common bail. dence in any criminal or civil case, may, in-Jarrett v. Dillon, 1 East. 18. And by the re- stead of the usual oath, make solemn affirmation or declaration. Persons falsely affirm- and unusual weapons, in such a manner as ing, &c. are declared liable to the penalties of perjury.—Quakers and Separatists are now permitted to affirm in every case where an oath is required by law. See Oaths, Quakers. Separatists.

AFFORARE. To affeer (which see); to set a value or price on any thing. Du Cange.

AFFORATUS. Appraised or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market. Cartular. Glaston. MS. fol. 58.

AFFORCIAMENT, afforciamentum.] A fortress, strong hold, or other fortification.

Pryn. Animad. on Coke, fol. 184.

AFFORCIARE. To add, to increase, or make stronger; Bract. lib. 4. c. 19; viz. in case of disagreement of the jury, let the assize be increased.

AFFOREST, afforesture.] To turn ground into a forest. Chart. de Forest. c. 1. When forest ground is turned from forest to other uses, it is called disafforested. Vide Forest.

AFFRAY, is derived from the Fr. word effrayer, to affright, and it formerly meant no more; as where persons appeared with armour or weapons not usually worn, to the terror of others. See stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. But now it signifies a skirmish or fighting between two or more, and there must be a stroke given, or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwise it is not an affray. 3 Inst. 158. An affray is a public offence to the terror of the king's subjects; and so called, because it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inst. 158.

From this last definition it seems clearly to follow, that there may be an assault, which will not amount to an affray; as where it happens in a private place, out of the hearing or seeing of any, except the parties concerned; in which case it cannot be said to be the terror of the people.

Also it is said, that no quarrelsome or threatening words whatsoever shall amount to an affray; and that no one can justify laying his hands on those who shall barely quarrel with angry words, without coming to blows; yet it seemeth that the constable may, at the request of the party threatened, carry the person who threatens to beat him before a justice, in order to find sureties.

Also, it is certain, that it is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight; as by dispersing letters to that purpose, full of reflections and insinuating a desire to fight. See, on this subject, Leach's Hawkins, i. c. 63; and ii. c. 10. § 17. c. 13. § 8. c. 14. § 8.

But admitting that bare words do not, in the judgment of law, carry in them so much terror as to amount to an affray, yet it seems certain that, in some cases there may be an affray where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himself with dangerous of The Company of Merchants trading to Af-will naturally cause a terror to the people; which is said to have been always an offence at the common law, and is strictly prohibited by statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3: 7 R. 2. c. 13: 20 R. 2. c. 1. See tit. Riding Armed. To make an affray in any of the king's inferior courts of justice is highly finable. 3 Inst. 141: 12 Co.

As to the power of constables and others in cases of affray, see this Dictionary, tit. Constable, III. 1.

A justice of peace may commit affrayers. until they find sureties for the peace. And there is no doubt but that a justice of peace may and must do all such things to that purpose, which a private man or constable are either enabled or required by the law to do: but it is said, that he cannot without a warrant authorize the arrest of any person for an affray out of his own view; yet it seems clear, that in such case he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, in order to compel him to find sureties for the peace. See Leach's Hawkins, P. C. i. c. 63.

It is requirable in the court leet; and punishable by justices of peace in their sessions, by fine and imprisonment. And it differs from assault, in that it is a wrong to the public; whereas assault is of a private nature. Lamb. lib. 2. Yet indictment lies, as being a breach of the public peace. See Quarreling in a Church, &c.

AFFREIGHTMENT, affretamentum.] The freight of a ship, from the French, fret, freight.

Stat. 11 H. 4. See Charter-party.

AFFRI, vel Afra.] Bullocks, or horses, or beasts of the plough.—Mon. Angl. par. 2. f. 201. And in the county of Northumberland, the people to this day call a dull or slow horse, a false aver or afer. Spelm. Gloss.
AFRICAN COMPANY. In the ni

In the ninth year of King William III. the trade to a great portion of Africa was in the hands of The Royal African Company, which, under a charter from Charles II., enjoyed an exclusive trade from the port of Sallce, in South Barbary, to the Cape of Good Hope, both inclusive, with all the islands near adjoining to those coasts. A new arrangement of this trade was made by stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 26. by which the trade was opened; but this act continued in force only thirteen years; and not being renewed, the whole trade reverted again to the exclusive claim of the company.

This African trade was put on a new footing by stat. 23 G. 2. c. 31. which made it lawful for all the king's subjects freely to trade between the port of Sallee, in South Barbary, and the Cape of Good Hope. Thus was the trade taken out of the hands of the Royal African Company. The act then goes on to provide, that all persons trading to that coast, between Cape Blanco and the Cape of Good Hope, should be a body corporate, by the name rica; the admission to which company was ty-one years; and no man can be ordained made very easy, namely, by the payment of only 40s. The trade between the port of Sallee and Cape Blanco was left open to all persons whatsoever. By stat. 25 G. 2. c. 40. (see stat. 24 G. 2. c. 49.) all the forts, castles, and factories on the coast, from the port of Sallee to the Cape of Good Hope, belonging to the old company, were transferred to, and vested in, the new company, for the like purpose of protecting and facilitating the trade.

The fort of Senegal had been ceded to France by the peace of 1783; and the French king guaranteed to Great Britain the possession of fort James, and the river Gambia, both lying between the fort of Sallee and Cape Rouge. On that occasion it was thought more beneficial for the trade, that the forts, settlements, and factories between those ports, which, by stat. 5 G. 3. c. 44. had been vested in the king, should be revested in the company; this was accordingly done by stat. 23 G. 3. c. 65. By 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 28. the African Company is abolished, the grants made to them are annulled, and their forts, castles, and possessions are vested in the crown.

AGE, atas, Fr. age.] In common acceptation signifies a man's life from his birth to any certain time, or the day of his death; it also hath relation to that part of time wherein men live. But in the law it is particularly used for those special times which enable persons of both sexes to do certain acts, which before, through want of years and judgment, they are prohibited to do. As for example; a man at twelve years of age ought to take the oath of allegiance to the king: at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage, and choose his guardian: and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods, and chattels: a woman at nine years of age is dowable; at twelve she may consent to marriage; at fourteen she is at years of discretion, and may choose a guardian; and at twenty-one she may alienate her lands, &c. Co. Lit. 78.

There are several other ages mentioned in our ancient books, relating to aid of the lord, wardship, &c. now of no use. Co. Lit. The age of twenty-one is the full age of man or woman; which enables them to contract and manage for themselves, in respect to their estates, until which time they cannot act with security to those who deal with them; for their acts are in most cases either void or voidable. Perk.

Fourteen is the age by law to be a witness; and in some cases a person of nine years of age hath been allowed to give evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 27. None may be a member of parliament under the age of twen- 576.

AGE-PRIER, ætatem precari, or ætatis precatio.] Is when an action being brought against a person under age for lands which he hath by descent, he, by petition or motion, shows the matter to the court, and prays that the action may stay till his full age, which the court generally agrees to. AGENT AND PATIENT. When the same person is the doer of a thing, and the party to whom done; as where a woman endows herself of the best part of her husband's possessions, this being the sole act of herself to herself, makes her agent and patient. Also if a man be indebted unto another, and afterwards he makes the creditor his executor, and dies, the executor may retain so much of the goods of the deceased as will satisfy this debt; and by his retainer he is agent and patient, that is, the party to whom the debt is due, and the person that pays the same. But a man shall not be judge in his own cause, quia iniquum est aliquem suæ rei esse judicem. 8 Rep. 118. 138. These words are also used in the criminal law, to designate the two offenders who are guilty of unnatural practices together.

AGENT. By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 49. any banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or other agent, converting to his own use any money, security for money, chattel, power of attorney, or valuable security, or the proceeds of the same, or any share in any fund to which such power of attorney relates, is declared guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be transported for fourteen years, or punished by imprisonment, &c. See tit. Factor, Merchant, Embezzlement.

AGILD. Free from penalties, not subject to the customary fine or imposition. Sax. a gild, sine mulcta. Leges Aluredi, c. 6.

AGILER, from the Sax. a gilt (without fault), an observer or informer. Blount.

AGILLARIUS. Anciently an hey-ward, herd-ward, or keeper of cattle in a common field, sworn at the lord's court by solemn oath.—There were two sorts, one of the town or village, the other of the lord of the manor. Cowel. See Kennett's Paroch. Antiq. 534.

AGIST (from the Fr. giste, a bed or rest- nerally incapable of contracting, except for ing place), signifies to take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather up the money due for the same. Chart. de Foresta, 9 H. 3. c. 9. The officers appointed for this purpose are called agisters or gist1 takers, and are made by the king's letters patent: there are four of them in every forest wherein the king hath any pawnage. Manw. Forest-Laws, c. 11 to 30. They are also called agistators, to take account of the cattle agisted.

AGISTMENT, Agistamentum, from Fr. geyser, gister (jacere), because the beasts are levant and couchant during the time they are on the land.] Is where other men's cattle is taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week: it is so called, because the cattle are suffered agiser, that is, to be levant and couchant there: and many great farms are employed to this purpose. 2 Inst. 643. Our graziers call cattle which they thus take into keep gisements; and to gise or juice the ground, is when the occupier thereof feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in the cattle of others to agist or pasture it. Agistment is likewise the profit of such feeding in a ground or field; and extends to the depasturing of barren cattle of the owner, for which tithes shall be paid to the parson. There is agistment of seabanks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea. Terræ Agistatæ are lands whose owners are bound to keep up the sea-banks. Spelm. in Romney-Marsh. See tit. Tithes.

The subject seems to divide itself in the following manner :-

I. Who may be parties to, or bound by an agreement.

II. The various kinds of agreements; and of the assent and disagreement of parties.

III. Of the operation of the statute of frauds; and herein of evidence to explain agreements.

Vern. 215: Abr. Eq. 265. But if tenant in tail agrees to convey, or bargains and sells the lands for valuable consideration, without fine or recovery, and dies before the fine or recovery be levied or suffered, the issue is not bound either in law or equity: for equity cannot set aside the statute de donis, which says, That voluntas donatoris observetur; nor can the court set up a new manner of conveyancing, and thereby supersede fines and recoveries; for thereby the king would lose the perquisites by fines, or the writs of entry and fines for alienation, Hob. 203: 1 Chan. Dyer. 167. And regularly, where a man hath once disagreed to the party himself, he can never after agree: and obligation being made to my use, and tendered to me, if I refuse it, and after agree again and will accept it; now this agreement afterwards will not make the obligation good that was void by the refusal. Co. Lit. 79: 5 Rep. 119.

An agreement may be as well in the party's absence as in his presence; but a disagreement must be to the person himself to whom made. 2 Rep. 69. When an estate is made to a feme covert, it is good, till disagreement, without any agreement of the husband: though a new estate granted to the wife where she hath an estate before, as by the taking of a new lease, and making a surrender in law, will not vest till the husband agree to it. Hob. 204.

That an assent on the part of the person who takes, is also essential to all conveyances and contracts; for where a man is to be vested with an interest, his acceptance is necessary. See 2 Ventr. 198: 2 Salk. 618: 2 Leon. p. 72. pl. 97: 5 Vin. Ab. 508. pl. 1. See Thompson v. Leach, 2 Ventr. 108. in which this subject is very elaborately discussed by Ventris, J. See also Butler and Baker's case, 3 Co. 26.

III. Besides the bare words of an agreement, the common law, to prevent imposition, ordained certain ceremonies where an interest was to pass; and therefore appointed livery for things corporeal, and a deed for things incorporeal. Yet in equity, where there was a consideration, the want of ceremonies was not regarded. However, in former times, courts of equity were very cautious of reliev-ing bare parol agreements for lands, not signed by the parties, nor any money paid; 2 Freem. 216; although they would sometimes give the party satisfaction for the loss he had sustained. But now by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 1. all leases of messuages, lands, &c. created without writing, signed by the parties or their agents, shall only have the effect of estates at will (which is held to be mean estates from year to year, determinable by notice), except leases not exceeding the term of three years, whereon the rent shall be 2s. 3d. of the improved value of the thing demised.

By § 3. no leases, estates, or uncertain interest in any messuages or lands shall be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless by

By § 4. no action shall be brought thereby to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer damages out of his own estate, or thereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, or to charge any person upon any agreement made, upon consideration of marriage, or upon any contract or sale of lands, &c. or any interest therein, or upon any agreement not to be performed within one year, unless the agreement on which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized. (See as to promises by executors or administrators, Bac. Ab. ubi supra.) As to promises to answer for the debt, &c. of another, it is held, that in order to render writing necessary, both parties must be liable; for if only the party making the promise is liable, it is not a case within the statute. Thus, if A. is hiring a house, and B. to induce the owner to let it, promises to see it delivered safe, this promise requires writing. But if B. comes to the owner, and desires him to let A. have his house, or to sell him goods, and he B. will see him paid, this is an original liability in B., and he alone is liable, and no writing is necessary. See Bac. Ab. ubi su-pra: 2 Term. Rep. 80: Cowp. 227: 2 Wils. 94: 2 Barn. & A. 613: 4 Bing. 474. If one promise to pay the debt of a debtor, in consideration of his being discharged out of custody, this is not within the statute, since the debt by the discharge is extinguished, and therefore the promiser only is liable. 1 Barn. & A. 297: and see 2 Wils. 308: 2 East, 325: Ry. & Moo. 348. Buc. Ab. ubi supra. The word agreement in the fourth section means not merely the promise on one side, but the consideration for it on the other, and therefore the consideration must appear in writing as well as the promise, where the case is within the statute. 5 East, 10: 9 East, 348: 4 Barn. & A. 595: 3 Bro. & Bing. 14: 3 Bing. 107: 4 Bing. 455. As to agreements in consideration of marriage-it is held that the statute does not apply to mutual promises to marry. Bac. Ab. Agreement. (C. 3.) As to contracts for sale of lands, tenements, &c .- it is held that an agreement for abatement of rent, is within the clause. 1 Scho. & Sef. 306. So also a contract for a growing crop of grass, to be mown and made into hay by the buyer, but no time being fixed for the mowing. 6 East, 602. So also a sale of growing underwood, to be cut by the purchaser. 1 Younge & J. 396. So a sale of growing potatoes. Bro. & Bing. 99: but see 9 Barn. & C. 561. But where the contract was for a crop of podeed or note in writing, signed by the party, tatoes to be taken immediately out of the ground, it was considered a sale of personal | bargain, this is not a part payment within the chattels, not within the statute. 11 East, 362: 2 Maule & S. 205: 5 Barn. & C. 836: 9 Barn. & C. 561. A deposit of title deeds by way of security, constitutes an equitable mortgage without writing. 1 Bro. C. R. 269: and see farther Bac. Ab. ubi supra. As to agreements not to be performed within one year from the making.—The clause extends only to cases when, by express agreement, the contract is not to be performed within one year, and not to agreements depending on a contingency, which may happen in a year or not. Bac. Ab. ubi supra. A contract to hire a carriage for four years, paying an annual sum for it, and determinable on paying a year's hire, is within the clause. 9 Barn. & C. 392:

and see 1 Barn. & A. 722. By § 17. no contract for the sale of any goods, wares, and merchandise, for the price of 10l. or upwards, shall be allowed to be good, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain, or in part of payment, or that some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain, be signed by the parties or their agents. This section is held to apply not merely to the present and immediate sale of goods, but also to goods bespoken, to be delivered and paid for in future, and even where the goods are not yet in esse, at least in the state in which they are to be delivered. Thus a sale of flour not yet ground, and of timber at so much per foot, not yet cut, are held to be within the clause. 5 Barn. & A. 614: 9 Barn. & C. 361: 10 Barn. & C. 446: Bac. Ab. Agree. ment. (C. 3.) A contract for purchase of several articles at the same time, and each under 10l., and at separate prices, but in the whole amounting to above 10l., is within the section. 2 Barn. & C. 37: 1 Barn. & C. 156. As to the acceptance of goods and part payment altering the clause. It is held that where goods are bulky and ponderous, the statute may be satisfied by delivery of the key of the warehouse, or other indicum of property. 1 East, 192. The offering by the buyer to sell the goods to another who refuses, is an act which ought to be left to the jury, to say whether it is an acceptance or not. 7 Taunt. 597. The acceptance of a sample is an acceptance within the statute, if it is part of the bulk, not otherwise, 7 East, 558. As long as the lien of the vendor remains, the possession of the goods is not so transferred to the vender as to amount to an acceptance within the statute. 2 Barn. & C. 44: 3 Barn. & C. 1. 357: and see 4 Barn. & C. 511: Bac. Ab. ubi supra. An acceptance by a wharfinger to carry the goods to the buyer, is not an acceptance within the statute. 5 Barn. & A. 557. If the purchaser draw a shilling across the hand of the vendor, and return the money into his own pocket, which is statute. 7 Taunt. 597. As to the memorandum in writing within this section .- It is held that the consideration need not be expressed, since note or memorandum of the bargain is different from agreement in the fourth section. 6 East, 307. Where the seller only signed the memorandum, and the buyer's name did not appear, this was held insufficient. 1 New. R. 252. The memorandum may be made of two separate writings, if they refer sufficiently to each other. 2 Bos. $\frac{1}{2}$ I'ull. 238: 1 Bing. R. 9: 15 East, 103: 6 Barn. $\frac{1}{2}$ C. 437. The place of signature is immaterial. "I., A. B., agree," &c.; or the writing of the party has been held sufficient. 1 Esp. Ca. 190: 3 Meriv. 2. A party may sign by printing his name. 2 Bos. & Pull. 238. Sales by auction are within this section, and the auctioneer is the agent of both parties, and a memorandum by him binds both. 2 Barn. & C. 945: Bac. Ab. ubi supra. In sales by brokers, the entry in the broker's book, and the bought and sold notes transcribed therefrom, and signed by the broker, and delivered to the parties, are held a sufficient compliance within the statute. By the stat. of 29 Car. 2. c. 3. the Statute of Frauds, if an agreement be by parol, and not signed by the parties, or somebody lawfully authorized by them (Pre. Ch. 402), if such agreement be not confessed in the answer, it cannot be carried into execution. But where, in his answer, the defendant allows the bargain to be complete, and does not insist on any fraud, there can be no danger of perjury; because he himself has taken away the necessity of proving it. Pre. Ch. 208. 374: 1 Vez. 221. 441: Amb. 586. So if it be carried into execution by one of the parties; 2 Vern. 455: Pre. Chan. 519: 2 Freem. 268: Amb. 586: 2 Stra. 783: Bunb. 65. 94: 9 Mod. 37: 1 Vez. -2. 221. 297. 441: 3 Atk. 4: 1 Bro. Rep. 404: 2 Bro. Rep. 566. MSS. 4th July, 1786; as by delivering possession, and such execution be accepted by the other, he that accepts it must perform his part; for where there is a performance, the evidence of the bargain does not lie merely upon the words, but upon the fact performed. See 2 Bro. Rep. 566. And it is unconscionable, that the party that has received the advantage, should be admitted to say, that such contract was never made. So, if the signing by the other party, or reducing the agreement into writing, be prevented by fraud, it may be good. Pre. Ch. 526: 5 Vin. Ab. 521. pl. 31: 1 Vern. 296. And although parol agreements are bound by the statute, and agreements are not to be part parol, and part in writing; yet a deposit or collateral security, for the performance of the written agreement, is not within the purview of the called in the North of England, striking of a statute. 2 Vern. 617: 1 Bro. Rep. 269: 19th

It was determined, very soon after the passing of the statute of frauds, that an agreement signed by one of the parties, should be binding on the party signing it. 2 Ch. Ca. 164, And in Sir James Lowther v. Carill, 1 Vern. 221. the court appears to have thought, that one of the parties making alterations in the draft, and sending it to the other to execute, who did execute it, would bring the case out of the statute. But the authority of this latter decision seems to be done away by Lord Macclesfield's decree in Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770; by which his lordship held, that unless in some particular cases, where there has been an execution of the contract, by entering upon and improving the premises, the party's signing the agreement is absolutely necessary for completing it; and that to put a different construction upon it would be to repeal it; and his lordship therefore held, that the defendant having altered the draft with his own hand, was not a signing to take it out of the statute; though the vendor afterwards executed the conveyance and caused it to be registered. But this question received more particular consideration in the case of Stokes v. Moore, at Serjeant's-Inn Hall, March 1, 1786, in which case the court delivered their opinions that the signature required by the statute is to have the effect of giving authenticity to the whole of the instrument: and where the name is inserted in such a manner as to have that effect, it did not much signify in what part of the instrument it was to be found; as in the formal introduction to a will. [Thus, "This is the last will and testament of me A. B."-written with the testator's own hand, has been deemed a sufficient signing.] But it could not be imagined, that a name inserted in the body of an instrument, and applicable to particular purposes, could amount to such an authentication as the statute required:-Ithus, in notes of an agreement, "Mr. A. to do so and so," though written by A. himself, not a sufficient signing;] upon which, as well as upon another ground, the bill was dismissed. See Mr. Cox's note (1) to Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770: 1 Rep. Ca. 190: 2 Meriv. 2: 2 Bos. & Pull. 238.

If a defendant confess the agreement charged in the bill, there is certainly no danger of fraud or perjury in decreeing the performance of such agreement. But it is of considerable importance to determine whether the defendant be bound to confess or deny a merely parol agreement, not alleged to be in any part executed; or if he do confess it, whether he may not insist on the statute, in bar of the performance of it? See Treatise of Equity, p. 168, note (d), where the subject is very accurately and ably discussed. To allow a object to be interposed in bar of the perform- templation of them.

April, 1785. MSS. See Treatise of Equity, i. | ance of a parol agreement, in part performed, were evidently to encourage one of the mischiefs which the legislature intended to prevent. It is therefore an established rule, that a parol agreement, in part performed, is not within the provisions of the statute. See Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. Rep. 566.

As to what acts amount to a part performance, the general rule is, that the acts must be such as could be done with no other view or design than to perform the agreement, and not such as are merely introductory, or ancillary to it. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 586: Whitbread v. Brockhurst, 1 Bro. Rep. 412. giving of possession is therefore to be considered as an act of part performance. Fonbl. 38; 3 Ves. I. 378; 18 Ves. 328; 1 Swanst. 172: Bac. Ab. Agreement (D.): Stewart v. Denton, MSS. 4th July, 1786. But giving directions for conveyances, and going to view the estate, are not. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12: Whaley v. Bagnal, 6 Bro. P. C. 45. Nor is payment of auction duty on a sale. 13 Ves. 456. Payment of money has been also said to be an act of part performance.

Lacons v. Martins, 3 Atk. 4. But it seems now held that in case of lands, payment of money is not a part performance: as to goods, it is expressly declared so. 1 Scho. & Lef. 22; 4 Ves. 720; 14 Ves. 388; Bac. Ab. Agreement, (D.) But it seems that payment of a sum, by way of earnest, is not. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560. Lord Pengall v. Ross, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 46. pl. 12; Simmons v. Cornelius, 1 Ch. Rep. 128. But see Voll v. Smith, 3 Ch. Rep. 16: and Anon, 2 Freem. 128.

In the case of Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 561. it is said, that, " where a man, on promise of a lease to be made to him, lays out money in improvements, he shall oblige the lessor afterwards to execute the lease; because it was executed on the part of the lessee." This dictum is sanctioned by the spirit of equity, and seems to do away the decisions which require, even under the circumstance of premises being improved, an averment of its being part of the parol agreement, that it should be reduced into writing. But see 14 Ves. 386: 2 Scho. & Lef. 1.

A letter not only takes an agreement in consideration of marriage out of the statute, but also agreements respecting lands, &c. Ford v. Crompton, 2 Bro. Rep. 32: Tawny v. Crowther, 2 Bro. Rep. 318. But whenever a letter is relied on as evidence of an agreement, it must be stamped before it can be read. Ford v. Crompton. It must also distinctly furnish the terms of agreement. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560; Stra. 426: Clark v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12. Or it must at least refer to some written instrument, in which the terms are set forth. Tawney v. Crowther, supra. It must likewise appear, that the other statute having the prevention of frauds for its party accepted such terms, and acted in con-

But if it be alleged, that some material part of the agreement was omitted, by fraud, or that the intention of the parties was mistaken and misapprehended by the drawers of the deed. in such cases, it seems, evidence will be admissible, even though the agreement be executed; 2 Atk. 203: 2 Vern. 98: 2 Vern. 547: 2 Ch. Ca. 180; a fortiori, such evidence will be admissible where the agreement is executory. 3 Atk. 388: 1 Vez. 456. It may be material to observe, where evidence dehors the deed is admitted to show what was the consideration of the agreement, that the consideration to be proved must be consistent with the consideration stated. 3 Term. Rep. 474: Fulbeck's Parallel, p. 9. And if the deed specify the consideration to have been a sum of money, evidence is not admissible, in order to superadd another consideration, as natural love and affection, &c. 2 P. Wms. 204: 1 Vez. 128. Nor if the consideration fail, can evidence be admitted to support the conveyance as a gift. 2 Vez. 627: 1 Atk. 294: 3 Bro. Rep. 156. And though the deed specify a particular consideration and other considerations, generally, no consideration but that expressed shall be intended; Cro. Eliz. 242, 3; but qu. whether other considerations might not be proved.

An agreement to lease, and that the lessor would not turn out the tenant so long as he adhered to the terms of the agreement, will operate as a tenancy from year to year, and may be determined by either party giving the regular notice to quit. 8 E. R. 165; and see

5 T. R. 471. there cited.

If a party, entitled under an agreement to receive a certain thing from another, by his own act renders it impossible to the other party to supply what he was to receive, he vacates the agreement. 2 Taunt. 150.

IV. It has been said that where the contract is good at law, equity will carry it into execution; but this proposition is too generally stated; for though equity will enforce the specific performance of fair and reasonable contracts where the party wants the thing in specie, and cannot have it in any other way; yet, if the breach of the contract can be, or was intended to be compensated in damages, courts of equity will not interpose. See Errington v. Annesley, 2 Bro. Rep. 341: Cudd v. Rutter, 1 P. Wms. 570: Capper v. Harris, Bunb.

It is assuredly a general rule, that courts of equity will, under certain circumstances, enforce the specific performance of agree-Vol. 1.-9 is in the discretion of the court, it must not be considered as an universal rule; for if the plaintiff's title be involved in difficulties which cannot be immediately removed, equity will not compel the defendant to take a conveyance: though perhaps, he might at law be subject to damages for not completing his purchase. See Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. Wms. 198: Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. Rep. 75: Cooper v. Denne, 21st July, 1792, MSS.

Qu. Whether courts of equity will decree an agreement entered into by letter, if a deed appear to have been afterwards framed (but not executed), varying the terms expressed in the letter? See Coke v. Mascall. 2 Vern. 34. Or if the terms be varied by parole. Jordan v. Sawkins, 3 Bro. Rep. 388. And as a letter setting forth the terms of an agreement, takes the agreement out of the statute, it being a sufficient signing; so, it seems, it is a sufficient signing, if a person, knowing the contents, subscribe the deed as a witness only.

Welford v. Beazely, 3 Atk. 503.

In the civil law, counter-letters, and all secret acts which make any change in agreements, are of no manner of effect with respect to the interest of a third person; 1 Vern. 240. 348. 475: 2 Vern. 466: 1 P. Wms. 768: 2 Vez. 375: 1 Bla. Rep. 363; for this would be an infidelity contrary to good manners and the public interest. In cases of this nature it is not necessary that the fraud respect an article expressly contracted for: but any representation, misleading the parties contracting on the subject of the contract, is within the principle which governs this class of cases. See 1 Bro. Rep. 543; and stated in Mr. Cox's note to Roberts v. Roberts, 3 P. Wms. 74.

The principle of the rule there laid down, though it has been most frequently applied to agreements in fraud of marriage, extends to every other species of agreements; therefore, where a tradesman compounding his debts, privately agreed with some of his creditors to pay them the whole of their debts, by which they were induced to appear to accept of the composition; such private agreement was held to be a fraud on the other creditors; 2 Vern. 71. 602: 1 Atk. 105; and it seems that such fraud is now relievable at law, 2 Term Rep. 763. The case of Lewis v. Chase, 1 P. Wms. 620. is, however, irreconcilcable with this principle; it may therefore be material to observe, that it is very much shaken, if not over-ruled, by several subsequent cases, particularly Smith v. Bromley, Doug. 670. But though private agreements in fraud of third persons be void, yet if a bond or note be given by A. the more effectually to enable B. to bring about a match, &c., such bond or note may be recovered upon at law. AID. See tit. Taxes; Tenure, I. 8. II. 6. AID-PRAYER, auxilium petere.] A word made use of in pleading, for a petition in court to call in help from another person that gives strength to the party praying in aid, and to the other likewise, by giving him an opportunity of avoiding a prejudice growing towards his own right. As tenant for life, by the courtesy, for term of years, &c. being impleaded, may pray in aid of him in reversion; that is, desire the court that he may be called by writ to allege what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the person calling him, and of his own. F. N. B. 50.

Aid shall be granted to the defendant in ejectione firmæ, when the title of the land is in question: lessee for years shall have aid in trespass; and tenants at will: but tenant in tail shall not have aid of him in remainder in fee; for he himself hath the inheritance. Danv. Ab. 292. In a writ of replevin, the avowry being for a real service, aid is granted before issue; and in action of trespass after issue joined, if there be cause, it shall be had for the defendant, though never for the plaintiff. AID OF THE KING, auxilium regis.] Is where the king's tenant prays aid of the king, on account of rent demanded of him by others. A city or borough, that hold a fee farm of the king, if any thing be demanded against them which belongs thereto, may pray in aid of the king: and the king's bailiffs, collectors, or accountants shall have aid of the king. In these cases the proceedings are stopped till the king's counsel are heard to say what they think fit, for avoiding the king's prejudice; and this aid shall not in any case be granted after issue; because the king ought not to rely upon the defence made by another. In Spelman's Glossary we find that we had anciently a title of aldermannus totius Anglia; mentioned in an inscription on a tomb in Ramsey Abbey. And this officer was in nature of Lord Chief Justice of England. Spelm. Alderman was one of the degrees of nobility among the Saxons, and signified an earl; sometimes applied to a place, it was taken for a general, with a civil jurisdiction as well as military power; which title afterwards was used for a judge; but it literally imports no more than elder.

There was likewise aldermannus hundredi (the alderman of the hundred), which dignity was first introduced in the reign of Hen. 1. Du Fresne: Cowel.

ALEHOUSES. By the last act (9 G. 4: c. 61.) passed on this subject (which extends to England only,) it is enacted that in every division, &c. of counties, cities, and towns, a general annual meeting shall be held for granting licences, to persons keeping or about to keep inns, alehouses, and victuallinghouses, to sell exciseable liquors by retail to be consumed in such inns, &c.

In Middlesex and Surrey these licensing meetings are to be held within the first ten days in March; and in all other counties between the 20th of August and 14th of September; at which meetings the justices (not by the act disqualified from granting such licenses) may grant such licences to such persons as such justices, in the exercise of the powers of the act, and in the exercise of their discretion, shall think fit and proper.

The days for holding every such general meeting are to be fixed at a petty sessions, twenty-one days at least before the meeting.

The general meeting may be adjourned to other times and places; the time of adjournment to be not less than five days, and the meeting to be held within the months before mentioned.

Eight special sessions are to be held in the year for transferring licences.

The persons disqualified from acting or any house to be licensed, and any manager or agent of any owner of such house. Every person is also disqualified to act as such justice in the case of any house in the whole or in part the property of any brewer, &c. to whom such justice shall be either by blood or marriage the father, son, or brother, or of whom such justice shall be partner in any trade or calling. The penalty for any justice acting if so disqualified is 1001.: the only exception being that of legal trustees of any such house being wholly disinterested.

Sheriff's officers or officers executing the legal process of any court of justice are declared incapable of being licensed.

No licence for the sale of exciseable liquors by retail to be drunk or consumed on the premises of the person licensed shall be granted by the excise officer to any person not licensed to keep an inn, alchouse, and victuallinghouse under this act.

Penalty on persons not duly licensed according to this act, who shall sell any exciseable liquors by retail to be drank or consumed on their premises, 20l. to 5l. on conviction before one justice.

Licensed persons shall use the standard measures in the sale of such liquors.

Two justices of any place (where any riot or tumult shall happen or be expected to take place) may order any party licensed to close his house at any time: persons keeping their house open after any hour when ordered to be closed deemed disorderly.

Persons convicted of any offence against the tenor of their licence shall for the first offence forfeit 5l., the second 10l., the third 50l., or if thought fit to be tried before the Quarter Sessions 100l., or forfeiture of the ALIEN, Alienus, Alienigena.] Generally speaking, one born in a foreign country, out of the allegiance of the king. Under this head shall be briefly introduced the present state of the law, in particular, as to I. Aliens. III. Denizens. III. Naturalized Subjects. IV. Of the general effect of the Laws on Aliens.

I. An Alien born may purchase lands or other estates, but not for his own use, for the king is thereupon entitled to them. 1 Inst. 2. and the notes there. But under the stat. 13 G. 3. c. 14. aliens are enabled to lend money on the security of mortgages of estates in the West India Colonies, and may have every remedy to recover the money lent, except foreclosing the mortgage and obtaining possession of the land; which is positively prohibited by the statute. Nor shall a woman alien, wife of a natural born subject, be endowed. 7 Rep. 25. a: 1 Inst. 31. b; but see the note there contra. Nor a Jewess, wife of a husband converted to the Christian religion. Id. ib. See this Dict. tit. Dower. An alien may however acquire a property in goods, money, and other personal estate, or may hire a house for his habitation. 7 Rep. 17. For personal estate is of a transitory or moveable nature, and this indulgence is necessary for the advancement of trade. Aliens also may trade as freely as other people, but they are subject to certain higher duties of Customs. See tit. Customs. There are also some obsolete statutes (14 H. 8. c. 2: 21 H. 8. c. 16: 22 H. 8. c. 13: 32 H. 8. c. 16.) prohibiting alien artificers to work for themselves in this kingdom, and making void all leases of houses or shops to aliens; see tit. Artificers; concerning personal property; and may make a will and dispose of his personal estate. maintained by an alien enemy, but not in favour of one, though the party to the record be a subject. 6 Term Rep. 23: 15 East, 260. If a contract be made with an alien enemy while he is such, it cannot be enforced in England even after peace is restored. Taunt. 439: 4 East, 410. The Court of Chancery will not protect the copyright of a foreigner. 2 Term Rep. 237. An alien cannot hold land as a trustee, or make good conveyance of it to a purchaser. 2 Meriv. Rep. 431. These rights of aliens must be understood of alien friends only; for alien enemies have no rights, no privileges, unless by the king's special favour, during the time of war. 1 Comm. 372: and see Cro. Eliz. 683: Skin. 370: Anstr. Rep. Scac. 462.

Where it is said that an alien is one born out of the king's dominions or allegiance, this must be understood with some restrictions. The common law was absolutely so, with only a very few exceptions; so that a particular act of parliament (stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 6.) was necessary after the restoration to naturalize children of English subjects born in foreign parts during the rebellion. This maxim of law proceeded on a general principle, that every man owes natural allegiance where he is born, and cannot owe two such allegiances at once. Yet the children of the king's ambassadors born abroad were always held to be natural born subjects; 7 Rep. 11. § 18; the father owing no local allegiance to the foreign prince, and representing the king of England; and by the stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 2. it is declared to be the law of the crown of England, that the king's children wherever born are of ability to inherit the crown. And, apparently in consistence with this principle, it is by stat. 4 A. c. 4. enacted that all persons succeeding to the crown, as descendants of the Princess Sophia shall be considered as natural born subjects, as if the Princess and the issue of her body and all lineally descending from her, had been born within this realm. To encourage foreign commerce it is enacted by the stat. 25 Ed. 3 st. 2. before referred to, that all children born abroad, provided both their parents were at the time of the child's birth in allegiance to the king, and the mother had passed the seas by her husband's consent, might inherit as if born in England. See Cro. Car. 601: Mar. 91: Jenk. Cent. 3.

subject to certain higher duties of Customs. See tit. Customs. There are also some obsolete statutes (14 H. 8. c. 2: 21 H. 8. c. 16: 22 H. 8. c. 16.) prohibiting alien artificers to work for themselves in this kingdom, and making void all leases of houses or shops to aliens; see tit. Artificers; but it is generally held that these are virtumed.

natural born subjects themselves to all intents incommunicable branch of the royal prerogaand purposes, unless their said ancestor were attainted, or banished beyond sea for high treason; or were at the birth of such children in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain. See stat. 4 G. 2. c. 21. [The issue of an English woman by an alien born abroad is an alien. 1 Vent. 422: 4 Term Rep. 300. solemnly decided.] But grand children of such ancestors shall not be privileged in respect of the alien's duty, except they be protestants and actually reside within the realm; nor shall be enabled to claim any estate or interest, unless the claim be made within five years after the same shall accrue.

The children of aliens born here in England are, generally speaking, natural born subjects, and entitled to all the privileges of such. 1 Comm. 373. See tit. Descent.

Aliens residing in any place surrendered to his majesty, may act as merchants or factors, on taking oath of allegiance. 37 G. 3. c. 63. § 5. This act does not abridge the rights of the East India Company. See also 45 G. 3. c. 32.

All lands, &c. held in Great Britain and its dependencies, by American citizens on 28 October, 1795, shall be enjoyed agreeably to the 9th article of the treaty of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation. See 37 G. 3. c. 97. §

It has been holden that upon the recognition by king George III. of the United States of America to be free, sovereign, and independent states, in the treaty of Paris in 1783, under the sanction of the British legislature, in stat. 22 G. 3. c. 46. the natural born subjects of his majesty adhering to the United States, ceased to be subjects of the crown of England, and became aliens, and incapable of inheriting lands in England. Doe, d. Thomas v. Acklam, 2 B. & C. 779. That the natives of Great Britain are aliens and incapable of inheriting lands in the United States, had been previously holden in the case of Bright's Lessee v. Rochester, 7 Wheaton's American Reports, 535.

The children of an American loyalist, who continued his allegiance to the crown of Great Britain, after the colonies were separated from the mother country, and settled in America, were held entitled to take lands by descent in England within the operation of stat. 4 G. 2. c. 21. as natural born subjects of the crown of Great Britain. Doe, d. Achmuty v. Mulcaster, 8 D. & R. 593: 5 B. & C. 771: and see Doe, d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 8 D. & R. 185. Aliens are entitled to be tried by a jury de medietate linguæ. 6 G. 4. c. 50. § 47. They are disqualified as jurors except on juries de medietate linguæ. 6 G. 4. c. 50. § 3. As to the provisions for registration of aliens, see 7 G. 4. c. 54.

II. A DENIZEN is an alien born, but who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an English subject: a high and tive. 7 Rep. 25. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien and natural born subject, and partakes of both of them. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not; but could not take by inheritance; 11 Rep. 67; for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien, had no inheritable blood; and therefore could convey none to the son. And, upon a like defect of hereditary blood, the issue of a denizen born before denization could not inherit to him; but his issue born after might, to the exclusion of that born before. 1 Inst. 8: Vaugh. 285. But now, by stat. 11 and 12 W. 3. c. 6. all persons being natural born subjects, may inherit as heirs to their ancestors, though those ancestors were aliens. See also stat. 25 G. 2. c. 39; by which this statute of W. 3. is restrained to persons in being at the death of the ancestor; and the estate is divested from daughters in favour of after-born sons. these acts are extended by stat. 16 G. 3. c. 52. to Scotland. See more particularly tit. Descent.

And no denizen can be of the privy council, or either house of parliament, or have any office of trust civil or military, or be capable of any grant of lands, &c. from the crown. Stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2.

III. NATURALIZATION cannot be performed but by act of parliament; for by this an alien is put in the same state as if he had been born in the king's ligeance: except only that he is (by the stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2.) incapable, as well as a denizen, of being a member of the privy council or parliament, holding offices, grants, &c. No bill for naturalization can be received without such disabling clause in it; stat. 1 G. 1. c. 4; nor without a clause disabling the person from obtaining any immunity in trade thereby, in any foreign country, unless he shall have resided in Great Britain for seven years next after the commencement of the session in which he is naturalized. Stat. 14 G. 3. c. 84. By a temporary act (58 G. 3. c. 97.), to guard against some evils which had been found to arise from the powers of certain corporations to admit aliens to the privileges of natural born subjects, it was enacted that no alien should become entitled to the privileges of a natural born subject or denizen in any other manner, or by any other authority, than by act of parliament or the king's letters of denization.

These are the principal distinctions between Aliens, Denizens, and Natives; distinctions which it hath been frequently endeavoured within the present century to lay almost totally aside by one general naturalization act for all foreign protestants; an attempt which was once carried into execution by stat. 7 A. c. 5; but this, after three years' experience, was repealed by stat. 10 A. c. 5. except the clause for naturalizing the children of English parents born abroad. But in Ireland 14 and 15 Car. 2. (I.) c. 13: 4 G. 1. (I.) the martial law; and not be indicted at the c. 9. However, every foreign scaman who, in time of war, serves two years on board a British ship, by virtue of the king's proclamation, is by stat. 13 G. 2. c. 3. ipso facto naturalized, under the like restrictions as in stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2. And all foreign protestants and Jews, upon their residing seven years in any of the American colonies, without being absent above two months at a time, and all foreign protestants serving two years in a military capacity there, and none of these falling within the incapacities declared by stat. 4 G. 2. c. 21. (viz. attaint, &c.) shall, on taking the oath of allegiance and abjuration, or in some cases an affirmation to the same effect, be naturalized to all intents and purposes as if they had been born in this kingdom; except as to sitting in parliament or the privy council, and holding offices or grants of land, from the crown, in Great Britain or Ireland. Stat. 13 G. 2. c. 7: 20 G. 2. c. 44: 2 G. 3. c. 25: 13 G. 3. c. 25: 20 G. 3. c. 20. They, therefore, are admissible to all other privileges which protestants or Jews born in this kingdom are entitled to. What those privileges are, with respect to Jews in particular, was the subject of very high debate about the time of the famous Jew bill, stat. 26 G. 2. c. 26., which enabled all Jews to prefer bills of naturalization in parliament without receiving the sacrament, as ordained by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2; but this act continued only a few months, and was then repealed by stat. 27 G.

By stat. 6 G. 4. c. 67. it is expressly enacted that it shall not be necessary for persons naturalized (or restored in blood) to receive the sacrament, a rite formerly required in all such cases.

Where an alien trustee joins in a conveyance, and afterwards obtains an act of naturalization, by which it is declared that he is from thenceforth naturalized, and shall be enabled to "ask, take, have, retain, and enjoy all lands which he may or shall have by purchase or gift of any person whatsoever," and "shall be to all intents and purposes as if he had been a natural born subject," this act cannot retrospectively confirm the title of the purchaser under a conveyance previous to the Fish v. Klein, 2 Meriv. 431.

While the occupation of a dwelling-house by an alien continues, it carries with it all the advantages and charges of an occupation by a native; thus an alien renting a dwellinghouse of the value of 10l. and residing in it for forty days, was held to gain a settlement under the poor laws. R. v. Eastbourne, 4 East, 103.

If an alien hold as tenant from year to year he is liable to an action for use and occupation. Pilkington v. Peach, 2 Show. 135.

IV. An alien enemy coming into this kingdom, and taken in war, shall suffer death by common law, for the indictment must conclude contra ligeantiam suam, &c. and such was never in the protection of the king. Molloy de Jur. Marit. 417. Aliens living under the protection of the king, may have the benefit of a general pardon. Hob. 271. No alien shall be returned on any jury, nor be sworn for trial of issues between subject and subject, &c.; but where an alien is party in a cause depending, the inquest of jurors are to be half denizens and half subjects; but in cases of high treason this is not allowed. 2 Inst. 17. See stat. 27 E. 3. c. 8. that where both parties are aliens the inquest shall be all aliens; and stat. 28 E. 3. c. 13. as to trials between denizens and aliens. See also I Com. Dig. tit. Alien. (C. 8.)

Though aliens are subject to the laws, and in enormous offences (as murder, &c.) are liable in the ordinary course of justice, yet it may be too harsh to punish them on a local statute. Thus, a French prisoner, indicted for privately stealing from a shop, was acquitted of that by the direction of the judge, and found guilty of the larceny only. Frost, 188.

A very great influx of foreigners into Eng. land having been caused in the years 1792 and 1793, by the troubles on the continent, certain acts were passed (stat. 33 G. 3. c. 4. and 34 G. 3. c. 43. 67.), commonly called the Alien Acts, compelling the masters of ships arriving from foreign parts, under certain penalties, to give an account at every port of the number and names of every foreigner on board to the custom-house officers; appointing justices and others to grant passports to such aliens; and giving the king power to restrain and to send them out of the kingdom, on pain of transportation, and, on their return, of death. The same act also directed an account to be delivered of the arms of aliens, which, if required, were to be delivered up, and aliens were not to go from one place to another in the kingdom without passports. These regulations were from time to time altered and amended by various temporary acts. See 54 G. 2. c. 155. passed on the expiration of war; 55 G. 3. c. 54. on the renewal of war; and 56 G. 3. c. 86. containing provisions similar to those of the act 54 G. 3.

The following is an abstract of the last act (7 G. 4. c. 54.) passed on this subject, and which supersedes all the former enactments. and may be termed the Peace Alien Act:-Masters of vessels arriving from foreign parts shall declare what aliens are on board or have landed; penalty 20l. and 10l. for each alien; not to extend to foreign mariners navigating the vessel: § 2. Alien arriving from abroad, or passing from Great Britain into Ireland, shall declare his name, description, &c. and deliver up his passport to officer of customs; penalty 51.: § 3. Officer of customs shall register the alien's declaration, dedeliver him a certificate, and transmit declaration, &c. to chief secretary's office: § 4, 5. | life, by livery, alien in fee, or make a lease Such alien, within one week after arrival in Ireland, shall transmit certificate to the chief secretary, and make declaration where he intends to reside: § 6. Alien shall transmit declaration of residence half-yearly, within one week after 1st January and 1st July: § 7. Chief secretary may require more frequent declarations: § 8. Penalty on alien for false declarations, or neglecting to make the same, not exceeding 50l. or six months' imprisonment, on conviction by two justices: § 9. Certificate shall be sent from chief secretary's office to the alien, setting forth his name, place of abode, &c. Penalty on alien not having, or refusing to produce, certificate, or residing elsewhere, 201.: § 10. Alien, on departure, may have his passport returned, and sent to the port, to be delivered to him on making declarations of departure to officer of customs, to be transmitted to chief secretary: § 11. New certificates to be issued in lieu of such as are lost: § 12. Certificate to be granted without fee; penalty 201.: § 13. Penalty for forging, &c. of certificate, &c. 501.: § 14. Prosecution of offences before two justices of peace: § 15. Not to affect foreign ministers, or their registered domestic servants; nor aliens having been resident seven years, and obtained certificate thereof; nor (in respect of penalties) any alien under four-teen years: § 16. Proof of not being an alien shall lie on the party: § 16.

By stat. 45 G. 3. c. 32. aliens residing (during the war) in any place surrendered to his majesty, were empowered to act as merchants or factors, taking the oath of allegiance.

See 58 G. 3. c. 97. (a temporary act) that no alien shall become a naturalized subject or denizen in any other manner, or by any other authority, than by act of parliament or letters of denization.

By the various acts of parliament abovementioned, most, if not all, of the niceties of the old law relative to aliens are obviated, and reduced to plain and intelligible rules. See 1 Comm. 366-375: 1 Inst. 2. and 8. and the notes there: and 7 Rep. Calvin's case. to descents between aliens collaterals, Collingwood v. Place, 1 Vent. 413: 1 Sid. 193: and this Dict. tit. Descent. See also tit. Abatement.

ALIENATION, from alienare, to alien.] A transferring the property of a thing to another: it chiefly relates to lands and tenements; as to alien land in fee, is to sell the fee-simple thereof, &c. And to alien in mortmain, is to make over lands or tenements to a religious house or body politic. Fines for alienations are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. except fines due by particular customs of manors. All persons who have a right to lands may generally alien them to others: but some alienations are forbidden: as an alienation by a particular tenant, such as tenant for life, &c. which incurs a forteiture of the estate. Co. Lit. 118. For if lessee for case.

for the life of another, or a gift in tail, it is a forfeiture of his estate: so if tenant in dower, tenant for another's life, tenant for years, &c. do alien for a greater estate than they lawfully may make. Co. Lit. 233. 251. Conditions in foeffments, &c., that the foeffee shall not alien, are void. Co. Lit. 206: Hob. 261. And it is the same where a man, possessed of a lease for years, or other thing, gives and sells his whole property therein, upon such condition: but one may grant an estate in fee, on condition that the grantee shall not alien to a particular person, &c. And where a reversion is in the donor of an estate, he may restrain an alienation by condition. Lit. 361: Wood's Inst. 141. Estates in tail, for life, or years, where the whole interest is not parted with, may be made with condition not to alien to others, for the preservation of the lands granted in the hands of the first grantee.

ALIMENT. A fund of maintenance.

ALLEGIANCE, allegiantia, formerly called ligeance, from the Latin alligare, and ligare; i. e. ligamen fidei.] The natural, and lawful, and faithful obedience which every subject owes to his prince. It is either perpetual, where one is a subject born, or where one hath the right of a subject by naturalization, &c.; or it is temporary, by reason of residence in the king's dominions. To subjects born, it is an incident inseparable; and, as soon as born, they owe by birth-right obedience to their sovereign: and it cannot be confined to any kingdom, but follows the subject wheresoever he goeth. The subjects are hence called liege people, and are bound by this allegiance to go with the king in his wars, as well within as without the kingdom. 1 Inst. 129, a: 2 Inst. 741: 7 Co. 4 Carvin's

It was said that the court might judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them; and cited Robert's case in the time of Lord Cutline; and Coke said, that so was the case of Galery v. Banbury, and judgment accordingly; 1 Leo. 242. pl. 328: Pasch. 29 Eliz. B. R. Page v. Fawcett. Cro. Eliz. 227. pl. 12. S. C.; and held that examination by almanacks was sufficient, and a trial per pais not necessary, though error assigned, viz. that the 16th Feb., on which day judgment was said to be given, was on a Sunday, was an error in fact; and the judgment was reversed. Almanacks are liable to a stamp duty under several statutes.

ALMARIA, for armaria. The archives, or, as they are sometimes styled, muniments of a church or library. Gervas, Dorob. in R. 2.

ALMNER, or ALMONER, eleemosynarius.] An officer of the king's house, whose business it is to distribute the king's alms every day. He ought to admonish the king to bestow his alms, especially upon saints' days and holidays; and he is likewise to visit the sick, widows that are poor, prisoners, and other necessitous people, and to relieve them under their wants; for which purpose he hath the forfeitures of deodands, and the goods of felo's de se, allowed him by the king. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 22. The lord almoner has the disposition of the king's dish of meat, after it comes from the table, which he may give to whom he pleases; and he distributes four-pence in money, a two-penny loaf of bread, and a gallon of beer; or instead thereof, three-pence daily at the court-gate to twenty-four poor persons of the king's parish, to each of them that allowance. This officer is usually some particularly the measuring with an ell.

ALNAGER, or aulnager, Fr. alner, Lat. ulniger.] Is properly a measure by the ell; and the word aulne in French signifieth an at the council of Nice they made a calculation ell. An aulnager was heretofore a public sworn officer of the king's, whose place it was, into private hands, by whom they may be alto examine into the assise of cloths made throughout the land, and to fix seals upon them; and another branch of his office was to collect a subsidy or aulnage duty granted to the king on all cloths sold. He had his power by stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 4. c. 1., and several other ancient statutes; which appointed his fees, and inflicted a punishment for putting his seal to deceitful cloth, &c. viz. a forfeiture of his office, and the value. 27 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 4: 3. R. 2. c. 2. There were afterwards three officers belonging to the regulation of clothing, who bear the distinct names of searcher, measurer, and aulnager; all which were formerly comprised in one person. 4 Inst. 31: Cowel.

By 11 and 12 W. 3. c. 20. alnage duties are taken away in England, and in Ireland by 57 G. 3. c. 109.

DE ALTA ripa. Dantry.

ALTERAGE, altaragium.] The offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. Mich. 21 Eliz. It was declared that by altarage is meant tithes of wool, lambs, colts, calves, pigs, chickens, butter, cheese, fruits, herbs, and other small tithes, with the offerings due: the case of the vicar of West Haddon, in Northamptonshire. But the word altarage at first is thought to signify no more than the casual profits arising to the priest from the people's voluntary oblations at the altar; out of which a portion was assigned by the parson to the vicar: since that, our parsons have generally contented themselves with the greater profits of glebe, and tenths of corn and hav; and have left the small tithes to the officiating priests: and hence it is that vicarages are endowed with Terms de Ley, 39: 2 Cro. 516.

It seems to be certain that the religious. when they allotted the altarage in part, or in whole, to the vicar or chaplain, did mean only the customary and voluntary offerings at the altar, for some divine office or service of the priest, and not any share of the standing tithes, whether predial or mixt. Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. Gloss.

In the case of Franklyn, and the master and brethren of St. Cross, T. 1721, it was decreed, that where altaragium is mentioned in old endowments, and supported by usage, it will extend to small tithes, but not otherwise. Bunb. 79.

AMBACTUS. A servant or client, Cowel. AMBASSADOR, legatus.] A person sent by one sovereign [power] to another with authority by letters of credence, to treat on affairs of state. 4 Inst. 153. And ambassadors are either ordinary or extraordinary; the ordinary ambassadors are those who reside in the place whither sent; and the time of their return being indefinite, so is their business uncertain, arising from emergent occasions; and commonly the protection and affairs of the merchants is their greatest care: the extraordinary ambassadors are made pro tempore, and employed upon some particular great affairs, as condolements, congratulations, or for overtures of marriage, &c. Their equipage is generally very magnificent: and they may return without requesting leave, unless there be a restraining clause in their commission. Molloy, 144.

An agent represents the affairs only of his master: but an ambassador ought to represent the greatness of his master, and his affairs. Ibid. By the laws of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send any ambassador; a king that is deprived of his kingdom and royalty, hath lost his right of legation. No subject, though ever so great, can send or receive an ambassador; and if a viceroy does it, he will be guilty of high treason: the electors and princes of Germany have the privilege of sending and reception of ambassadors; but it is limited only to matters touching their own territories, and not of the state of the empire. It is said there can be no ambassador without letters of credence from his sovereign, to another that hath sovereign authority: and if a person be sent from a king or absolute potentate, though in his letters of credence he is termed an agent, yet he is an ambassador, he being for the public.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where sent; and if they then do it, they shall be taken for enemies; but being once admitted, even with enemies in arms, they shall have the protection of the laws of nations, and be preserved as princes. Moll. 146. If a banished man be sent as an ambassador to the place from whence he is banished, he may not be detained or molested there. 4 Inst. 153. But if he be not received or admitted as ambassador. he has no privilege as such; and an ambassador sent; or in respect of the person sent; as if ties and corporate punishments as the lord he is notoriously flagitious; or if he be disagreeable to the state to which he is sent. An ambassador ought not, however, to be refused without cause. See Grotius and Molloy, cited Com. Dig. tit. Ambassador. The killing of an ambassador has been adjudged high treason. 3 Inst. 8. Some ambassadors are allowed, by concession, to have jurisdiction over their own families; and their houses permitted to be sanctuaries; but where persons, who have greatly offended, fly to their houses, after demand and refusal to deliver them up, they may be taken from thence. Ambassadors cannot be defended when they commit any thing against the state, or the person of the king with whom they reside. 4 Inst. 152. An ambassador guilty of treason against the king's life, may be condemned and executed; but for other treasons he shall be sent home, with demand to punish him, or to send him back to be punished. 4 Inst. 152: 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra jus gentium, as treason, felony, &c. or any other crime against the law of nations, he loseth the privilege of an ambassador, and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be remanded to his sovereign, but of courtesy. Danv. Ab. But if a thing be only malum prohibitum by an act of parliament, private law or custom of the realm, and it is not contra jus gentium, an ambassador shall not be bound by them. 4 Inst. 153. And it is said umbassadors may be excused of practices against the state where they reside (except it be in point of conspiracy, which is against the law of nations), because it doth not appear whether they have it in mandatis; and then they are excused by necessity of obedience. Bac. Max. 26. See on the subject of an ambassador's responsibility for crimes, Bac. Ab. Ambassadors, vol. 1. 186. (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

By the civil law, the person of an ambassador may not be arrested; and the moveable goods of ambassadors, which are counted an accession to their persons, cannot be seized on, as a pledge, nor for payment of debts, though by leave of the king or state where they are resident; but on refusal of payment, letters of request are to go to his master, &c. Molloy, 157: Danv. 328. The law of nations touching ambassadors in its full extent, is part of the law of England; and the act 7 A.c. 12. is only declaratory. Barbuit's Case, Rep. temp. Ld. Talb. 281: and see 3 Burr. 1748.

By our statute law (stat. 7 A. c. 12.) an ambassador or public minister, or his domestic servants registered in the office of the principal secretaries of state, and thence transmitted to the sheriff's office of London and Middlesex, are not to be arrested; if they are, the process shall be void, and the persons suing may be refused in respect of him by whom out and executing it shall suffer such penalchancellor or either of the chief justices shall think fit. Also the goods of an ambassador shall not be distrained. Stat. ibid. See 1 Comm. 254. The persons claiming privilege as servants of an ambassador must be such as are really and bona fide retained and registered in that capacity; and the act itself (by sect. 5.) expressly prohibits its extension to merchants and traders liable to the statutes of bankruptcy. See Fitzgib. 200: Stra. 797: 1 Wils. 20. 78, 79: 3 Wils. 33: 2 Stra. 797: 2 Ld. Raym. 1524: 3 Burr. 1676: 4 Burr. 2016, 17: and Com. Dig. tit. Ambassador.

A resident merchant of London, who is appointed and acts as consul to a foreign prince, is not thereby exempted from arrest. 3 Maule

Where the wife of a foreign ambassador's secretary was arrested on a writ issued against husband and wife, the court refused to quash the writ, though the husband swore that before and at the time of the arrest he was in the actual employment of the ambassador. English v. Caballero, 3 D. & R. 25.

Where the servant of an ambassador did not reside in his master's house, but rented and lived in another, part of which he let in lodgings, it was held that his goods in that house not being necessary for the convenience of the ambassador, were liable to be distrained for poor rates. Novello v. Towgood, 1 Barn. 4 C. 554.

AMENABLE, Fr. amener.] To bring or lead unto; or amaniable, from the Fr. main, a hand.] Signifies tractable, that may be led or governed: and in our books it is commonly applied to a woman that is governable by her husband. Cowel Interp. It also, in the modern sense, signifies to be responsible, or subject to answer, &c. in a court of justice.

AMENDMENT, emendatio.] The correction of an error committed in any process, which may be amended after judgment; and the party is driven to his writ of error; though where the fault appears to be in the clerk who writ the record, it may be amended. Terms de Ley, 39.

At common law there was little room for amendments, which appears by the several statutes of amendments and jeofails, and like-wise by the constitution of the courts; for, says Britton, the judges are to record the parols [or pleas] deduced before them in judgment; also, says he, Ed. 1. granted to the justices to record the pleas pleaded before them; but they are not to erase their records, nor amend them, nor record against their inrollment, nor any way suffer their records to be a warrant to justify their own misdoings, nor erase their words nor amend them, nor record againsti their nrollment. This ordinance of Ed. 1. was so rigidly observed, that when justice Hengham, in his reign, moved with compassion for the circumstances of a poor man who was fined 13s. 4d. erased the record, and made it 6s. 8d. he was fined 800 marks, with which, it is said, a clock house at Westminster was built, and furnished with a clock; but as to the clock, it has been denied by authors of credit, clocks not being in use till a century afterwards. Notwithstanding what is mentioned above, there were some cases that were amendable at common law.

Original writs are not amendable at common law, for if the writ be not good, the party may have another; judicial writs may and have been often amended. 8 Rep. 157.

Whatever at common law might be amended in civil cases, was at common law amendable in criminal cases, and so it is at this day; resolved by Holt, Ch. J. Powell, and Powis, J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14. Although none of the statutes relating to amendments extend to appeals in criminal cases (3 Salk. 38.), yet the attorney-general may at any time amend a revenue information. 3 Anst. 714; and see 4 Term Rep. 457. And amendments upon information are made on application to a judge at his chambers. 4 Term Rep. 458.

Though misawarding of process on the roll might be amended at common law the same term, because it was the act of the court; yet if any clerk at common law issued out an erroneous process on a right award of the court, that was never amended in any case at the common law. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Anciently all pleas were ore tenus at the bar; and then if any error was espied in them, it was presently amended. Since that custom is changed, the motion to amend, because all in paper, succeeded in the room of it; and it is a motion that the court cannot refuse; but they may refuse it if the party desiring it refuse to pay costs, or the amendment desired should amount to a new plea. 10 Mod. 88.

Mistakes are now effectually helped by the statutes of amendment and jeofails; the lat-if there be any error in giving the judgment, any slip in the form of his proceeding, and acknowledges such error (jeo faile, or j'ai faille), he is at liberty by those statutes to amend it, which amendment is seldom actually made, but the benefit of the act is attained by the court overlooking the exception. 2 Stra. 1011. These statutes are in the whole twelve in number, and are here recapitulated chronologically, by which all trifling exceptions are so thoroughly guarded against, that writs of error cannot since be maintained, but for some material mistake assigned. 3 Comm. 407. which see, and Buller's Ni. Pri. (Ed. 1793) 320. And for a more extended view of the cases in which amendments may or may not be made, see Com. Dig. tit. Amendment.

By stat. 14 Ed. 3. 6. no process shall be annulled or discontinued, by the misprision of the clerk in mistaking in writing one syllable or one letter too much or too little, but it shall

The judges afterwards construed this statute so favourably, that they extended it to a word; but they were not so well agreed, whether they could make these amendments, as well after as before judgment; they thought their authority was determined by the judgment; therefore by stat. 9 H. 5. c. 4. it is declared that the judges shall have the same power, as well after as before judgment, as long as the record in process is before them. Gilb. H. C. B. 110.

This statute is confirmed by stat. 4 H. 6. c. 3. with an exception, that it shall not extend to process on outlawry, or to records or processes in Wales. But according to 2 Sand. 40. this last exception, and the like exception in 8 H. 6. c. 15. seem to be annulled by the statute 27 H. 8. c. 26. by which it is enacted, that the laws of England shall be used, practised, and executed in Wales.

Though the foregoing statutes gave the judges a greater power than they had before, yet it was found that they were too much cramped, having authority to amend nothing but process, which they did not construe in a large signification, so as to comprehend the whole proceedings in real and personal actions, and criminal and common pleas, but confined it to the mesne process and jury process; 8 Co. 157. And therefore, to enlarge the authority of the courts, the stat. 8 H. 6. c. 12. gives power to amend what they shall think in their discretion to be the misprision of their clerks, in any record, process, and plea, warrant of attorney, writ, or pannel, or return. Gilb. H. C. B. 110.

There are only two statutes of amendments: viz. 14 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 6. and 8 H. 6. c. 12 & 15; the rest are reckoned to be statutes of jeofails, and not of amendments; per Powell, J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14. Mich. 3 A. B. R. in the case of The Queen v. Tutchin.-And ibid. he he held that the 8 H. 6. was only to enlarge the subject matter of 14 Ed. 3. and that 14 Ed. 3. extends only to process out of the roll, ter so called, because when a pleader perceived | viz. writs that issue out of the record, and not to proceedings in the roll itself: but that the 14 Ed. 3. extends not to the king, because of these words (challenge of the party), and that the stat. 8 H. 6. has always been construed in limitation of the act of Ed. 3.; and the exception in the statute of H. 6. was only ex abundanti cautela; and all judges and sages of the law in all ages have taken it not to extend to the crown; and the cases on the other side are not to be relied upon.

bringing into court of any bond, bill, or deed, or of alleging or bringing in letters testamentary, or of administration; or for the omission of vi et armis, or contra pacem, mistaking the Christian name or surname of either party, or the sum of money, day, month, or year, &c. in any declaration or pleading, being rightly named in any record, &c. preceding; nor for want of the averment of hoc paratus est verificare, or for not alleging prout

By stat. 8 H. 6. c. 15. "The king's justices, before whom any misprision shall be found, be it in any records and processes depending before them, as well by way of error as otherwise, or in the returns of the same, by sheriffs, coroners, bailiffs of franchises, or any other, by misprision of the clerks of any of the said courts, or of the sheriffs, coroners, their clerks, or other officers, clerks, or other ministers whatsoever, in writing one letter or one syllable too much or too little, shall have power to amend the same."

As these statutes only extended to what the justices should interpret the misprision of their clerks, and other officers, it was found by experience, that many just causes were overthrown for want of form, and other failings, not aided by this statute, though they were good in substance, and therefore the statutes of jeofail were made. Gilb. H. C. B.

By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 30. it is enacted, "That if the jury have once passed upon the issue, though afterwards there be found a jeofaile in the proceedings, yet judgment shall be given according to the verdict." The stat. 18 Eliz. c. 14. ordains, "That after verdict given in any court of record, there shall be no stay of judgment, or reversal, for want of form in a writ, count, plaint, &c., or for want of any writ original or judicial; or by reason of insufficient returns of sheriffs, &c." By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 13. " If a verdict shall be given in any court of record, the judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for variance in form between the original writ or bill and the declaration, &c., or for want of averment of the party's being living, so as the person is proved to be in life; or for that the venire facias is in part misawarded; for misnomer of jurors, if proved to be the persons returned; want of returns of writs, so as a pannel of jurors be returned and annexed to the writs; or for that the return-officer's name is not set to the return, if proof can be made that the writ was returned by such officer, &c."

The stat. 16 and 17 Car. 2. c. 8. (called by Twisden, J. an? omnipotent act, 1 Vent. 100; and made perpetual by stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 4.) enacts, "That judgment shall not be stayed or reversed after verdict in the courts of record at Westminster, &c. for default in form; or for that there are not pledges to prosecute upon the return of the original writ, or because the name of the sheriff is not returned upon it, for default of alleging and or of alleging or bringing in letters testamentary, or of administration; or for the omission of vi et armis, or contra pacem, mistaking the Christian name or surname of either party, or the sum of money, day, month, or year, &c. in any declaration or pleading, being rightly named in any record, &c. preceding; nor for want of the averment of hoc paratus est verificare, or for not alleging prout patet per recordum, for want of profert of deeds (stat. 4 and 5 A.), see Willes's Rep. 125. n. (d.) for that there is no right venire, if the cause was tried by a jury of the proper country. or place; nor shall any judgment after verdict, by confession, cognovit actionem, &c. be reversed for want of misericordia or capiatur, or by reason that either of them are entered, the one for the other, &c.; but all such defects, not being against the right of the matter of the suit, or whereby the issue or trial are altered, shall be amended by the judges; though not in suits of appeal, of felony, indictments, and informations, on penal statutes, which are excepted out of the act.

By stat. 4 and 5 A. c. 16. all the statutes of jeofails shall extend to judgments entered by confession, nil dicit or non sum informatus in any court of record, and no such judgment shall be reversed, nor any judgment or writ of inquiry of damages thereon shall be stayed for any defect which would have been aided by those statutes, if a verdict had been given, so as there be an original writ filed, &c .- By stat. 9 A. c. 20. § 7. this act, and all other statutes of jeofails are extended to writs of mandamus and informations in the nature of a quo warranto; the statutes of amendment and jeofails not being construed to extend to criminal proceedings, or on penal statutes in general. Bull. N. P. 325: 2 Mod. 144. But a mandamus may not be amended after return. 4 Term Rep. 689. The stat. 5 G. 1. c. 13. ordains, that, after verdict given, judgment shall not be stayed or reversed for defect in form or substance in any bill or writ, or for variance therein from the declaration, or any other proceedings. 25 G. 3. c. 80. § 17: Imp. K. B. 173. (1.)

By a recent statute (9 G. 4. c. 15.) any judge sitting at nisi prius, and any court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery in England, Wales, and Ireland (if such courts or judges shall see fit so to do) shall and may cause the record on which any trial may be pending before any such judge or court in any civil action, or in any indictment or information for any misdemeanor, when any variance shall appear between any matter in writing or in print produced in evidence, and the recital or setting forth thereof upon the record whereon the trial is pending, to be forthwith amended in such particular by some officer of the court on payment of such costs (if any) to the other party as such judge or court shall think reasonable, and thereupon the trial shall proceed as if no such | it is aided after verdict by statute, but when variance had appeared: and in case such trial shall be had at nisi prius, the order for the amendment shall be indorsed on the postea and returned together with the record; and thereupon the papers, rolls, and other records of the court from which such record issued shall be amended.

By the late act 1 W. 4. c. 70. § 27. the court of Common Pleas shall have the like power and authority to amend the records of fines and recoveries passed in any of the Welsh courts abolished by that act, as if the same had been levied, suffered, or had, in the court of Common Pleas.

By the foregoing statutes (from 14 E. 3. c. 6. to 8 H. 6. c. 15.) the faults and mistakes of clerks are in many cases amendable: the misprision of a clerk in matter of fact is amendable; though not in matter of law. Palm. 258. If there be a mistake in the legal form of the writ, it is not amendable: there is a diversity between the negligence and ignorance of the clerk that makes out writs; for his negligence (as if he have the copy of a bond, and do not pursue it) this shall be amended; but his ignorance in the legal course of original writs is not amendable. 8 Rep. 159. A party's name was mistaken in an original writ; and it appearing to the court that the cursitor's instructions were right, the writ was amended in court; and they amended all the proceedings after. 2 Vent. 152: Cro. Car. 74. If a thing which the plaintiff ought to have entered himself, being a matter of substance, be totally omitted, this shall not be amended; but otherwise it is, if omitted only in part and misentered. Danv. Ab. 346. By the common law a writ of error, returned and filed, could not be amended; because it would alter the record: but now by stat. 5 G. 1. the writs of error, wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended, by the court where returnable. See tit. Error.

In an assumpsit, the defendant pleads Not Guilty, thereupon issue is joined, and found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment, though it is an improper issue in this action; for as there is a deceit alleged, Not Guilty is an answer thereto, and it is but an issue misjoined, which is aided by stat. Cro. Eliz. 407. If in debt upon a single bill, the defendant pleads payment, without an acquittance, and issue is joined and found for the plaintiff, though the payment without acquittance is no plea to a single bill, he shall have judgment, because the issue was joined upon an affirmative and a negative and a verdict for the plain-Mich. 37 and 38 Eliz.: 5 Rep. 43. An ill plea and issue may be aided by the statute of jeofails, after a verdict: and if an issue joined be uncertain and confused, a verdict will help it. Cro. Car. 316: Hob. 113. The statutes likewise help when there is no original; and where there is no bill upon the file, shall be amended by the imparlance roll which there is an original, which is ill, that is not aided. Cro. Jac. 185. 480: Cro. Car. 282. The statute of jeofails, 16 and 17 Car. 2. helps a mistrial in a proper county, but not where the county is mistaken. 1 Mod. 24.

When the award of a writ of inquiry on the roll is good, the writ shall be amended by the roll. Carth. 70. The court cannot amend to make a new writ; or to alter a good writ, and adapt it to another purpose, &c. only when the writ is bad and vicious on the face Mod. Cas. 263, 316.

With respect to declarations a declaration grounded on an original writ may not be amended, if the writ be erroneous: though if it be on a bill of Middlesex or a latitat, it is amendable. 1 Lill. Ab. 67. But see tit. Original for the new act abolishing proceedings by original and bill of Middlesex.

A plaintiff may amend his declarations in matter of form after a general issue pleaded, before entry thereof, without payment of costs; if he amend in substance, he is to pay costs, or give imparlance; and if he amend after a special plea, though he would give imparlance, he must pay costs. 1 Lill. 58: 1 Wils. 78: Imp. K. B. 181. A declaration in ejectment laid the demise before the time; this was not amendable, for it would alter the issue, and make a new title in the plaintiff. 1 Salk. 48. The plaintiff declared on the statute of Winton for a robbery done to himself, when it should have been of his servants; he had leave to amend. 3 Lev. 347. If a defendant pleads a plea to the right, or in abatement, the plaintiff may amend his declaration, but not where he demurs, for his fault may be the cause of the demurrer. 1 Salk. 50. A demurrer may be amended after the parties have joined in demurrer if it be only in paper. Style, 48. Where a plea shall be amended, when in paper, or on record, &c. see the statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 26.

As to the amendments of records, &c. an issue entered upon record, with leave of the court, may be amended; but not in a material thing, or in that which will deface the record. 1 Lill. Abr. 61. A record may be amended by the court in a small matter, after issue joined, so as the plea be not altered. Danv. Abr. 338. See the stat. 8 H. 6. cc. 12. 15. ante. AMERCIAMENT, amerciamentum (from the Fr. merci), signifies the pecuniary punishment of an offender against the king or other lord in his court, that is found to be in misericordia, i. e. to have offended, and to stand at the mercy of the king or lord. The author of Terms de Ley saith, that amerciament is properly a penalty assessed by the peers or equals of the party amerced, for the offence done; for which he putteth himself at the mercy of the Terms de Ley, 40. And by the statute of Magna Charta, c. 14. a freeman is not to be amerced for a small fault, but proportionable to the offence, and that by his peers. 9 H. 3. c. 4. amerciaments are a more merciful penalty than a fine; for which if they are too grievous, a release may be sued by an ancient writ founded on Magna Charta, called moderata misericordia. See New Nat. Brev. 167: F. N. B. 76. The difference between amerciaments and fine is this; fines are said to be punishments certain, and grow expressly from some statute: but amerciaments are such as are arbitrarily imposed. Kitch. 78. Also fines And see the statute 5 Eliz. c. 9. against perare imposed and assessed by the court: amerciaments by the country; and no court can impose a fine, but a court of record: other courts can only amerce, 8 Rep. 39. 41.

A court-lect can amerce for public nuisances only. 1 Saund. 135. For a fine and all amerciaments in a court-leet, a distress is incident of common right; but for amerciament in a court baron, distress may not be taken but by prescription. 11 Rep 45. When an amerciament is agreed on, the lord may have an action of debt, or distrain for it, and impound the distress, or sell it at his pleasure; but he cannot imprison for it. 8 Rep. 41. 45. Vide the case of the Duke of Bedford v. Alcock, B. R. 1 Wils. 248. See tit. Leet.

There is also amercement in pleas in the courts of record, when a defendant delays to tender the thing demanded by the king's writs, on the first day. Co. ANCIENT DEMESNE, or domain; vetus all the manors belonging to the crown in the days of St. Edward and William, called the Conqueror, were held. The number and names of all manors, after a survey made of them, were written in the book of Domesday; and those which by that book appear to have at that time belonged to the crown and are contained under the title terra regis, are called ancient demesne. Kitch. 98. The lands which were in the possession of Edward the Confessor, and were given away by him, are not at this day ancient demesne, nor any others, except those writ down in the book of Domesday; and therefore, whether such lands are ancient demesne or not, is to be tried only by that book. 1 Salk. 57: 4 Inst. 269; Hob. 188: 1 Brownl. 43: F. N. B. 16 D.

But if the question is, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demesne, this shall be tried by a jury. For 'parcel or not parcel' is matter of fact. 9 Rep. case of the Abbot of Strata Marcella, Salk. 56. 774:

and see 2 Burr. 1046.

The qualities and privileges of ancient demesne are very different from, and some of them are hardly reconcileable with, the notion of its being a species of copyhold. Scriven (on Copyholds, 656) states that there are three sorts of tenants in ancient demesne; one, those who hold their lands freely by the grant of the king; a second who hold of a manor which is ancient demesne, but not at the will of the lord, and whose estates pass by surrender or deed and admittance, and who are denominated customary freeholders; and a third, who hold of a manor which is ancient demesne by copy of court roll at the will of the lord, and are denominated copyholders of base tenure; which latter cannot maintain a writ of right close, or monstraverunt, but are to sue by plaint in the lord's court.

In the cases generally this fact is overlooked, though it is very important, as making even the highest privileges and the freest qualities not unreasonable with reference to some tenants in ancient demesne, to whom probably they ought to be confined.

Whatever be the kind of ancient demesne which a manor is pleaded to be, the truth of such plea is always tried by Domesday Book, which has therefore been called Liber Judicatorius. This book contains a survey of all manors throughout England, except those in the four northern counties and in part of Lancashire. It has been lately reprinted with great fidelity and correctness by order of government, as well as a valuable supplement, called the Boldon Book, which contains a similar survey of the palatinate of Durham, made by order of Bishop Pudsey, nephew to King Stephen, in the year 1183.

Fitzherbert tells us, that tenants in ancient demesne had their tenures from ploughing the patrimonium domini.] Is a tenure whereby, account they had liberties granted them. F. N. B. 14. 228. And there were two sorts of these tenures and tenants; one that held their lands freely by charter; the other by copy of court roll, according to the custom of the manor. Brit. c. 66. The tenants holding by charter cannot be impleaded out of their manor; for if they are, they may abate the writ by pleading their tenure: they are free from toll, for all things bought and sold concerning their substance and husbandry. And they may not be impanelled upon an inquest. F. N. B. 14. If tenants in ancient demesne are returned on juries, they may have a writ de non ponendis in assisis, &c. and attachment against the sheriff. 1 Rep. 105. And if they are disturbed by taking duties of toll, or by being distrained to do unaccustomed services, &c. they may have writs of monstraverunt, to be discharged. See F. N. B. 14: New Nat. Bar. 32. 35: 4 Inst. 269. These tenants are free as to their persons; and their privileges are supposed to commence by act of parliament; for they cannot be created by grant at this day. 1 Salk. 57.

Lands in ancient demesne are extendible upon a statute merchant, staple, or elegit. 4 Inst. 270. No lands ought to be accounted ancient demesne but such as are held in socage: and whether it be ancient demesne or not, shall be tried by the book of Domesday. A lessee for years cannot plead in ancient demesne: nor can a lord in action against him plead ancient demesne, for the land is frank-free in his hands. Danv. Abr. 660.

In real actions, ejectment, replevin, &c. ancient demesne is a good plea; but not in actions merely personal. Danv. 658. If in ancient demesne a writ of right close be brought, and prosecuted in nature of a formedon; a fine levied there by the custom, is a bar: and if this judgment be reversed in C. B. that court shall only adjudge that the plaintiff be restored to his action in the court of ancient demesne; unless there is some other cause, which takes away its jurisdiction. Jenk. Cent. 87: Dyer, 373. See the statutes 9 H. 4. c. 5. and 8. H. 6. c. 26. to prevent depriving lords in ancient demesne of their jurisdiction by collusion.

A fine in the king's courts will change ancient demesne to frank-fee at common law; so if the lord enfeoffs another of the tenancy; or if the land comes to the king, &c. 4 Inst. 270. See Fine. But if the lord be not a party, he may have a writ of disceit, and avoid the fine or recovery; for lands in ancient demesne were not originally within the jurisdiction of the courts of Westminster; but the tenants thereof enjoy this amongst other privileges, not to be called from the business of the plough by any foreign litigation. 1 Roll. Abr. 327. If the lord be party, then the lands become frank-fee, and are withking's lands, and other works towards the in the jurisdiction of the courts of Westmaintenance of the king's freehold, on which minster; for the privilege of ancient demesne being established for the benefit of lord and luti sucurrebant. And the word sucurrendum, tenant, they may destroy it at pleasure.

Roll. Abr. 324: 1 Salk. 57.

With respect to pleading, it is to be observed, that in all actions wherein, if the demandant recover, the lands would be frank-fee, ancient demesne is a good plea. 1 Roll. Abr.

Therefore in all actions real, or where the realty may come in question, ancient demesne is a good plea; as assise, writ of ward of land, writ of account against a bailiff of a manor, writ of account against a guardian, &c. See 4 Inst. 270: 1 Roll, Abr. 322, 323.

In replevin ancient demesne is a good plea. because by intendment the freehold will come in question. Godb. 64: 1 Bulst. 108.

In an ejectione firmæ ancient demesne is a good plea; for by common intendment the right and title of the lands will come in question; and if in this action it should not be a good plea, the ancient privileges of those tenants would be lost, inasmuch as most titles at this day are tried by ejectment. Hob. 47: 1 Bulst. 108: Hetl. 177: Cro. Eliz. 826.

But in all actions merely personal, as debt upon a lease, trespass quare clausum fregit, Sc. ancient demesne is no plea. Hob. 47: 5 Cro. 105. For farther matter see Kyd's ANNUITY, Annuus redditus.] A yearly payment of a certain sum of money, granted to another for life, for years, or in fee, to be received of the grantor or his heirs, so that no freehold be charged therewith; whereof a man shall never have assise or other action, but a writ of annuity. Terms de Ley, 44: Reg. Orig. 158: Co. Lit. 144. b.

To make a good grant of an annuity, no particular technical mode of expression is necessary. For if a man grants an annuity to another, to be received out of his coffers, or to be received out of a bag of money, or to be received of a stranger, yet this is sufficient to charge his person, and the subsequent words shall be rejected. 1 Roll. Abr. 227.

If a man grant a rent out of land, in which he has nothing, proviso that he be not charged for this in a writ of annuity, it shall be a good annuity; for the proviso, being repugnant, is void. Co. Lit. 146. a: 2 Bulst. 149: see 6

Co. 58. b.

If a man grant a rent charge out of his land, the grantee has an election to take it as a rent; or as an annuity. Lit. sect. 219; 2 Bulst. 148: 2 Comm. 40.

The treatise called Doctor and Student, dial. 1. cap. 3. shows several differences between a rent and an annuity, viz. that every rent is issuing out of land; but an annuity chargeth the person only, as the grantor and his heirs, who have assets by descent.

If no lands are bound for the payment of an annuity, a distress may not be taken for it.

Dyer, 65.

But if an annuity issue out of land (which of late it often doth), the grantee may bring a writ of annuity, and make it personal, or an assise, or distrain, &c. so as to make it real. Co. Lit. 144. And if the grantee take a distress, vet he may afterwards have a writ of annuity, and discharge the land, if he do not avow the taking, which is in nature of an action. 1 Inst. 145. But if the grantee of a rent bring an assise for it, he shall never after have writ of annuity; he having elected this to be a rent; so if the grantee of an annuity avow the taking of a distress in a court of record. Danv. Abr. 486. And if the grantee purchase part of the land out of which an annuity is issuing he shall never after have a Co. Lit. 148. writ of annuity.

Where a rent charge, issuing out of lands, granted by tenant for life, &c. determines by the act of God; as an interest was vested in the grantee, it is in his election to make it a rent-charge, and so charge the lands therewith, or a personal thing to charge the person of the grantor in annuity. 2 Rep. 36. When a man recovers in a writ of annuity he shall not have a new writ of annuity for the arrears due after the recovery, but a scire facias upon the judgment, the judgment being always executory. 2 Rep. 37. No writ of annuity lieth for arrearages only when an annuity is determined, but for the annuity and arrearages. Co. Lit. 285. When an annuity is granted to one for life, during the term he shall have a writ of annuity; and when that is determined, then his executors may have action of debt: for the realty is resolved into the personalty. 4 Rep. 49: New Nat. Br. 287. An action of debt doth not lie for the arrears of the annuity, if the grantee have a freehold in it, as long as the freehold estate endures, for it is a real interest. Webb v. Jiggs, 4 Maule & S. 113: Kelly v. Clubbe, 3 Bro. & Bing. 130.

If the annuitant of an annuity payable half-yearly, since the last term of payment, die before the half year is completed, nothing is due for the time he lives. 3 Atk. 260. So

Upon a rent created by way of reservation, no writ of annuity lies. Danv. 483. Writ of annuity may not be had against the grantor's heir, unless the grant be for him and his heirs; and there must be assets to bind the heir, by grant of annuity by his ancestor, when he is named. Co. Lit. 144: 1 Roll. Ab. 226. But it is otherwise in case of the grant of a rent out of land, or a grant of a rent whereof the grantor is seised, for this charges the land, but an annuity charges the person only. Br. the cause and consideration of the grant amount to a condition, and the one ceases, the other shall determine. Co. Lit. 204. There are now very few, if any, grants of annuities, without a covenant for payment, expressed or implied; and therefore, where a distress cannot be made, or is not approved of, the grantee may bring an action of covenant, and recover the arrears in damages, with costs of suit. And that action is now usually brought, real actions and writs of annuity being much out of use.

Annuities for Life. To guard against the fraudulent and oppressive practices of usurious money-lenders, exercised on young heirs and other necessitous persons entitled to property in expectancy, the legislature found it necessary to interpose by the act 17 G. 3. c. 26. repealed by 53 G. 3. c. 141. containing more specific regulations for the same pur-

By this latter act a memorial of every deed, bond, instrument, or other assurance, whereby any annuity or rent-charge shall be granted for one or more life or lives, or for term of years, or greater estate determinable on lives, shall, within thirty days of the execution [exclusive of the day of execution; 5 Term Rep. 283.] be enrolled in Chancery; such memorial to contain the date of the deed, the names of all the parties, and of all the witnesses; and to set forth the annual sum to be paid, the name of the person for whose life the annuity such deed and assurance shall be void. § 2, 3.

In every annuity-deed, &c., where the person to whom the annuity shall be granted or made payable, shall not be entitled thereto beneficially, the name of the party who is actually to take the annuity beneficially shall be described, in the same manner as is required in the enrollment. § 4.

Copies of the deeds or instruments for securing such annuities shall be given to the parties applying for the same; and on refusal may be obtained by an order of a judge of King's Bench or Common Pleas. § 5.

If any part of the consideration shall be returned to the party advancing the same, or if notes given as part of the consideration shall not be duly paid, or if the consideration is expressed to be paid in money, if any part shall be paid in goods, or if the consideration, or any part of it, be retained, under pretence of answering future payments, or under any other pretence; in any of the said cases the annuitant may apply to the court in which any action is brought, or judgment entered, by motion, to stay proceedings, and the court may order the assurance to be cancelled; and any judgment obtained to be vacated. § 6.

A book of enrollments shall be kept in Chancery by a clerk, whose fee for entering each enrollment is 20s., and 1s. for each certificate and search.

All contracts for the purchase of any annuity or rent-charge with any infant under 21 years of age shall be UTTERLY VOID; notwithstanding any attempt to confirm the same on the infant's coming of age. And all persons soliciting infants to grant annuities, or advancing money to them on condition of their granting annuities when of age, or engaging them by oath or promise not to plead infancy, shall be judged guilty of a misdemeanor. And solicitors or brokers demanding gratuities for procuring money (beyond ten shillings per cent.) shall also be judged guilty of misdemeanors; and all persons so guilty shall be liable to fine, imprisonment, and corporal punishment. § 8, 9.

This act does not extend to Scotland or Ireland, nor to any annuity given by will or marriage settlement, or for the advancement of a child; nor to any annuity secured on lands of equal annual value, over and above any other annuity secured thereon (2 Barn. & Adol. 315.), whereof the grantor is seised in fee-simple or fee-tail in possession, or which he is by law enabled to charge, or secured by actual transfer in the funds, the dividends being of equal value with the annuity; nor to any voluntary annuity without pecuniary consideration, nor to annuities granted by corporations, or under act of parliament. § 10.

The following determinations have been made in the courts on the act 17 G. 3. c. 26.

A deed, not registered according to the diis granted, the consideration, &c., in the form rections of the above act, is absolutely void, and not merely voidable. 2 Term Rep. 603. See also 4 Term Rep. 463. 494. 500. 694. 790. 824: and § 2 of 53 G. 3. c. 141. But see 6 B. & C. 652.

Notes given as part of the consideration (which if actually given bona fide are to be understood as money) must be circumstantially set out in the memorial, that the court may see whether a full consideration was given or not. 3 Term Rep. 218: 2 Mod. 402: 2 East, 137. The redemption of a former annuity, at a higher price than it was purchased at, is a good consideration. 5 Term Rep. 283.

If the security be set aside for want of complying with the formalities of the act, the consideration, if fair and legal, may be recovered back by the grantee in an action of assumpsit, against the person actually receiving such consideration-money, but not against a surety. 1 Term Rep. 732: 2 Term Rep. 366: 6 East, 241. But where the grantee of the annuity receives it regularly till his death, his executor cannot recover back the considerationmoney, on the ground that no memorial was chrolled. Davis v. Bryan, 6 Barn. & C. 651. The 4th sect. 17 G. 3. c. 26. which exactly corresponds with the 6th sect. (supra) of the 53 G. 3. c. 141. is held not imperative on the court, the words being, "it may be lawful for the court to order the deeds to be cancelled:" and the court has a discretionary power to examine whether unfair advantage has been taken of the grantor or not. See 1 Barn. & A. 61: 4 Barn. & A. 281: 6 Taunt. 8: Taunt. 596: Bac. Ab. Annuity. D. 3. (7th ed.)

Where the grantee of an annuity, set aside for a defective registry, brings an action for money had and received, to recover back the consideration-money paid for it, the grantor may, under a plea of set-off, set-off the payments made in respect of such annuity, though for more than six years, unless the plaintiff reply the statute of limitations. Hicks v. Hicks, 3 East, 16.

Where a rule nisi is obtained in B. R. for setting aside an annuity, the several objections thereto intended to be insisted on by counsel at the time of making such rule absolute, must be stated in the said rule nisi. Reg. Gen. T.

ANNUITIES OF TIENDS (or Tithes), are ten shillings out of the boll of teind wheat, eight shillings out of the boll of beer, six shillings out of the boll of rye, oats, and pease, allowed to the king yearly out of the teinds not paid to bishops, or set apart for other pious uses. Scotch Dict.

ANNUS DELIBERANDI, is the year allowed by the law of Scotland to the heir to deliberate whether he will enter and represent his ancestor. The entry of an heir has very scrious effects, and therefore he should have time to consider of the consequences; it is for this purpose the year is allowed to him. The annus deliberandi commences on the death of the ancestor, unless in the case of a posthumous heir, when the year runs from his birth. Scotch Dict.

ANTEJURAMENTUM, and Prajuramentum. By our ancestors called juramentum calumnia; in which both the accuser and the accused were to make this oath before any trial or purgation, viz. the accuser was to swear that he would prosecute the criminal; and the accused was to make oath on the very day that he was to undergo the ordeal, that he was innocent of the crime of which he was charged. Leg. Athelstan, apud Lambard, 23. If the accuser failed to take this oath, the criminal was discharged; and if the accused did not take his, he was intended to be guilty, and not admitted to purge himself. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 66.

APOSTATA CAPIENDO. A writ that formerly lay against one who, having entered and professed some order of religion, broke out again, and wandered up and down the country, contrary to the rules of his order; it was directed to the sheriff for the apprehension of the offender, and delivery of him again to his abbot or prior. Reg. Orig. 71. 267.

APOTHECARIES, are exempted from serving offices. See tit. Constable, Churchwarden. Their medicines are to be scarched and examined by the physicians chosen by the College of Physicians, and if faulty, shall be burnt, &c. 32 H. 8. c. 40: 1 M. st. 2. c. 9. See also statutes 10 A. c. 14: 10 G. 1. c. 20.

And apothecaries to the army are to make up | son to whom the succession will probably their chests of medicines at Apothecaries' Hall, there to be openly viewed, &c., under the penalty of 40l. See Physicians.

By stat. 55 G. 3. c. 194. the practice of apothecaries throughout England and Wales is regulated; and the powers of the Apothecaries' Company of London (incorporated by Jac. 1.) are extended and enlarged for the control of the regular practitioner, and for the preventing the intrusion of ignorant or mischievous pretenders, by a system of examina-tion and certificate by the company, and by officers appointed by them for that purpose; and a penalty of 201. is imposed on persons practising without having obtained such certificate. But this act does not affect the trade of chemists or druggists in buying, preparing, compounding, dispensing, and vending any drugs, medicines, or medicinal compounds.

Under this act a service of three years before its passing as house-apothecary to a public infirmary is sufficient to qualify the party to act as an apothecary. 1 Moore, 102: S. C.

But to come within the exception in § 20. of the act, the party claiming it must show that he was practising as an apothecary on the 1st of August, 1816. 5 B. & A. 949. APPARATOR, or APPARITOR. A messenger that serves the process of the spiritual court. His duty is to cite the offenders to appear; to arrest them; and to execute the sentence or decree of the judges, &c. See stat.

If a monition be awarded to an apparitor, to summon a man, and he, upon the return of the monition, avers that he had summoned him, when in truth he had not, and the defendant be thereupon excommunicated; an action on the case at common law will lie against the apparitor for the falsehood committed by flicted on him by the ecclesiastical court for such breach of trust. Ayl. Parerg. 70: 2 Bulst. 264.

APPARATOR COMITATUS. An officer formerly called by this name: for which the sheriffs of Buckinghamshire had a considerable yearly allowance; and in the reign of queen Elizabeth there was an order of court for making that allowance; but the custom and reason of it are now altered. Sher. Acco. 104.

APPARENT HEIR. In common language is applied to the eldest son as the per-open. But legally speaking, an apparent heir is the person to whom the succession has actually opened, and who remains apparent heir until his regular entry in the lands by service or by infettment on a precept of clare constat. Scotch Dict.

APPARURA. Furniture and implements. Carrutarum apparura is plough tackle, or all the implements belonging to a plough. Blount.

APPEAL, is used in two senses.

1. It signifies the removal of a cause from an inferior court or judge to a superior. From the French verb neuter, APPELLER, of the same signification. As relative to this sense see the proper titles in this Dictionary.

The term is particularly applied to the act of bringing a decision of the courts of Scotland or Ireland under a review of the House of Lords of the United Kingdom. This is done by presenting a petition of appeal, which states the ground of action and the judgment complained of, and prays that it may be re-

It may be well also in this place to observe the difference between an appeal from a court of equity, and a writ of error from a court of law. First, the former may be brought upon any interlocutory matter; the latter upon nothing but only a definitive judgment. Secondly, that on writs of error the House of Lords pronounces the judgment; on appeals it gives direction to the court below to rectify its own decree. 3 Comm. 55. See tit. Writ of Error, Audita Querela, &c.

2. When spoken of as a criminal prosecution, it denoted an accusation by a private subject against another for some heinous crime; demanding punishment on account of the particular injury suffered, rather than for the offence against the public. And in this sense it is derived from the French verb active, APPELLER, to call upon, sumom, or challenge one. 4 Comm. 312. Or the accusation of a felon at common law by one of his accomplices, which accomplice was then called an approver. (Sec tit. Accessary.) Co. Lit. 287. See also Bract. lib. 3: Brit. c. 22. 25: Staundf. lib. 2. c. 6.

CRIMINAL APPEALS were either capital or not capital. But of the latter sort appeals de pace, de plagis, de imprisonamento, and of mayhem, have long become obsolete, being turned into actions of trespass long since. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 235. Capital appeals were either of Treason or Fclony; and may be subdivided into—1. Appeals of Death, or, as they are otherwise called, Appeals of Murder. 2. Appeals of Larceny or Robbery. 3. Appeals of Rape. 4. Appeals of Arson, which last have long been obsolete. 1 Inst. 288, a: and sec 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23.

public crimes, probably had its original in those times when a private pecuniary satisfaction, or weregild, was constantly paid to the party injured, or his relations, to expiate enormous offences. As, therefore, during the continuance of this custom, a process was certainly given, for recovering the weregild by the party to whom it was due; it seems that when these offences, by degrees, grew no longer redeemable, the private process was still continued, in order to insure the infliction of punishment upon the offender, though the party injured was allowed no pecuniary compensation. 4 Comm. 313, 314.

It was also anciently permitted (as above hinted) for one subject to appeal another of high treason, either in the courts of common law (Brit. c. 22.), or in parliament; or for treasons committed beyond the seas, in the court of the high constable and marshal. The cognizance of appeals in the latter still continues in force; and so late as 1631 there was a trial by battle awarded in the court of chivalry on such appeal of treason [by Donald Lord Rae against David Ramsey. Rushw. vol. 2. part 2. p. 112.] But the cognizance of appeals for treason in the common law courts was virtually abolished by stat. 5 E. 3. c. 9. and 25 E. 3. [stat. 5. c. 4.] (1 Hale, P. C. 349. 359.) and in parliament expressly by stat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. See 4 Comm. 314.

All these criminal appeals are now put an end to by stat. 59 G. 3. c. 46. The proceedings therefore upon them are become matters of mere curiosity; and can scarcely be quoted even as analogous to any other criminal pro-ceedings. See Kendall's Argument on Trial by Battel, and for abolishing appeals, for an excellent summary of the more antiquated law on this subject. This statute was passed in consequence of the case of Ashford v. Thornton, 1 Barn. & A. 405.

APPEAL TO THE SESSIONS, from the convictions or orders of justices of the peace, is allowed by numerous statutes where the defendant is dissatisfied with their adjudication. See tit. Sessions.

APPEAL, High Court of, for Prizes. By 53 G. 3. c. 151. forging or uttering the name of the registrar of this court, or the court of admiralty, or his deputy, or any document made by them, is felony. This act is not repealed by the general forgery act, 1 W. 4. c. 66. See tit. Forgery.

APPEAL TO ROME. At the reformation in the reign of H. 8. the kingdom entirely renounced the authority of the see of Rome: and therefore by the several statutes 24 H. 8. c. 12. and 25 H. 8. c. 19. and 21. to appeal to Rome from any of the king's courts, (which though illegal before, had at times been connived at;) to sue to Rome for any license or dispensation; or to obey any process from thence, are made liable to the pains of pramunire; and by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1. to de-

Where an appeal in an ecclesiastical cause is made before the bishop, or his commissary, it may be removed to the archbisop; and if before an archdeacon, to the court of arches, and from the arches to the archbishop; and when the cause concerns the king, appeal may be brought in fifteen days from any of the said courts to the prelates in convocation. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12.—And the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. gives appeals from the archbishop's courts to the king in Chancery, who thereupon appoints commissioners finally to determine the cause; and this is called the court of delegates: there is also a court of commissioners of review; which commission the king may grant as supreme head, to review the definitive sentence given on appeal in the court of delegates.

APPEARANCE, (before the late act, 2 W. 4. c. 39. see post) signified the defendant's filing common or special bail, when he is served with copy of, or arrested on any process out of the courts at Westminster: and there could be no appearance in the court of B. R. but by special or common bail. are four ways for defendants to appear to actions; in person, or by attorney, by persons of full age; and by guardians, or next friends, by infants. Show. 165.

By the common law, the plaintiff or defendant, demandant or tenant, could not appear by attorney without the king's special warrant by writ or letters patent, but ought to follow his suit in his own proper person; by reason whereof there were but few suits. Co. Lit. 128: 2 Inst. 249. But it is now the common course for the plaintiff or defendant, in all manner of actions where there may be an attorney, to appear by attorney, and put in his warrant without any writ from the king for that purpose. And therefore, generally, in all actions real, personal, and mixt, the demandant or plaintiff, tenant or defendant, may appear by attorney. F. N. B. 26.

But in every case, where the party stands in contempt, the court will not admit him to appear by attorney, but oblige him to appear in person. As if he comes in by a cepi corpus upon an exigent. F. N. B. Or if he be outlawed. 2 Cro. 462. 616.

But by stat. 4 and 5 W. & M. c. 18. persons outlawed in any case, except for treason or felony, may appear by attorney to reverse the same without bail; except where special bail shall be ordered by the court.

In all cases, where process issues forth to take the party's body, if a common appearance only, and not special bail, is required, there every such party may appear in court in his proper person, and file common bail. 1 Lill. Ab. 85: Hill. 22 Car. B. R.

In a capital criminal case the party must always appear in person, and cannot plead by attorney: also in criminal offences, where an | act of parliament requires that the party should appear in person; and likewise in appeal, or on attachment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

On an indictment, information, or action, for any crime whatsoever under the degree of capital, the defendant may, by the favour of the court, appear by attorney; and this he may do as well before plea pleaded, as in the proceeding after, till conviction. 1 Lev. 146: Keilw. 165: Dyer, 346: Cro. Jac. 462.

If an idiot doth sue or defend, he cannot appear by guardian, prochein ami, or attorney, but must appear in proper person; but otherwise of him who becomes non compos mentis; for he shall appear by guardian if within age, or by attorney, if of full age. Co. Lit. 135. b: 2 Inst. 390: 4 Co. 124.

A corporation aggregate of many persons cannot appear in person, but by attorney, and such appearance is good. 10 Rep. 32. in the case of Sutton's Hospital.

If a man is bound to appear in court on the first day of the term, it shall be intended the first day in common understanding, viz. the first day in full term. 1 Lill. 83: 2 Leon. 4.

Attorneys subscribing warrants to appear, are liable to attachment, upon non-appearance. And where an attorney promises to appear for his client, the court will compel him to appear and put in common bail, in such time as is usual by the course of the court; and that although the attorney say he hath no warrant for appearance: nor shall repealing a warrant of attorney to delay proceedings, excuse the attorney for his not appearing, who may be compelled by the court. See Impey's Pract. K. B. 189. cites R. M. 1654. The defendant's attorney is to file his warrant the same term he appears, and the plaintiff the term he declares, under penalties by stat. 4 and 5 A. c.

An attorney is not compellable to appear for any one, unless he takes his fee, or back the warrant; after which the court will compel him to appear. 1 Salk. 87.

If an attorney appears, and judgment is entered against his client, the court will not set aside the judgment, though the attorney had no warrant, if the attorney be able and responsible; for the judgment is regular, and the plaintiff is not to suffer when in no default; but if the attorney be not responsible or suspicious, the judgment will be set aside; for otherwise the defendant has no remedy, and any one may be undone by that means. 1 Salk. 86.

Attachment denied by the court against an attorney, who appeared for the plaintiff without a warrant; but said an action on the case lies. Comb. 2.

It should also be remembered, that by the state 45 G. 3. c. 124. § 3. a common appearpearance may be entered by the plaintiffs, in actions against members of the House of Commons, if the defendant do not appear at the return of the summons, or within eight days after such return. Tidd, 120, 21. And by the annual marine and mutiny acts. (7 and 8 G. 4. c.4 .§ 130. c. 5. § 71.) a common appearance may be entered by the plaintiff, in actions against volunteer soldiers, or marines. Also, by statutes 43 G. 3. c. 46. § 2: and 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 71. § 2. the plaintiff is authorized to enter a common appearance, or file common bail for the defendant, after money has been deposited in the sheriff's hands (Tidd, 228), or paid into court (Tidd, 244), on those statutes, in case the defendant shall not duly put in, and perfect bail in action. And by the statutes 51 G. 3. c. 124. § 2; and 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 71. § 5. if the defendant, on being personally served with the summons or attachment by original, do not appear at the return of such writ, or of the distringas, as the case may be, or within eight days after the return thereof, the plaintiff, upon affidavit being made and filed in the proper court, of the personal service of such summons or attachment, or of the due execution of such distringas, &c. may enter a common appearance for the defendant, and proceed thereon, as if he had himself entered his appearance. Tidd, 114. 243. (9th ed.) A defendant who has been served with process by original, shall enter an appearance within four days of the appearance day, if the action is brought in London or Middlesex, or within eight days of the appearance day in other cases; otherwise the plaintiff may enter an appearance for him, according to the statute; and any attorney who undertakes to appear shall enter an appearance accordingly. Rule of H. T. 1832.

An appearance entered by plaintiff for defendant in a wrong name may be amended after declaration. 3 Wils. 49.

The act for uniformity of process, 2 W. 4. c. 39. has altered the mode of appearing in actions.

When the defendant has been personally within eight days inclusive after such service, cause an appearance to be entered for him, in the court out of which the writ issued; or in default of his so doing, the plaintiff may, by the terms of the writ, cause an appearance to be entered for him, and proceed thereon to judgment and execution. For this purpose an affidavit of the service of the writ should, it seems, be made, though it is not expressly required by the statute. "And the mode of appearance to every such writ shall be by delivering a memorandum in writing according to the form contained in the schedule of the act, and marked No. 2; such memorandum to be delivered to such officer or person, as the court out of which the process issued shall direct, and to be dated on the day of delivery thereof." For entering an appearance a fee of one shilling is allowed, by rule of court, for every defendant, unless an appearance shall be entered for more than one defendant, by the same attorney; and in that case a fee of fourpence for every additional defendant.

For the time and mode of appearance by the defendant, or his attorney, before the stat. 2 W. 4. c. 39. on a special original writ, in the King's Bench on Common Pleas, see Tidd's Prac. 9th ed. 110. 238; on stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 71. ib. 113, 114; in actions against peers, ib. 119; members of the House of Commons, ib. 120; or on common process against the person, by stat. 12 G. 1. c. 29. ib. 240; and by the plaintiff, or his attorney, on same stat., ib. 241, 242; on stat. 43 G. 3. c. 46. § 2. ib. 228. 243, 244; on stat. 45 G. 3. c. 124. ib. 120, 121. 243; on stat 51 G. 3. c. 124. ib. 113, 114, 243; on stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 71. § 2 ib. 228. 243, 244; on same stat. § 5. ib. 113, 114. 243: and on the annual mutiny and marine acts, ib. 243. It is not stated in the stat. 2 W. 4. c. 39. with what officer the appearance is to be entered; but it seems to have been previously entered with the filacer, in actions by original writ, in the King's Bench or Common Pleas; Tidd's Pract. 9th cd. 110; or against peers, ib. 119; with the clerk of the common bails, by bill against members of the House of Commons, ib. 120; or on common process, against the person, in the King's Bench, ib. 240: and in the Exchequer, on the appearance book, in the office of pleas, ib. 120.

Appendants are ever by prescription, and this makes a distinction between appendants and appurtenances, for appurtenances may be created in some cases at this day; as if a man at this day grant to a man and his heirs, common in such a moor for his beasts; levant or couching upon his manor; or if he grant to another common of estovers, or turbury in fee simple, to be burnt or spent within his manor; by these grants these commons are appurtenant to the manor, and shall pass by the grant thereof; in the civil law it is called adjunctum.

APPORTIONMENT, apportionamentum.] [all just allowances, or a proportionable part Is a dividing of a rent, &c. into parts, according as the land out of which it issues is divided among two or more. If a stranger recovers part of the land, a lessee shall pay, having regard to that recovered and what remains in his hands. Where the lessor recovers part of the land, or enters for a forfeiture into part thereof, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 148. If a man leases three acres, rendering rent, and afterwards grants away one acre, the rent shall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 144. Lessee for years leases for years, rendering rent, and after devises this rent to three persons, this rent may be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 505. If a lessee for life or years under rent surrenders part of the land, the rent shall be apportioned; but where the grantee of a rent-charge purchases part of the land, there all is extinct at law. Moor, 231. But he shall have relief in equity. Fon-blanque's Treatise of Equity, i. 379. A rent-charge, issuing out of land, may not be ap-portioned; nor shall things entire, as if one holds land by service to pay yearly to the lord, at such a feast, a horse, &c. Co. Lit. 149. But if part of the land, out of which a rent-charge issues, descends to the grantee of the rent, this shall be apportioned.

A grantee of rent releases part of the rent to the grantor, this doth not extinguish the residue, but it shall be apportioned: for here the grantee dealeth not with the land, only the rent. Co. Lit. 148. On partition of lands out of which a rent is issuing, the rent shall be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 507. And where lands held by lease, rendering rent, are extended upon elegit, one moiety of the rent shall be apportioned to the lessor. Ibid. 509. If part of lands leased is surrounded by fresh water, there shall be no apportionment of rent; but if it be surrounded with the sea, there shall be an apportionment of the rent. Dyer, 56.

The stat. 11 G. 2. c. 19. § 15. has in certain cases, altered the law as to the apportioning of rents in point of time; it being thereby enacted, "That if any tenant for life shall happen to die before, or on the day on which any rent was reserved, or made payable upon any demise or lease of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which determined on the death of any such tenant for life, that the executors or administrators of such tenant for life shall and may, in an action on the case. recover of and from such under-tenant or under-tenants of such lands, tenements, and hereditaments, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole, or if before such day, then a proportion of such rent according to the time such tenant for life lived, of the last year, or quarter of a year, or other time in which the said rent was growing due as aforesaid, making

Before this statute the rent, by the death of a tenant for life, was lost: for the law would not suffer his representative to bring an action for the use and occupation, much less if there was a lease, and the remainder-man had no right, because the rent was not due in his time; nor could equity relieve against this hardship by apportioning the rent. 1 P. Wms. 392. The legislature having, however, by the above statute, interposed in favour of tenants for life, its provisions have, by an equitable construction, been extended to tenants in tail. Amb. Rep. 198: 2 Bro. C. Rep. 659: Bac. Ab. Rent. H. (7th ed.)

But though the executor of tenant for life is now entitled to an apportionment of the rent, yet the dividends of money directed to be laid out in lands, and in the mean time to be invested in government securities, and the interest and dividends to be applied as the rents and profits would in case it were laid out in land, were held not to be apportionable, though tenant for life died in the middle of the half year. 3 Atk. 502: Amb. Rep. 279: 2 Vez. 672: and the authority of the case on the will of Lord C. J. Holt, 3 Vin. Abr. 18. pl. 3. was denied. But where the money is laid out in mortgage till a purchase could be made, the interest is apportionable. Wms. 176. This distinction, however, may be referred to interest on a mortgage, being in fact due from day to day, and so not properly an apportionment: whereas the divi-dends accruing from the public funds are made payable on certain days, and therefore not apportionable; and upon the principle of this distinction the master of the rolls decreed an apportionment of maintenance-money, it being for the daily subsistence of the infant. 2 P. Wms. 501: see also Mr. Cox's note (1): 13 Ves. 135: 11 Ves. 361. And the principle extending to a separate maintenance for a feme covert, such apportionment has, in such case, been allowed at law. 2 Black. Rep. Q. Whether equity would not apportion dividends of money in the funds, directed to be applied for the maintenance of an infant or secured by the husband as a separate provision for his wife, as it would be difficult for them to find credit for necessaries, if the payment depended on their living to the end of a quarter? That equity will not in general apportion dividends, sec 3 Bro. Ch. Rep.

In what cases eviction of part of the land is a ground for apportionment, see Co. Lit. 148: Fonblanque's Treat. of Equity, 376: 2 Maule & S. 276: 2 East, 375: Bac. Ab. Rent. (M.) (7th ed.)

A man purchases part of the land where he hath common appendant, the common shall be apportioned: of common appurtenant it is otherwise, and if by the act of the party the common is extinct. 8 Rep. 79. APPRENTICE, apprenticius, Fr. apprenti, from apprendre, to learn.] A young person bound by indentures to a tradesman or artificer, who, upon certain covenants, is to teach him his mystery or trade.

It will be proper under this head to consider,

- I. Who may be bound apprentices, and in what manner; and who are compellable to receive them.
- II. How they are to be provided for and governed during their apprenticeship, and in what manner they are to be assigned, &c.

III. What trades may not be exercised without having served an apprenticeship.

IV. For what offences they are punishable, and how.

Of apprentices acquiring settlement, see tit. Settlement.

I. It seems clearly agreed, that, by the she shall be bound to the husband; and may age of twenty-one years, cannot bind themselves apprentices, in such a manner as to entitle their masters to an action of covenant, or other action against them for departing from their service, or other breaches of their indentures: which makes it necessary, according to the usual practice, to get some of their friends to be bound for the faithful discharge of their offices, according to the terms agreed on. 11 Co. 89. b: 2 Inst. 379. 580: 3 Leon. 63: 7 Mod. 15. And notwithstanding stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. enacts, that although persons bound apprentices shall be within age at the time of making their indentures, they shall be bound to serve for the years in their indentures contained, as if they were at full age at the time of making them; it hath been held, that although an infant may voluntarily bind himself an apprentice, and, if he continue an apprentice for seven years, he may have the benefit to use his trade; yet neither at the common law, nor by any words of the above-mentioned statute, can a covenant or obligation of an infant, for his apprenticeship, bind him; but if he misbehave himself, the master may correct him in his service, or complain to a justice of peace to have him punished according to the statute: but no remedy lieth against an infant upon Cro. Car. 179: Cro. Jac. such covenant. 194. S. P. The father, however, cannot, at common law, bind his infant son apprentice without his assent; and, therefore, where the indenture is executed by the father only, and not by the son, it is invalid. Rex v. Arnesby, 3 Barn. & A. 548. Covenant upon an indenture of apprenticeship by the master against the father; breach, that the apprentice absented himself from the service; plea, that the son faithfully served till he came of age, and then avoided the indenture. This was held no answer to the action. 3 Barn. & A. 59; and see 1 Barn. & C. 460.

But if any one entices an apprentice from his master's service, or harbours him after notice, the master may maintain a special action on the case against the person so doing. Vide

By the custom of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture, with proper covenants, which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Moore, 134: 2 Bulst. 192: 2 Roll. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271: 2 Keb. 687. But a waterman's apprentice is not, within the custom of London, to bind himself, being under twenty-one. 6 Mod. 69.

A freeman's widow may take a maid apprentice for seven years, and inrol her as a youth, if she be above fourteen years old: and if an exchange woman, that hath a husband free of London, take such apprentice, she shall be bound to the husband; and may be made free, at the end of the apprenticeship, if she be then unmarried. Lex Londinen. 48.

By stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 35. the justices may compel certain persons under age to be bound as apprentices, and on refusal may commit them, &c. And by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. and 18 G. 3. c. 47. churchwardens and overseers of the poor may bind out the children of the poor to be apprentices, with the consent of two justices; if boys till twenty-one, if girls till that age or marriage. And if any person refuse to accept a poor apprentice, he shall forfeit 10l. Stat. 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 30. § 5: and see 54 G. 3. c. 107: and this Dict. tit. Settlement. Also justices of peace and churchwardens, &c. may put out poor boys apprentice to the sea-service. Stat. 2 and 3 A. c. 6. and 4 A. c. 19. And by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 3. apprentices bound out by public charities are regulated. See tit. Chimney-sweepers.

As to the manner of their being bound: Indentures must also be inrolled in all towns corporate, under stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5. and 5 G. 2. c. 46. and in London, by the custom, in the chamberlain's office there.

In London, if the indentures be not inrolled before the chamberlain within a year, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen, &c. a scire facias shall issue to the master, to show cause why not inrolled; and if it was through the master's default, the apprentice may sue out his indentures, and be discharged: otherwise if through the fault of the apprentice, as if he would not come to present himself before the chamberlain, &c. for it cannot be inrolled, unless the apprentice be in court and acknowledge it. 2 Roll. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271.

Indentures are likewise to be stamped, and are chargeable with several duties by act of parliament.

By stat. 8 A. c. 9. made perpetual by stat. 9 A. c. 21. a duty of 6d. in the pound under 50l. and 12d. in the pound for sums exceeding it, given with apprentices (except poor apprentices) is granted. And if the full sum agreed be not inserted, or the duty not paid, indentures shall be void, and apprentices not capable of following trades; and the masters are liable to 50l. penalty.

See Jackson v. Warwick, 7 Term Rep. 121. No action can be maintained by the plaintiff, on a note given to him by the defendant, as an apprentice fee with his son, who was to be bound to the plaintiff, if it appear that the indenture executed was void by 8 A. c. 9. for want of the insertion of such premium therein, and a proper stamp in respect of the same; although the plaintiff did in fact maintain the apprentice for some time, and until he ab-

There are several statutes allowing farther time to pay the duties and stamp indentures, through neglect, omitted, &c. And acts of indemnity of this nature are usually passed at turn money is good, though it is not averred intervals of two or three years.

The payment of the duties on apprentice fees is enforced by several acts; 18 G. 2. c. 22. and 20 G. 2. c. 45; the former of which provides, that if the apprentice shall pay the duties, on the neglect of the master, he may recover back the apprentice fce; and the latter, that if no suit is commenced, and the master shall pay double duties within two years after the end of the apprenticeship, the indentures shall be valid, or the apprentice may pay them, and in such case recover double the apprentice fee, by action, from his mas-

The stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. and 5. directs who shall take apprentices, and directs that every cloth-worker, fuller, shearman, weaver, taylor, or shoe-maker, taking three apprentices, shall have one journeyman, and for every other apprentice above three, also one journeyman. § 33. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. allows only two apprentices at a time to hatters and felt-makers; (except a son apprentice;) and stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 5. allows only two to Norwich weavers, who must then have also two journey-

As by the stat. of 5 Eliz. c. 4. the justices of the peace have a power of imposing an apprentice on a master, in consequence thereof an indictment lies for disobedience to their orders, either in not receiving, or receiving, and after turning off, or not providing for such apprentice; for though an act of parliament prescribes an easier way of proceeding by complaint; yet that does not exclude the remedy by indictment. 6 Mod. 163: 1 Salk.

By the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. so often quoted, divers rules and regulations were enacted respecting the qualifications of persons entitled to take and become apprentices, and the term of years for which they should be bound, and the mode of binding them: and all indentures, covenants, and bargains to the contrary, were declared void, and liable to a penalty of 10l. By 54 G. 3. c. 96. § 2. all these regulations are repealed, and it is declared lawful for any person to take or retain, or become an apprentice, though not according to the provisions of the said act of Elizabeth.

II. The justices of peace may discharge an apprentice not only on the default of the master, but also on his own default; for in such case it is but reasonable that the contracts, which were made by their authority, should be dissolved by the same power. Skin. 108: 5 Mod. 139: 2 Salk. 471.

And under the said stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. justices, or the sessions, may hear and determine disputes between masters and apprentices: and the sessions may discharge the apprentice, and vacate the indentures, or correct the apprentice.

An order of justices on the master to rethat he had any with the apprentice; for the order being to return money, is as necessary of peace have a jurisdiction of discharging a proof of the receipt of it, as if it had been expressly alleged: and the court held, that the justices had jurisdiction to oblige the master to refund. Trin. 7 G. 2. in B. R. The King v. Amies: though an order of this nature has been quashed. Bott. (by Const.) i.

By the stat. 20 G. 2. c. 19. any two justices, upon complaint of any apprentice put out by the parish, or with whom no more than 5l. were paid, of any mis-usage, refusal of necessary provisions, cruelty, or other ill treatment by his master, may summon the master to appear before them; and upon proof of the complaint on oath, to their satisfaction (whether the master be present or not, if service of the summons be proved,) to discharge such apprentice by warrant or certificate, for which no fee shall be paid (and by stat. 33 G. 3 c. 55. may fine the master for such ill usage:) and on complaint of the master against any such apprentice, touching any misdemeanor. miscarriage, or ill behaviour, the justices may punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to be corrected and kept to hard labour, not exceeding a calender month; or otherwise by discharging such offender. Either party may appeal to the sessions, and the determination there is to be final. By 31 G. 2. c. 11. this act is extended to servants in husbandry, though hired for less than a year. By 4 G. 4. c. 29. the powers of the 20 G. 2. c. 19. and of 33 G. 3. c. 55. are extended to all apprentices on whose binding not more than 25l. is paid; and sec 4 G. 4. c.

By stat. 6 G. 3. c. 25. apprentices (with whom less than 10l. premium is paid) absenting themselves during their apprenticeship, shall serve an equal time beyond their term.—In London, apprentices are all under the controul of the chamberlain, whose jurisdiction is saved in the several statutes. The stat. 32 G. 3. c. 57. makes some additional regulations as to the punishing and relieving parish apprentices.

With regard to the assigning of apprentices, it hath been held, that an apprentice is not assignable. He cannot be bound nor discharged without deed. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7: Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R.

But though an apprentice is not assignable. yet such assignment amounts to a contract between the two masters, that the child should serve the latter. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7: Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Caster v. Eccles Parish.

By the custom of the city of London, also, an apprentice may be turned over from one master to another; and if the master refuse to make the apprentice free at the end of the term, the chamberlain may make him free: in other corporations there must be a mandamus to the mayor, &c. to make him free in such case. Danv. Ab. 421: Wood's Inst. 51.

apprentices, and may bind them to other masters, that they cannot turn them over: and therefore an order that an apprentice, whose master was dead, should serve the remainder of his time with his master's widow's second husband, was quashed; because the justices have nothing to do about turning over an apprentice; and though he applied to them, that could not give them a jurisdiction. Comb.

It seems agreed, that, if a man be bound to instruct an apprentice in a trade for seven years, and the master dies, that the condition is dispensed with, being a thing personal; but if he be bound farther, that in the mean time he will find him in meat, drink, and clothing, and other necessaries, here the death of the master doth not dispense with the condition, but his executors shall be bound to perform it as far as they have assets. 1 Sid. 216: 1 Keb. 761. 820: 1 Lev. 177.

But if a person is bound apprentice by a justice of peace, and the master happens to die before the term expires, the justices have no power to oblige his executor, by their order, to receive such apprentice and maintain him; for by this method the executor is deprived of the liberty of pleading plene administravit, (which he may do, in case covenant be brought against him,) and must maintain the apprentice, whether he hath assets or not. Carth. 237; 1 Salk. 66: 1 Show. 405. It is said, however, that the executor or administrator may bind him to another master for the remaining part of his time.

But it is said, that in this case of the master's dying, by the custom of London the executor must put the apprentice to another master of the same trade. 1 Salk. 66. per Holt, Ch. J.

By stat. 22 G. 3. c. 57. in case of the death (§ 3.) or insolvency (§ 8.) of the master or mistress of a parish apprentice (with a premium not exceeding 5l.,) the justices shall, by indorsement on the indenture, direct the apprentice to serve another master, &c. and so toties quoties. And masters, &c. of apprentices under stat. 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 30. may with consent of two justices assign them.

The court of King's Bench will not discharge an apprentice from his indentures, if it appear upon the return to an habeas corpus that he is in execution, under the conviction of two magistrates, by virtue of the statute, for absenting himself from his master's service, although it appeared by affidavit that the party had bound himself when an infant to serve till twenty-five, but when he came of age had elected to avoid the indentures. E. R. 376.

An apprentice, who at the age of seventcen was bound by indenture (which stated him to be fourteen) for seven years, was discharged by the court of King's Bench, being brought up by habeas corpus. 5 Term. Rep. 715.

By 33 G. 3. c. 55. two justices at special sessions, on complaint on oath of any apprentice, on whose binding 10l. (now 25l. by 4 G. 4. c. 29.) was paid, of any ill usage by his master, may impose a fine of 40s. on the master. And by 4 G. 4. c. 29. power is given to two justices to consider the circumstances under which such apprentice shall be discharged, and to make an order on the master to refund all or any part of the premium paid on his binding, according to their discretion.

By 1 & 2 W. 4. c. 39. several regulations were made for preserving the health and morals of apprentices employed in cotton and woollen mills, and other manufactories, by which, among other things, the system of night-work, so destructive to every sound principle of mind and body, was abolished as to persons under twenty-one; and persons under eighteen are not to work more than twelve hours per day, and one hour and a half is to be allowed for meals, and no child under nine is to be employed, and parents and guardians are liable to penalties for falsely stating their children's ages.

III. By the common law no man may be prohibited to work in any lawful trade, or in more trades than one, at his pleasure.

So that without an act of parliament no man may be restrained, either from working in any lawful trade, or using divers mysteries or trades; therefore an act of parliament made to restrain any person therein, must be taken strictly, and not favourably, as acts made in affirmance of the common law.

It was enacted by the 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 31. "That it should not be lawful to any person or persons, other than such as then did law-manual occupation, to set up, occupy, use or exercise any craft, mystery, or occupation, then used or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he should have been brought up therein seven years, at the least, as an apprentice; nor to set any person on work in such mystery, art, or occupation, being not a workman at that day, except he should have been apprentice, as is aforesaid; or else being served as an apprentice, as is aforesaid, because a journeyman, or hired by the year; upon pain that every person willingly offending, or doing the contrary, shall forfeit and lose for every default, forty shillings for every month."

By 54 G. 3. c. 96. § 1. this section of the act of Elizabeth is repealed; with a saving for the customs and bye laws of the city of London, and of other cities, and of corporations and companies lawfully constituted. See Bac. Ab. Master, Servant, and Apprentice. (D.)

Previous to the passing of this act 54 G. 3. the policy of the courts of law had been in favour of the free exercising of trades, and against enforcing the penalties of the act of Elizabeth, as will appear from the following determinations.

It hath been ruled, that there are many trades within the general words and equity of this act, besides those which are particularly enumerated therein; yet it seems agreed, and hath frequently been adjudged, that in every indictment, &c. it must be alleged, that it was a trade at the time of making the stattute, for the words thereof are, any craft, mystery, or occupation, now used, &c. from whence it seems to follow, that a new manufacture, which to all other purposes may be called a trade, is yet not a trade within this statute. 2 Salk. 611: Palm. 528: 1 Sid. 175.

Also it seems agreed, that the act only extends to such trades as imply mystery and craft, and require skill and experience; that therefore merchants, husbandmen, gardeners, &c. are not within the statute; and on this foundation it hath been held that a hempdresser is not within the statute, as not requiring much learning or skill, and being what every husbandman doth use for his necessary occasions. 8 Co. 130: 2 Bulst. 190:

Cro. Car. 499.

It is clearly agreed, that the following the common trade of a brewer, baker, or cook, is within the statute, as unskilfulness herein may be very prejudicial to the lives and healths of his majesty's subjects; but it is, at the same time agreed that the exercising of any of these trades in a man's own house or family, or in a private person's house, is not within the restraint of the statute. 11 Co. 54. a.: Cro. Car. 499: Hob. 183. 211: Moor 886: 8 Co. 129: Palm. 542: Lit. Rep. 251: Bridg. 141.

It hath been held, that this statute does not restrain a man from using several trades so as he had been an apprentice to all: wherefore it indemnifies all petty chapmen in little towns and villages, because the masters kept the same mixed trades there before. Carth.

A man may exercise as many trades as he hath worked at, or served as an apprentice to, for seven years. 2 Wils. 168.

It hath been resolved, that there is no occasion for any actual binding, but that the following a trade for seven years is a sufficient qualification within the statute. 1 Salk. 67: 2 Salk. 613.

By stats. 2 and 3 P. & M. c. 11. and 5 Eliz. c. 4. aliens and denizens are restrained to use any handicraft or trade therein mentioned, unless they have served seven year's apprenticeship within the realm, under the penalty of 40s. per month. Hutt. 132. But it hath been adjudged that if an apprentice serve seven years beyond sea, he shall be excused from the penalties of the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4; and so, if he serve seven years, though he was never bound. 1 Salk. 76.

So it hath been held, that serving five years to a trade out of England, and two in England, is sufficient to satisfy the statute; but that there must be a service of a full time: and therefore, serving five years in any country where, by the law of the country, more is not required, will not qualify a man to use the trade in England. Ca. in Law and Eq. 70.

By the statute 31 Eliz. c. 5. § 7. it is enacted, "That all suits for using the trade, without having been brought up in it, shall be sued and prosecuted in the general quarter sessions of the peace, or assizes in the same county where the offence shall be committed; or otherwise inquired of, heard, and determined in the assizes, or general quarter sessions of the peace, in the same county where such offence shall be committed, or in the leet within which it shall happen."

In the construction of this statute it hath been held, that it restrains not a suit in the King's Bench or Exchequer, for such offence happening in the same county where these courts are sitting; for the negative words of the statute are not, that such suits shall not be brought in any other court, but that they shall not be brought in any other country; and the prerogative of these high courts shall not be restrained without express words. Cro. Jac. 178; Hob. 184: 1 Salk. 373.

But where the offence is in a different county, such suits in these, or any other courts out of the proper county, seem to be within the express words of the statute. Hob. 184. 327: Cro. Jac. 85.

Infants voluntarily binding themselves apprentice, and continuing seven years, shall have the benefit of their trades; but a bond for their service shall not bind them. Cro. Car. 179. See the several statutes enabling soldiers and mariners to exercise trades.

The court will not, at the prayer of the master, grant a habeas corpus to bring up an apprentice impressed, he being willing to enter into the king's service. Ex parte Landsdown, E. 44 G. 3.: 5 East, 38.

The captain of a ship of war detaining an apprentice who had been impressed, after notice by such apprentice, is liable in an action by the master to recover wages for the service of such apprentice. Eades v. Vandeput, M. 25 G. 3: East, 39. n.

IV. At common law, a servant or apprentice, without any regard to age, may be guilty of felony in feloniously taking away the goods of their master, though they were goods under their charge, as a shepherd, butler, &c. and may, at this day, for any such offence, be indicted, as for felony, at common law; but at common law, if a man had delivered goods to his servant to keep, or carry for him, and he carried them away animo furandi, this was considered only a breach of trust, but not felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 505. 666. See tit. Embezzlement, Servant, Chimney Sweepers.
APPROBATE and REPROBATE.

term used in the Scotch law when a person takes advantage of one part of a deed, but rejects the rest. Scotch Dict.

APPROPRIATION, appropriatio, from the Fr. approprier.] The annexing of an ecclesiastical benefice to the proper and perpetual use of some religious house, bishoprick, college, or spiritual person, to enjoy for ever; in the same way as impropriation is the annexing a benefice to the use of a lay person or corporation; that which is an appropriation in the hands of religious persons being usually called an impropriation in the hands of the laity. See Com. Dig. tit. Advowson. (D. E.) It is computed that there are in England 3845 appropriations and impropriations: but the distinction between these terms is merely of common and random usage. See Huggard's Reports in the Ecclesiastical Courts, i. 162.

This contrivance seems to have sprung from the policy of monastic orders. At the first establishment of parochial clergy, the titles of the parish were distributed in four parts-one for the bishop; one to maintain the fabrick of the church; a third for the poor; and the fourth for the incumbent. The sees of the bishops becoming amply endowed, their shares sunk into the others; and the monasteries inferring that a small part was enough for the officiating priests, appropriated as many benefices as they could by any means obtain, to their own use; undertaking to keep the church in repair, and to have it constantly served. But in order to complete such appropriation effectually, the king's licence and consent of the bishop must first be obtained; because they might both, some time or other, have an interest by lapse in the benefice; if it were not in the hands of a corporation, which never dies. The consent of the patron is also necessarily implied, because the appropriation profits of the lands themselves. could originally be made to none but to such spiritual corporation as is also the patron of the church; the whole being indeed nothing else but an allowance for the patron to retain the tithes and glebe in their own hands, without presenting any clerk. Plowd. 496-500.

When the appropriation is thus made, the appropriators and their successors are perpetual parsons of the church; and must sue and be sued in all matters concerning the rights of the church by the name of parsons. Hob. 307.—An appropriation cannot be granted

This appropriation may be severed, and the church become disappropriate, two ways. 1st. If the patron or appropriator present a clerk, who is instituted and inducted to the parsonage; for such incumbent is to all intents and purposes complete parson; and the appropriation being once severed, can never be re-united again, unless by a repetition of the same solemnities. Co. Lit. 46: 7 Rep. 13. And when the clerk so presented is distinct from the vicar, the rectory thus vested in him becomes what is called a sine-cure; because he has no cure of souls, having a vicar under him, to whom that cure is committed; though this is not the only mode of creating sine-cures. See 2 Burn's Ec. Law, 347. Also if the corporation to which the benefice is annexed, is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law. 1 Comm. 386: see the note there.

In this manner may appropriations be made at this day; and thus were most, if not all, now existing, originally made. At the dissolution of the monasteries by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28. and 31 H. S. c. 13. the appropriations belonging to those religious houses (being more than one-third of all the parishes in England) would at common law have been disappropriated; had not a clause been inserted in those statutes to give them to the king, in the same manner as the alien priories had before been; 2 Inst. 584; and from hence have sprung all the lay impropriations or secular parsonages in the kingdom; they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the crown. See 1 Comm. 384, &c.: 11 Rep. 11: Gibs. 719.—See also tit. Parson, Vicar.

APPROPRIARE COMMUNIAM. To inclose or appropriate any parcel of land that was before open common, and thus to discommon it.

APPROVE, approbare.] To augment a thing to the utmost; to approve land is to make the best benefit of it by increasing the rent, &c. 2 Inst. 474.

APPROVEMENT, is where a man hath common in the lord's waste, and the lord makes an inclosure of part of the waste for himself, leaving sufficient common, with egress and regress for the commoners. Reg. Jud. 8, 9. See tit. Common.

The word approvement is also used for the Jurisd. 152. And the statute of Merton, 20 H. 3. c. 4. makes mention of land newly approved. F. N. B. 71. Approvement is also the same with improvement.

APPROVER, or PROVER, approbator.] One that, confessing felony committed by himself, appealed or accused others to be guilty of the same crime. See tit. Accessary, II. 5. He is called approver, because he must prove what he hath alleged; and that proof was anciently by battle, or the country, at the election of him appealed: and the form of this accusation may be found in Cromp. Just. 250. See also Bracton, lib. 3: Staundf. Pl. Cor. 52. If a person indicted of treason or felony, not disabled to accuse, upon his arraignment before any plea pleaded, and before competent judges, confesseth the indictment, and takes an oath to reveal all treasons and felonies that he knoweth of; and therefore prays a coroner to enter his appeal, or accusation, against those that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment; such a one is an approver. 3 Inst. 129: H. P. C. 192. Unless the crime wherewith a person is charged amount either to felony or treason, he cannot be an approver. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 24. § 10.

When a person hath once pleaded not guilty, he cannot be an approver. 3 Inst. 129. And persons attainted of treason or felony shall not be approvers; their accusation will not then be of such credit as to put a man upon his trial. 2 Hawk. 205. Vide 5 H. 4. c. 2. as to charters of pardon.

If an accomplice act fairly and openly, and discover the whole truth, although he is not entitled of right to a pardon, yet the usage, and practice, and lenity of the court, is to stop the prosecution against him, and he has an equitable title to a recommendation to the king's mercy; it holds out a hope that accomplices so conducting themselves and bringing others to justice, shall themselves escape punishment and be pardoned .- Per Ld. Mansfield on Mr. Rudd's case. Cowp. 336.

A person indicted for a misdemeanor may be legally convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. 2 Campb. 132.

Infants under age of discretion may not be approvers: and it being in the discretion of the court to suffer one to be an approver, this method of late hath seldom been practised. See tit. Accessory, II. 5; tit. Appeal; and Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 24. See tit. Prover. APPROVERS. In old statutes, bailiffs of lords in their franchises are called their approvers: and approvers in the marches of Wales were such as had licence de vendre et acheter beasts, &c. But by the statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12. approvers are such as are sent into counties to increase the farms of hundreds, &c. held by sheriffs. APPRYSING, is when, by letters, a debitor is charged to appear before a messenger (who, in that case, represents the sheriff), to hear the lands specified in the letters apprysed by an inquest, and declared to belong to the creditor for payment of his debts.

APPURTENANCES, pertinentia, derived from the French appartenir, to belong to.] Signify things both corporcal and incorporcal, appertaining to another thing as principal; as hamlets to a chief manor; and common of pasture, piscary, &c. Also liberties and services of tenants. Brit. c. 39. If a man grant common of estovers to be burnt in his manor, these are appurtenant to the manor; for things appurtenant may be granted at this day. Co. Lit. 121. Common appurtenant may be to a house, pasture, &c. Out-houses, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a messuage; but lands cannot properly be said to be appurtenant to a messuage. 1 Lill. Abr. 91. And one messuage cannot be appurtenant to another. Ibid. Lands cannot, in the true sense of the words cum pertinentiis, be appurtenant to the house; but the word pertinens may be taken in the sense of usually letten or occupied with the house. Plowd. 170. See Cro. El. 704. contra; but it seems now settled, that lands will not pass by the word appurtenances, but only such things which do properly belong to the house. Palm. 375: Godb. 352. S. C.: Cro. ARCHBISHOP, archiepiscopus.] The chief of the clergy in this province. See title Bish-

ARCHDEACON, archidiaconus.] Is one that hath ecclesiastical dignity, and jurisdiction over the clergy and laity, next after the bishop, throughout the diocese, or in some part of it only. Archdeacons had anciently a superintendant power over all the parochial clergy in every deanery in their precincts; they being the chiefs of the deacons; though they have no original jurisdiction, but what they have got is from the bishop, either by prescription or composition; and Sir Simon Degg tells us, that it appears an archdeacon is a mere substitute to the bishop; and what authority he hath is derived from him, his chief office being to visit and inquire, and episcopo nunciare, &c. In ancient times archdeacons were employed in servile duties of collecting and distributing alms and offerings; but at length, by a personal attendance on the bishops, and a delegation to examine and report some causes, and commissions to visit the remoter parts of the dioceses, they became, as it were, overseers of the church; and, by degrees, advanced into considerable dignity and power. Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, was the first prelate in England who instituted an archdeacon in his diocese, which was about the year 1075. And an archdeacon is now allowed to be an ordinary, as he hath a part of the episcopal power lodged with him. He visits his jurisdiction once every year; and he hath a court, where he may inflict penance, suspend, or excommunicate persons, prove wills, grant administrations, and hear causes ecclesiastial, &c. subject to appeal to the bishop of the diocese, under stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12. It is one part of the office of an archdeacon to examine candidates for holy orders, and to induct clerks within his jurisdiction, upon receipt of the bishop's mandate. 2 Cro. 556: 1 Lev. 193: Wood's Inst. 30.

Archdeaconries are commonly given by bishops, who do therefore prefer to the same by collation: but if an archdeaconry be in the gift of a layman, the patron doth present to the bishop, who institutes in like manner as to another benefice; and then the dean and chapter do induct him, that is, after some ceremonies place him in a stall in the cathedral church to which he belongeth, whereby he is said to have a place in the choir. Wats. c. 15.

Archdeacons, by stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 4. are to read the Common Prayer and declare their assent thereunto, as other persons admitted to ecclesiastical benefices; and also must subscribe the same before the ordinary; but they are not obliged by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12. to subscribe and read the thirty-nine articles; for although an archdeaconry be a benefice with cure, yet it is not such a benefice with cure as seems to be intended by that statute, which relates only to such benefices with cure as have particular churches belong. ing to them. Wats. c. 15. And they are to take the oaths at the sessions, as other persons qualifying for offices.

The judge of the archdeacon's court (where he doth preside himself) is called the official.

Wood's Inst. 30.

Where the archdeacon hath a peculiar jurisdiction, he is totally exempt from the power of the bishop, and the bishop cannot enter there, and hold court; and in such case, if the party who lives within the peculiar be sued in the bishop's court, a prohibition shall be granted; for the statute intends that no suit shall be per saltum; but if the archdeacon hath not a peculiar, then the bishop and he have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may commence his suit either in the archdeacon's court or the bishop's, and he hath election to choose which he pleaseth; and if he commence in the bishop's court, no prohibition shall be granted; for if it should, it would confine the bishop's court to determine nothing but appeals, and render it incapable of having any causes originally commenced there. L. Raym. 123.

An archdeacon is a ministerial officer, and cannot refuse a churchwarden elected by the parish. Rex v. Martin Rice. L. Raym. 138.

ARCHERY. A service of keeping a bow, for the use of the lord to defend his castle. Co. Lit. sect. 157.

ARCHES COURT, curia de arcubus.] The chief and most ancient consistory court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury for the debating of spiritual causes. It is so called from the church in London, commonly called St. Mary Le Bow (de Arcubus), where it was formerly held; which Church is named Bow Church, from the steeple which is raised by pillars, built archwise, like so many bent bows. Cowel.

The judge of this court is stiled the Dean of the Arches, or Official of the Arches court; he hath extraordinary jurisdiction in all ecclesiastical causes, except what belong to the prerogative court; also all manner of appeals from bishops or their chancellors or commissaries, deans and chapters, archdeacons, &c., first or last, are directed hither: he hath ordinary jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, in case of appeals; so that upon any appeal made, he, without any farther examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the appellee, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal was made. Of this, see more 4 Inst. 337. But he cannot cite any person out of the diocese of another, unless it be on appeal, &c. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 9.

In another sense the dean of the arches has a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London called a deanery (being exempt from the authority of the bishop of London), of which the parish of Bow is the principal. The persons concerned in this court are the judge, advocates, registers, proctors, &c. And the foundation of a suit in these courts is a citation for the defendant to appear; then the libel is exhibited which contains the action, to which the defendant must answer; whereupon the suit is contested, proofs are produced, and the cause determined by the judge, upon hearing the advocates on the law and fact: when follows the sentence or decree

ARMOUR and ARMS, in the understanding of law are extended to any thing that a man wears for his defence, or takes into his hands, or useth in anger, to strike or cast at another. Comp. Just. 65. Arms are also what we call in Latin insignia, ensigns of honour; as to the original of which, it was to distinguish commanders in war; for the ancient defensive armour being a coat of mail, &c. which covered the persons, they could not be distinguished, and therefore a certain badge was painted on their shields, which was called arms; but not made hereditary in families till the time of king Rich. I. on his expedition to regain Jerusalem from the Turks: and, besides shields with arms, they had a silk coat drawn over their armour, and afterwards a stiff coat, on which their arms were painted all over, now the herald's coat of arms. Sid. 352.

By stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2. the constable (Lord High Constable) shall have cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms done out of the realm; but it seems he cannot punish for painting coats of arms, &c. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. § 5-8. and this Dict. tit. Constable.

By the common law it is an offence for persons to go or ride armed with dangerous and unusual weapons: but gentlemen may wear common armour, according to their quality, &c. 3 Inst. 160.

By stat. 7 E. 1. st. 1. the king may prohibit force of arms, and punish offenders according to law; and herein every subject is bound to be aiding. And by stat. 2 E. 3. c. 3. enforced by stats. 7 R. 2. c. 13. and 20 R. 2. c. 1. none shall come with force and arms before the king's justices, nor ride, nor go armed, in affray of the peace, on pain to forfeit their armour, and suffer imprisonment, &c.

Under these statutes none may wear (unusual) armour publicly upon pretence of protecting his person; but a man may assemble his neighbours to protect his house without transgressing the act. 1 Hawk. P. C. 267. But no wearing of arms is within the stat. unless they are such as terrify; therefore, the weapons of fashion, as swords, &c. or privy coats of mail, may be worn. Id. ib. And one may arm to suppress riots or dangerous insurrections, Id. 268.

By the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared that "the subjects which are Protestants, may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions, as allowed by had the care of the soldiers' armour, and law." See stat. 33 H. S. c. 6. and tit. Game

These acts are temporary. And see I Will. 4. c. 44. as to importation and exportation of arms in Ireland.

By 53 G. 3. c. 115: 55 G. 3. c. 59. regulations are made for insuring the careful manufacture of fire-arms in England, and making provision for proving the barrels thereof.

By stat. 60 G. 3. c. 1. for preventing the training of persons to the use of arms, and the practice of military evolutions and exercises, all meetings and assemblies of persons (in England, Scotland, or Ireland), for training and drilling themselves, or being trained or drilled to the use of arms, or for practising military exercise, movements, or evolutions, without authority from the crown, or the lieutenant, or two justices of the peace of the county, are prohibited as dangerous to the peace and security of the king's subjects and his government. Persons attending such meetings for the purpose of training others, are made punishable by transportation not exceeding seven years, or imprisonment no exceeding two years. All such meetings may be disposed of by any justice of peace or constable, or the parties present may be arrested and committed, or held to bail. By cap. 2. of the same session (now expired), justices of the peace in certain disturbed counties, were authorised to seize and detain arms kept for purposes dangerous to the public peace.

ARRAIGN, ARRAIGNMENT, from the Fr. arranger, to set a thing in order; hath the same signification in law: but the true derivation is from the French arraisonner, i. c. ad rationem ponere. To call a man to answer in form of law. A prisoner is arraigned, when he is indicted and brought to trial: and to arraign a writ of assize, is to cause the demandant to be called to make the plaint, in such manner as the tenant may be obliged to answer. Co. Lit. 262. But no man is properly arraigned but at the suit of the king, upon an indictment found against him, or other record wherewith he is to be charged; and this arraignment is to take care that the prisoner do appear to be tried and hold up his hand at the bar, for the certainty of the person, and plead a sufficient plea to the indictment. Co. Lit. 262, 263.

The prisoner is to hold up his hand only in treason and felony; but this is merely a ceremony: if he owns that he is the person, it is sufficient without it; and then upon his arraignment his fetters are to be taken off; and he is to be treated with all the humanity imaginable. 2 Inst. 315: 3 Inst. 35: 4 Bl. Com. 322: Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 1. A peer need not hold up his hand. 4 St. Trials, 211.

The arraignment of a prisoner consists of three parts:-1st, calling him to the bar, and by holding up his hand, or otherwise making it appear he is the party indicted; -2ndly, reading the indictment to him distinctly in English, that he may fully understand the charge; -3rdly, demanding of him whether he be guilty or not guilty, and entering his plea; and then demanding of him how he will be tried; the common answer to which is by God and the country. 2 Hale Hist. 219.

If in action of slander for calling one thief, the defendant justifies that the plaintiff stole goods, and issue is thereon taken; if it be found for the defendant in B. R. and for felony in the same county where the court sits, or before justices of assise, &c. he shall be forthwith arraigned upon this verdict of twelve men, as on an indictment. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 151.

The pleas upon arraignment are either the general issue, not guilty; plea in abatement, or in bar; and the prisoner may demur to the indictment; he may also confess the fact, but then the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment against him.

When the person charged is called upon to plead, it is enacted by stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 1. "that if any person not having the any indictment for treason, felony, or piracy, shall plead thereto a plea of 'not guilty,' he shall by such plea, without any farther form, Shep. Ab. 299. be deemed to have put himself upon the country for trial, and the court shall in the usual manner order a jury for the trial of such person accordingly;" and by section 2 of the same statute it is enacted, "that if any person being arraigned upon or charged with any indictment or information for treason, felony, piracy, or misdemeanour, shall stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly to the indictment or information, in every such case it shall be lawful for the court if it shall so think fit, to order the proper officer to enter a plea of 'not guilty' on behalf of such person, and the plea so entered shall have the same force and effect as if the person had so pleaded the same.

ARRAY, arraya sive arraiamentum.] An old French word, signifying the ranking or setting forth of a jury of men impanelled upon a cause. And when we say to array a panel, that is to set forth the men impanelled one by another. F. N. B. 157. To challenge the array of the panel is at once to except against all the persons arrayed or impanelled, in respect of partiality, &c. Co. Lit. 156. If the sheriff be of affinity to either of the parties; or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party, or for any other partiality; the array shall be quashed. See 2 Barn. & C. 104. The word array also relates, in a particular manner, to military order, as to conduct persons armed, &c. Stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. cap. 3.

ARREST, arrestum, from the Fr. arreter, to stop or stay.] A restraint of a man's person, obliging him to be obedient to the law: and it is defined to be the execution of the command of some court of record or officer of justice. An arrest is the beginning of imprisonment, when a man is first taken, and re-privilege of peerage, being arraigned upon strained of his liberty, by power or colour of a lawful warrant: also it signifies the dccree of a court by which a person is arrested. 2

A defendant was arrested on a Sunday by a writ out of the Marshalsea; and the court of B. Formerly one great obstruction to public justice, civil as well as criminal, was the number of privileged places, such as the Mint, Savoy, &c. under pretence of their being ancient palaces; but the sanctuaries for iniquity are now abolished, and the opposing any process therein is made highly penal by stat. 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 27. § 15: 9 G. 1. c. 28. § 1: and 11 G. 1. c. 22: by which persons opposing the execution of process, or abusing the officer, if he receives any bodily hurt, are declared guilty of felony. By stat. 1 G. 4. c. 116. these acts are repealed, and the offences enumerated in the statutes are now consequently to be judged of in the same manner as similar offences committed in any other part of the kingdom. See tit. Privileged Places.

When a person is apprehended for debt, &c. he is said to be arrested; and writs express arrest by two several words, capias and attachias, to take and catch hold of a man; for an officer must actually lay hold of a person besides saying he arrests him, or it will be no lawful arrest. 1 Lill. Ab. 96. If a bailiff be kept off from making an arrest, he shall have an action of assault: and where the person arrested makes resistance, or assaults the bailiff, he may justify beating of him. If a bailiff touches a man, which is an arrest, and he makes his escape, it is a rescous, and attachment may be had against him. 1 Salk. 79. If a bailiff lays hold of one by the hand (whom he had a warrant to arrest), as he holds it out at the window, this is such a taking of him, that the bailiff may justify the breaking open of the house to carry him away. 1 Vent. 306.

When a person has committed treason or felony, &c. doors may be broken open to arrest the offender; but not in civil cases, except it be in pursuit of one arrested; or where a house is recovered by real action, or in ejectment, to deliver possession to the person recovering. Plowd. 5 Rep. 91. See Bac. Ab. Sheriff. (N.) (7th ed.) Action of trespass, &c. lies for breaking open a house to make arrest in a civil action. Mod. Cas. 105. But if it appears a bailiff found an outer door, &c. open, he may open the inner door to make court of King's Bench determined, that the writ, or order of his courts, according to law; chamber door of a lodger is not to be considered as his outer door; but that the street door being open, the officers had a right to force open the chamber door, the defendant being in the room, and refusing to open it. Also it is enacted by 3 and 4 Jac. 1. par. 35. that upon any lawful writ, warrant, or process awarded to any sheriff or other officer, for the taking of any popish recusant, standing excommunicated for such recusancy, it shall be lawful, if need be, to break any house. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 10.

But it hath been resolved, that where justices of the peace are, by virtue of a statute, authorised to require persons to come before them to take certain oaths prescribed by such statute, the officer cannot lawfully break open the doors. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 11.

An arrest in the night, as well as the day is lawful. 9 Rep. 66. And every one is bound by the common law to assist not only the sheriff in the execution of writs, and making arrests, &c., but also his bailiff that hath his warrant to do it. 2 Inst. 193. A bailiff upon an arrest ought to show at whose suit, out of what court the writ issues, and for what cause, &c. when the party arrested submits himself to the arrest: a bailiff, sworn and known, need not show his warrant, though the party demands it; nor is any other special bailiff bound to show his warrant unless it be demanded. 9 Rep. 68, 69: Cro. Jac. 485.

If an action is entered in one of the compters of London, a city serjeant may arrest the party without the sheriff's warrant. 1 Lill. Ab. 94. And by the custom of London, a debtor may be arrested before the money is due, to make him find sureties; but not by the common law. 1 Nels. Ab. 258.

If a wrong person is arrested; or one for felony, where no felony is done, &c., it will be false imprisonment.

By Glynn, Ch. J. Mich. 1658. If one be arrested by the sheriff of a county within a liberty, without a non omittas, yet the arrest is good; for the sheriff is sheriff of the whole county, but the bailiff of the liberty may have his action against the sheriff, for entering of his liberty. But upon a quo minus, a sheriff may enter any liberty and execute it impune. Pract. Leg. 72.

A person superseded for want of being charged in execution within two terms after judgment, cannot be again arrested and taken in execution upon the same judgment. Line v. Lowe .- Aliter if superseded for want of proceeding in time before judgment. R. 330.

nor may the king arrest any man for suspicion of treason, or felony, as his subjects may; because, if he doth wrong, the party cannot have an action against him. 2 Inst. 186.

Arrests by private persons are in some cases commanded. Persons present at the committing of a felony must use their endeavours to apprehend the offender, under penalty of fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 117: 4 Inst. 177.

And for this cause, by the common law, if any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with or without malice, or even by misadventure or self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day-time, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced, and if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And since the statute of Winchester, c. 5. which ordains that walled towns shall be kept shut from sun-setting to sun-rising; if the fact happen in any such town by night or by day, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53.

And as private persons are bound to apprehend all those who shall be guilty of any of the crimes above mentioned in their view, so also are they, with the utmost diligence, to pursue and endeavour to take all those who shall be guilty thereof, out of their view, upon a hue and cry levied against them. 3 Inst.

A private person may justify breaking and entering the house of another, and assaulting and imprisoning him in order to prevent him from committing murder on his wife. 2 Bos. & Pull. 260. and the note of the learned re-

Every private person is bound to assist an officer requiring him to apprehend a felon.

As to the arresting of offenders by private persons of their own authority, permitted by law for the prevention of treason or felony only intended to be done; any one may lay hold of a person, whom he sees upon the point of committing treason, or felony, or doing an act which would manifestly endanger the life of another, and detain him, till it may be reasonably presumed he has changed his purpose. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 19.

There is this distinction between a constable and a private person, that a constable may arrest a party on reasonable suspicion that a felony has been committed; but a private party, to justify the arrest, must show that a felony has actually been committed. Doug. 359: 3 Camp. 421: 6 Barn. & C. 638: Bac. Ab. Trespass. (D.) (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.) It was lately decided that a watchman may legally apprehend a person found walking in the street at night with a bundle in his hand when there was reasonable ground to suspect felony, though there was no proof of one having been committed. 3 Taunt. 1. 3: Bac. Ab. ubi supra.

As to arrests for inferior offences, no private person can arrest another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over; but it is held, that a private man may arrest a night-walker, or a common cheat going about with false dice, and actually caught playing with them, in order to have him before a justice of peace; and the arrest of any other offenders, by private persons, for offences in like manner scandalous, and prejudicial to the public, seems justifiable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 20.

With regard to arrests by public officers, they may be made either with or without process.

Arrests without process may be made by watchmen, constables, bailiffs of towns, or justices of peace. For the power of watchmen, see Stat. Winchester, c. 4. It has been holden, that this statute was made in affirmance of the common law, and that every private person may by the common law arrest any suspicious night-walker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 6: see 3 Tuunt. 1. 3: 2 Burr. R. 164: 54 G. 3. c. 57. § 18.

As to arrests by Constables, see tit. Constable, III. 1, 2.

It is the better opinion at this day, that any constable, or even a private person to whom a warrant shall be directed from a justice of peace, to arrest a particular person for felony, or any other misdemeanor within his jurisdiction, may lawfully execute it, whether the person mentioned in it be, in truth, guilty or innocent; and whether he were before indicted of the same offence or not; and whether any felony were, in truth, committed or not: for however the justice himself may be punishable for granting such a warrant, without sufficient grounds, it is reasonable that he alone be answerable for it, and not the officer, who is not to examine or dispute the reasonableness of his proceeding. 2 Hawk. P.C. c. 13. § 11: 6 Barn. & C. 638. acc.

The doctrine of general warrants (i. c. to apprehend all the authors and publishers of libels, or generally all persons suspected of any particular crime, without mentioning the name of the person accused) seems exploded as illegal. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 13. § 10; and the note there as to Wilkes's case. But it is to be observed, that the term general warrant used by Hawkins in that place, does not seem to mean a warrant, without the name of the party being specified, but one which does not contain the specific charge against the party. See the case of Money v. Leach, and also 4 Comm. 65. 291.

The great point gained by these determinations was the rescuing persons from the malice or ignorance of the inferior ministers of justice.

With regard to arrests by bailiffs of towns, their power is founded on the above-mentioned statute of Winchester, c. 4. And as to arrests by justices of peace, arrests by their command are either by word of mouth or by

A justice of peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another, who shall be guilty of an actual breach of the peace in his presence, or shall be engaged in a riot in his absence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 14: Dalt. c. 117.

And a justice of peace may lawfully grant a warrant for apprehending or arresting persons charged with treason, felony, premunire, or any other offence against the peace; and generally, wherever a statute gives one or more justices of peace a jurisdiction over any offence, any one justice of peace may, by his warrant, cause such offenders to be arrested and brought before him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c.

But it is said, that anciently, no one justice of peace could legally make out a warrant for an offence against a penal statute, or other misdemeanor; cognizable only by a sessions of two or more justices; for that one single justice of peace hath no jurisdiction of such offence, and regularly those only who have jurisdiction over a cause can award process concerning it. Yet the long, constant, universal, and uncontrolled practice of justices of peace seems to have altered the law in this particular, and to have given them an authority, in relation to such arrests, not now to be disputed. Ibid. § 16.

A justice of peace may justify the granting a warrant for the arrest of any person upon strong grounds of suspicion of felony, or misdemeanor; but he seems to be punishable, as well at the suit of the king, as of the party grieved, if he grant any such warrant groundlessly or maliciously, without such a probable cause as might induce a candid and impartial man to suspect the party to be guilty. Ibid.

Every warrant ought to be under the hand and scal of the justice of peace, and specify the day it was made out: if it be for the peace or good behaviour, it is advisable to set forth the special cause upon which it is granted; but if it be for treason or felony, or other offences of an enormous nature, it is said that it is not necessary to set forth the special cause; and it seems to be rather discretionary than necessary to set it forth in any case. Ibid. § 21—25.

The warrant may be directed to the sheriff, bailiff, constable, or to any indifferent person by name, who is no officer; for, though the justice may authorise any one to be his officer, whom he pleases to make such, yet it is most advisable to direct to the constable of the precinct wherein it is to be executed; for that no other constable, and a fortiori no private person, is compellable to serve it. Ibid.

A bailiff or constable, if they be sworn, and commonly known to be officers, and act within their own precincts, need not show | discharged; Dougl. 716: 1 Burr. 334; and their warrant to the party, notwithstanding he demand the sight of it; but that these and all other persons whatsoever, making an arrest, ought to acquaint the party with the substance of their warrant; and all private persons to whom such warrants shall be directed, and even officers, if they be not sworn and commonly known, and even these, if they act out of their own precincts, must show their warrants, if demanded. Ibid. § 28.

And therefore, stat. 27 G. 2. c. 20. provides, that in all cases where a justice is empowered, by statute, to issue a warrant of distress for levying a penalty, the officer executing such warrant, if required, shall show the same to the defendant, and suffer a copy to

The sheriff, having such a warrant directed to him, may authorise others to execute it; but every other person, to whom it is directed, must personally execute it; yet, it seems, that any one may lawfully assist him.

After presentment or indictment found in felony, &c. the first process is a capias, to arrest and imprison the offender; and if the offender cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded in order to outlawry. H. P. C. 209. For farther matter, see tit. Debtors; and see Bac. Ab. Trespass. (D.) (7th ed.)

A bill to abolish the law of arrest for debt, except in cases of fraud, has been introduced into the House of Commons by the Attorney-General, Sir John Campbell, but its fate or the measures that may grow therefrom have not been yet ascertained. Oct. 1835.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. To move in arrest of judgment, is to show cause why judgment should be stayed, notwithstanding verdict given. Judgment may be arrested for good cause in criminal cases, as well as civil, if the indictment be insufficient, &c. 3 Inst.

Arrests of judgment arise from intrinsic causes appearing upon the face of the record; for a judgment can never be arrested but for that which appears on the face of the record itself. Ld. Raym. 232. Motions in arrest of judgment may be made at any time before judgment signed. Dougl. 747: Str. 845. Sunday is no day; 4 Burr. 21. 30; nor a dies non. It is a rule to show cause, and therefore needs no notice to be given, nor yet an affidavit to ground it on, as it arises out of the record; and after judgment upon demurrer, there can be no such motion made, as the court will not suffer any one to tell them that the judgment they gave on mature deliberation is wrong. It is otherwise indeed in the case of judgment by default, for that is not given in so solemn a manner; or if the fault arises on the writ of inquiry or verdict, for then the party could not allege it before. Str.

It may be made after motion for a new trial Vol. I .- 14

if arrested, each party pays his own costs.

Cowp. 407.

After verdict a man may allege any thing in the record, in arrest of judgment, which may be assigned for error after judgment. Roll. Ab. 716. And judgment after verdict shall not be arrested for an objection that would have been good on demurrer. 3 Burr. 1725. Far farther matter, see tit. Amendment, Judgment; and for causes of arrest of judgment, see 3 Comm. 393. 395. tit. Judgment.

ARREST OF ENQUEST is to plead in arrest of taking the request, upon the former issue, and to show cause why an enquest should not be arrestandiś bonis ne dissipen. TUR. A writ which lay for a man whose cattle or goods are taken by another, who, during the contest, doth or is like to make them away, not being of ability to render satisfaction. Reg. Orig. 126.

ARRESTANDO IPSUM QUI PECU-

NIAM RECEPIT, &c. is a writ that lay for apprehending a person who hath taken the king's prest-money to serve in wars, and hides himself when he should go. Reg. Orig. 24.

ARRESTMENT, is the command of a judge, discharging any person, in whose hands the debitor's moveables are, to pay or deliver up the same, till the creditor, who hath procured the arrestment to be laid on, be satisfied, either by caution or payment, according to the respective grounds of arrestment. Scotch Dict .- It is process in the nature of an attachment, whereby the person, in whose hands any part of the personal estate of the debtor is lodged, is enjoined (i. e. prohibited) from delivering or paying the same, till the creditor so arresting is paid, or the debtor gives security to answer the demand.

Arrestment jurisdictionis fundandæ causa. This arrestment is used to bring a foreigner under the jurisdiction of the courts of Scotland. A foreigner, it is held, owes no obedience to the decisions of those courts; and therefore, unless either the person or the effects of the foreigner be within the jurisdiction of that court, the judgment of the court could receive no effect: it is therefore customary to grant a warrant for attaching the person of the foreigner, or for arresting his goods to the effect of founding a jurisdiction, and these can be removed only by finding caution (judicio sisti,) that the foreigner shall appear at all diets of court. Scotch Dict.

ARRESTO FACTO SUPER BONIS MERCATORUM ALIENIGENORUM. A writ that lay for a denizen against the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompence of goods taken from him in a foreign country, after denial of restitution. Reg. Orig. 129. This the ancient civilians called clarigatio; but by the moderns it is termed reprisalia.

ARRHÆ, earnest, evidence of a completed bargain. In the Scotch law dead-earnest is when the earnest is given by the purchaser over and above the price; where for instance it bears so small a proportion to the price that it is not presumed to be counted on, it is deemed dead-earnest, but where it is of greater consequence it may be understood to go into the price. Scotch Dict.

ARRIAGE and CARRIAGE were indefinite services formerly demandable from tenants; but by act 20 G. 2. c. 50. § 21, 22. all indefinite services are prohibited, and none can now be demanded but such as are enumerated in the lease, or in writing apart. Mill-services continue on the former footing.

ARROWS. By an ancient statute, all heads for arrows shall be well brazed, and hardened at the point with steel, on pain of forfeiture and imprisonment: and to be marked with the mark of the maker. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 7.

ARRURA. In the black book of Hereford, De Operationibus Arruræ, signifies days' work of ploughing; for anciently customary tenants were bound to plough certain days for their Una arrura, one day's work at the plough: and in Wiltshire, earing is a day's ploughing. Paroch. Antiq. p. 41. See Aratrum terræ.

ARSENALS. Dock-yards, magazines, and other public stores in this realm, or in islands, countries, ports, or places thereto belonging, wilfully setting fire to, or destroying, is punishable with death, by 12 G. 3. c. 24.

ARSON, from ardeo, to burn. The legal definition of arson, as it stands at common law, is the maliciously and voluntarily burning the house of another. East, P. C. 1015: Leach. 260. House-burning was felony at common law. 3 Inst. 66. It must be maliciously, voluntarily, and an actual burning: not putting fire only into a house, or any part of it, without burning; but if part of the house is burnt, or if the fire doth burn, and then goeth out of itself, it is felony; 2 Inst. 188: H. P. C. 85; and it must be the house of another; for if a man burns his own house only, though with intention to burn others, it was not at common law felony, but a great misdemeanor, punishable with fine, pillory,

The law upon this subject is now clearly defined by stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. § 30. which incorporates the provisions of former statutes relating to this subject, and consolidates them into two simple enactments contained in the 2nd and 17th sections. The 2nd section constitutes it a capital offence unlawfully and maliciously to set fire to any church or chapel, or to any chapel for the religious worship of dissenters duly registered, or to any house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warchouse, office, shop, malt-house, mill, hop-oast, barn, or granary, or to any building or erection used in carrying on any trade or manufacture or any branch thereof, whether the same, or any of them respectively, shall then be in the poss ssion of the offender, or in the possession of any other person, with intent thereby to injure or defraud any person. The 17th section renders it also a capital offence, "unlawfully and maliciously to set fire to any stack of corn, grain, pulse, straw, hay, or wood." And the latter part of the same section subjects any person who shall unlawfully and maliciously set, fire to any crops of corn, grain, or pulse, whether standing or cut down, or to any part of a wood, coppiee, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern, wheresoever growing, to transportation for seven years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, according to the discretion of the court before whom the of-

If a wife set fire to her husband's house for the purpose of burning it down, this is not an offence within this stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 2. There must be an intent to injure or defraud some third person not identified with herself. R. v. Marsh, 1 Ry. & Moo. C. C.

If a house is fired by negligence or mischance it cannot amount to arson. 3 Inst. 67. H. P. C. 85. Where one burns the house of another, if it be not wilful and malicious, it is not felony, but only trespass; therefore if A. shoot unlawfully with a gun at the cattle or poultry of B., and by means thereof set another's house on fire, this is not arson; for though the act he was doing was unlawful, yet he had no intent to burn the house. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 569.

By stat. 6. A. c. 31. § 3. if any servant, through negligence or carelessness, shall fire any dwelling-house or outhouse, be convicted by the oath of one witness before two justices of the peace, shall forseit 100l. to the churchwardens of the parish in which it shall happen, to be distributed amongst the sufferers by such fire; and in default of payment the offender to be committed to hard labour for eighteen months. See Burning, Malicious Injuries.

ARSURA. The trial of money by fire, &c. But a pauper may be guilty of the offence after it was coined. In Domesday we read, reddit 50l. ad. arsuram, which is meant of lawful and approved money, whose allay was tried by fire.

ART AND PART, is a term used in Scotland and the north of England, when one charged with a crime, in committing the same, was both a contriver of, and acted his part in it.

ARTHEL. A British word, and more truly written arddelw, or, according to the south Welsh, ardhel, signifying to avouch: as if a man were taken with stolen goods in his hand, he was to be allowed a lawful arthel (or vouchee) to clear him of the felony; it was part of the law of Howel Dha; according to whose laws every tenant, holding of any other than of the prince or lord of the fcc, paid a fine pro defensione regia, which was called arian ardhel. The privilege of arthel occasioning a delay and exemption of criminals from justice, provision was made against it by stat. 28 H. S. c. 6. Blount. See Rob Roy,

See Bac. Ab. tit. Surety of the peace. (B. D.) And the court may require bail for such a length of time as they shall think necessary for the preservation of the peace, and r are not confined to a twelvemonth. 1 Term Rep. 696.

ARTICLES, LORDS OF. These were a committee of the Scotch parliament, which, in the mode of their election, and by the hature of their powers, were calculated to increase the influence of the crown, and to confer on his majesty a power equivalent to that of a negative before debate. At the Revolution this system appeared inconsistent with the freedom of parliament, and was declared a grievance by the Convention of Estates; 1689. c. 18; and was accordingly suppressed

ASSACH, or Assath, was a custom of purgation used of old in Wales, by which the party accused did clear himself by the oaths of 300 men. It is mentioned in ancient MSS. and prevailed till the time of H. 5. by which it is prohibited and punished. 1 H. 5. c. 6. Spelm. and see stat. 27 H. S. c. 7.

ASSART, Assartum, from the Fr. Assartir, to make plain.] Assartum est quod redactum est ad culturam. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 21. And the word assartum is by Spelman derived from exertum, to pull up by the roots: for sometimes it is wrote essart. Others derive it from exaratum or exartum, which signifies to plough or cut up. Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says it is an offence committed in the forest, by pulling up the woods by the roots, that are thickets and coverts for the deer, and making the ground plain as arable land: this is esteemed the greatest trespass that can be done in the forest to vert or venison, as it contains in it waste and more; for whereas waste of the forest is but the felling down the coverts which may grow up again, assart is a plucking them up by the roots, and utterly destroying them, so that they can never afterwards spring up again. See the Red Book in the Exchequer. But this is no offence, if | him, he may justify it. Bac. Ab. ubi supra. done with licence; and a man may by writ of ad quod damnum, sue out a licence to assart ground in the forest, and make it several for tillage. Reg. Orig. 257. ASSASSINATION, is the murdering of a person for hire; and so detestable is the crime, that the Scotch law, following the rule of the Canon law, punishes with death even the attempt to assassinate. Scotch Dict.

ASSAULT, Assaltus, from the Fr. Assayler.] An attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another; as by striking at him with or without a weapon. But no words whatsoever, be they ever so provoking, can amount to an assault, notwithstanding the many ancient opinions to the contrary. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 62. § 1. See also Lamb. Eiren, lib. 1. c. 3: 22 Lib. Ass.

Assault does not always necessarily imply a hitting, or blow; because in trespass for assault and battery, a man may be found guilty of the assault, and excused of the battery. 1 Hawk. P. C. 263. But every battery includes an assault; therefore if the assault be ill laid, and the battery good, it is sufficient.

If a person in anger lift up or stretch forth his arm, and offer to strike another; or menace any one with any staff or weapon, it is trespass and assault in law: and if a man threaten to beat another person, or lie in wait to do it, if the other is hindered in his business, and receive loss thereby, action lies for the injury. Lamb. lib. 1: 22 Ass. pl. 60.

Any injury whatsoever, be it never so small, being actually done to the person of a man in an angry or revengeful, or rude or insolent manner, as by spitting in his face, or any way touching him in anger, or violently, jostling him, are batteries in the eye of the law. 1 Hawk. P. C. 263, 264.—From the Fr.

Battre, to beat or strike.

In many cases a man may justify an assault; thus to lay hands gently upon another, not in anger, is no foundation of an action of trespass and assault: the defendant may justify molliter manus imposuit in defence of his person or goods; or of his wife, father, mother, or master; or for the maintenance of justice. Bract. 9 Ed. 4: 35 H. 6. c. 51. See Bac. Ab. Assault and Battery, (7th ed.)

A servant &c. may justify an assault in defence of a master, &c., but not e contra. Ld.

See 1 Hawk. P. C. 259. and the several authorities there cited. Bac. Ab. Assault and Battery. (7th ed.)

And on an indictment the party may plead not guilty, and give the special matter in evidence; but in an action he must plead it specially. 6 Mod. 172. Supposing it matter of justification .- If of excuse, it is said, it may be given in evidence on the general issue. Bull.

N. P. 17.

Also in cases of assault, for the assault of the wife, child, or servant, the husband, father, and master may have action of trespass per quod servitium amisit. In case of a wife, husband and wife should join in the action for the personal abuse of the wife (the husband not having sustained any damage.) If the husband has been damnified, as by tearing her clothes, &c. or loss of her assistance, &c. in his domestic concerns, for that peculiar injury to himself he alone must sue.

As to parent and child, muster and servant, unless injury accrues to the parent or master, the child or servant may sue.

For an assault, the wrong-doer is subject both to an action at the suit of the party, w. crein he shall render damages; and also to an indictment at the suit of the king, wherein he shall be fined according to the heinousness of the offence. 1 Hawk. 263.

If both are depending at one time, unless in very particular cases, the attorney-general will, on application, grant a nolle prosequi, if the party will not discontinue his Assaulting or threatening a counsellor at law, or attorney, employed in a cause against a man; or a juror giving verdict against him; his adversary for suing him, &c. is punishable, on an indictment, by fine and imprisonment, for the contempt. 1 Hawk. 58. By 55 G. 3. c. 88. provisions are made to ensure the more effectual redress for assaults in Ireland; where the damages are laid under five guineas, proceedings may be by civil bill at the quarter sessions, who may give costs; and where the defendant cannot pay them they may be levied off the barony.

By stat. 58 G. 3. c. 30. in actions for as. sault, brought in inferior courts (in England or Wales) holding pleas to the amount of 40s. if damages are given under 40s. the plaintiff shall recover only as much costs as damages, and without increase; and so in inferior courts, not having jurisdiction to 40s., if the damages

By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 24—29. for England, and 10 G. 4. c. 34. § 28-38. for Ireland, several assaults are made punishable: viz., assaults on magistrates or others in their endeavours to save shipwrecked property, are punishable by transportation or imprisonment: assaults with intent to commit felony, or on peace officers and revenue officers, or on any persons, to prevent the apprehension of offend. ers, or in pursuance of any conspiracy to raise wages, punishable by imprisonment, &c.; assaults on shipwrecked seamen, or for obstructing the buying, selling, or passage of corn, by imprisonment for three months, with hard labour, on conviction before two justices. Persons committing any common assault or battery, punishable before two magistrates by fine, not executing 51. By 7 G. 4. c. 64. § 23. the court is authorised to order the payment of the expenses of the prosecutor, &c. against persons indicted for an assault with intent to commit felony, and on peace officers, and assaults committed in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise the rate of wages. ASSETS, Fr. Assez. i. e. Satis.] Goods enough to discharge that burden which is east upon the executor or heir, in satisfying the debts and legacies of the testator or ancestor.

Assets are real, or personal; where a man hath lands in fee-simple, and dies seised thereof, the lands which come to his heir are assets real; and where he dies possessed of any personal estate, the goods which come to the executors are assets personal.

Assets are also divided into assets per descents, and assets inter maines. Assets by descent, is where a person is bound in an obligation, and dies seised of lands which descend to the heir; the land shall be assets, and the heir shall be charged as far as the land to him descended will extend.

Assets inter maines, is when a man indebt-

Assignments may be made of lands in fee, for life, or years; of an annuity, rent-charge, judgment, statute, &c.; but as to lands, they are usually of leases and estates for years, &c. And by the statute of frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. no estate of freehold, or term for years, shall be assigned but by deed in writing signed by the parties: except by operation of law: and a parol assignment of a parol lease from year to year is therefore void. 1 Camp. 318. A possibility, right of entry, title for condition broken, a trust, or thing in action, cannot be granted or assigned over. Co. Lit. 214.

But though a bond being a chose in action cannot be assigned over so as to enable the assignee to sue in his own name, yet he has by the assignment such a title to the paper and wax, that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232. And in the assignment of bonds, &c. is always contained a power of attorney to receive and sue in the assignor's name.

Also in equity a bond is assignable for a valuable consideration paid, and the assignce alone becomes entitled to the money; so that if the obligor, after notice of the assignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595. But courts of equity will establish assignments of contingent interests against executors, administrators, or heirs at law, even where such assignments are made, not for consideration of money, but in consideration of love and affection, and advancement of children. 1 Vez. 409. See Fon-blanque's Treatise of Equity, i. 203.

An assignee must take the security assigned, subject to the same equity that it was in the hands of the obligee; as if on a marriage treaty the intended husband enters into a marriage-brokage bond, which is afterwards assigned to creditors, yet it still remains liable to the the same equity, and is not to be carried into execution against the obligor. 2

Where there is a bond for the performance of the covenants in a lease, if the lessee assigns the lease, he may likewise assign the bond; but this must be before any of the covenants are broken; but if any of the covenants are broken, and the lessee afterwards assigns the lease and bond, and the assignee puts the bond in suit, for those breaches, it is maintenance. Statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 15. enacts, that a debtor to the king shall not assign any debts to him, but such as did originally grow due to the debtor; afterwards there was a debtor to the husband in 2000l. by a statute; the husband made his wife executrix, and died; she married again one G. D., who was indebted to the king, and then the husband and wife assigned this statute to the king, in satisfaction of the debt due to him; adjudged, that the assignment was good, for though the second husband had the statute in right of his wife, and, by consequence, the debt was not originally due to him; yet, because he might release the statute, it is the same thing as if it had been originally taken in his name. 2 Cro. 324.

Where the executor of a lessee assigns the term, debt will not lie against him for rent incurred after the assignment; because there is neither privity of contract nor estate between the lessor and executor: but if the lessee himself assigns his lease, the privity of contract remains between him and the lessor, although the privity of estate is gone by the assignment, and he shall be chargeable during his life; but after his death the privity of contract is likewise determined. 3 Rep. 14. 24. Although a lessee make an assignment over of his term, yet debt lies against him by the lessor or his heir; (not having accepted rent from the assignee;) but where a lessee assigns his term, and the lessor his reversion, the privity is determined, and debt doth not lie for the reversioner against the first lessee. Adjudged, that some things in respect of their nature are not assignable, or to be granted over; as for instance, if the donee in tail holdeth of the donor by fealty, he cannot assign it over to another, because fealty is incident to, and inseparable from, the reversion; so if the founder of a college grant his foundation, though it be to the king, the grant is void, because it is inseparable from his blood. 11 Rep. 66. b. in Magdalen College's case.

ANSISA, Fr. Assis.] According to our ancient books is defined to be an assembly of knights, and other substantial men, with the justice, in a certain place, and in a certain time appointed. Custum. Normand. c. 24. This word is properly derived from the Latin verb assideo, to sit together; and is also taken from the court, place, or time, when and where the writs and processes of assise are handled or taken. And in this signification assise is general; as when the justices go their several circuits with commission to take all assises; or special, where a special commission is granted to certain persons (formerly oftentimes done) for taking an assise upon one or two disseisins only. Bract. lib. 3.

Concerning the general assise, all the counties of England are divided into six circuits, and those of Wales into two; and two judges are assigned by the king's commission to every English circuit, who hold their assises twice a year in every county (except Middlesex, where the king's court of record do sit), and now the counties on the home circuit have a third assise about Christmas, for trial of criminals only. These judges have five several commissions.

1. Of over and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treasons, felonies, &c.; and this is the largest commission

2. Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of assise associate, which gives them power to try every prisoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatsoever, but none but prisoners in the gaol; so that one way or other they rid the gaol of all the pri-

4. Of nisi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of assise and others, by which civil causes grown to issue in the courts above are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment.

These causes by the course of the courts are usually appointed to be tried at Westminster in some Easter or Michaelmas Term, by a jury returned from the county wherein the cause of action arises; but with this proviso, nisi prius, unless before the day prefixed, the judges of assise come into the county in question.—This they are sure to do in the preceding vacation.

5. A commission of the peace, in every county of the circuits; and all justices of the peace of the county are bound to be present at the assises; and sheriffs are also to give their attendance on the judges, or they shall be fined. Bacon's Elem. 15, 16, &c. 3 Comm.

There is a commission of the peace, oyer and terminer and gaol delivery of Newgate, held eight times in a year, for the city of London and county of Middlesex, at Justice Hall in the Old Bailey, where the lord mayor is the chief judge. And as the court of King's Bench is the highest court of ordinary justice in criminal cases within the realm, and paramount to the authority of justices of gaol de-livery and commissioners of oyer and termi-ner, it was found requisite by stat. 25 G. 3. c. 18. that the session of over and terminer and gaol delivery of the gaol of Newgate, for the county of Middlesex, should not be discontinued on account of the commencement of the term and the sitting of the court of King's Bench at Westminster; and farther by 33 G. 3. c. 48. it is provided that when any session of the peace, and over and terminer, holden before justices of the peace for Middlesex, shall have been begun before the essoign day of any term, the session may be continued until the business is concluded, notwithstanding the happening of such essoign day on the sitting of the court of K. B. in Middlesex.

In Wales there are but two circuits, North and South Wales. By 1 W. 4. c. 70. § 19. assises shall be held in the county of Chester, and the several counties and towns of Wales, by virtue of commissions of assise, &c. in like manner as in England, and one of the judges appointed to hold assises in the principality of Wales shall hold the assises at the usual places in South Wales, and the other judge at the usual places in North Wales.

See 19 G. 3. c. 74. § 70. as to judges' lodgings on assises in Great Britain, made perviding that when the commissions under which the judges sit on the circuit shall not be opened and read, at the place specified, on the day named therein, the same may be opened and read on the following day; or if such following day shall be Sunday or other day of public rest, then on the succeeding day. By § 2. the cause of the delay of opening and reading the commissions shall be certified to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal. The stat. 49 G. 3. c. 91. enables the barons of the exchequer, and all other justices of assise within England, to act under any commissions of nisi prius, in any county, notwithstanding their being born or inhabiting in any such county. By 19 G. 3. c. 74. § 70. when the assises for a county are held in any county of a city and at the same time with the assises for such city, the judges' lodgings shall be held to be situate both within such city and within the county at large, for the purposes of the business of the assises.

The constitution of the justices of assise was begun by Hen. 2; though somewhat different from what they now are: and by Magna Charta justices shall be sent through every county once a year, who, with the knights of the respective shires, shall take assises of novel disseisin, &c. in their proper shires, and what cannot be determined there shall be ended by them in some other place in their circuit; and if it be too difficult for them, it shall be referred to the justices of the bench, there to be ended. 9 H. 3. c. 12.

By 1 A. st. 1. c. 8. § 5. no commission of assise, oyer and terminer, general gaol de-livery, or association-writ of sic non omnes or assistance, or commission of the peace, shall be determined by the demise of the sovereign, but shall continue six months, unless superseded, &c.

There are several statutes as to holding the assises at particular places in certain counties. See Circuits, Nisi Prius, Judges, Justices.

The term assise is likewise used for a jury, and for a writ for recovery of possession of things immoveable, whereof any one and his ancestors have been disseised. Likewise, in another sense, it signifies an ordinance or statute, as Assisa Panis et Cervisia. Reg. Orig. 279.

ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN, Assisa novæ disseisinæ.] See Disseisin: and see Roscoe on Real Actions, 61.

An assise of novel disseisin is a remedy maxime festinum, for the recovery of lands or tenements of which the party was disseised. 2 Inst. 410. And it is called novel disseisin, because the justices in eyre went their circuits from seven years to seven years; and no assise was allowed before them which commenced before the last circuit, which petual by 39 G. 3. c. 46. See also 41 G. 3. was called an ancient assise; and that which

An assise is called festinum remedium. 1. Because the tenant shall not be essoined. 2. Shall not cast a protection. 3. Shall not pray in aid of the king. 4. Shall not vouch any stranger, except he be present, and will enter presently into warranty; so of receit. 5. The parole shall not demur for the nonage of the plaintiff or defendant. 8 Co. 50: Booth, 262. It lies where tenant in fee simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, is put out and disseised of his lands, or tenements, rents, common of sise lies for tithes, by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 7: Cro. pasture, common way, or of an office, toll, &c. Glanv. lib. 10: Reg. Orig. 197. Assise must be of an actual freehold in lands, &c. and not a freehold in law: it lieth of common of pasture, where the commoner hath a freehold in it, and the lord or other persons feed it so hard, that all the grass is eat up: but then the plaintiff must count and set forth how long the land was fed, and alleged per quod proficuum suum ibidem amisit, &c. 9 Rep. 113. One may have an assise of land and rent, or of several rents, and offices and profits in his soil, all in one writ: and if it be of a rent charge, or rent-seck, it shall be general de libero tenemento in such a place, and all the lands and tenements of the tenants charged ought to be named in the writ; but in assise for rent service it is otherwise. Dyer, 31. An assise may be brought for an office held for life: but then it must be an office of profit, not of charge only; of the toll of a mill, or market, assise lieth; though it may not be brought of suit to a mill. 8 Rep. 46, 47.

An assise was brought of the office of filazer of the court of Common Pleas, and the demandant counted de libero tenemento, and alleged seisin, by taking money for a capias, and the post was put in view where the officer

Dyer, 114. sate.

An assise lieth of the office of register of the admiralty, and the demandant laid a prescription to it, viz. quod quilibet hujusmodi persona, who should be named by the admiral, should be register of the admiralty for Dyer, 153.

It lieth of officers of woodward, park-keeper, and keeper of chases, warrener, &c.; but these are not at common law; but by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 25. because they are of profits to be taken in alieno solo: it likewise lieth of all other offices and bailiwicks in fee. 8 Rep. 47.

In an assise of a new office, it ought to be showed what profits belong to it; but is otherwise of an ancient office, because it is presumed, that the profit thereof is sufficiently known. 8 Rep. 45. 49.

Tenants in common shall each have a several assise for his moiety, or part, because they are seised by several titles: but twenty jointtenants: shall have but one assise in all their names, because they have but one joint title: so if there are three joint tenants, and one of the writ shall abate quoad all. Dyer, 207. them releaseth all his right to one of his was upon a disseisin since the last circuit, an companions, and then the other two are disseised of the whole, they shall have but one assise in both their names, for the two parts, because they had a joint title to it at the time of the disseisin, and he to whom the release was given shall have an assise in his own name, because of that part he is tenant in common. Co. Lit. 196.

If lessee for years, or tenant at will, be ousted, the lessor, or he in remainder, may have assise, because the freehold was in him at the time of the disseisin. Kel. 109. As-Eliz. 559. But not for annuity, pension, &c. In some cases an assise will lie where ejectment will not. Ejectment will not lie de piscaria, by reason the sheriff cannot deliver possession of it; but an assise will lie for it, as it may be viewed by the recognitors. Cro. Car. 534. Assise will sometimes lie where trespass vi et armis doth not. Vide 8 Rep. 47: 1 Nels. Abr. 276.

By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 12. assises of novel disseisin, &c. shall be taken in the proper counties, by the king's justices: and for estovers of wood, profit taken in woods, corn to be received yearly in a certain place; and for toll, tonnage, &c. and of offices in fee, an assise shall be; also for common of turbary, and of fishing, appendant to freehold, &c.

In an assise, the plaintiff must prove his title, then his seisin and disseisin: but seisin of part of a rent is sufficient to have assise of the whole; and if a man who hath title to enter, set his foot upon the land, and is ousted, that is a sufficient seisin.

As the writ of assise restores the party to the actual seisin of his freehold, for so are the words of the writ, viz. facias tenementum illud seisiri, &c. consequently the party that brings the writ must found it upon an actual seisin, which he has been divested of; for otherwise this remedy is not commensurate to his case. See 2 Roll. Abr. 463.

Therefore, if there be lord and tenant by rent service, and the lord grants the services to another, and the tenant attorns by a penny, this being given by way of attornment is not sufficient seisin to ground an assize on; secus if the penny had been given by way of seisin of the rent. Co. 9: 10 Co. 127.

The first process in this action is an original writ issued out of Chancery, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to return a jury, who are called the recognitors of the assise. An assise is to be arraigned on the day the writ is returnable, on which day the defendant is to count, and the tenant is to appear and plead instantly. Style Reg. 88.

If in an assise no tenant of the freehold be mentioned, the defendant may plead it; and where one defendant pleads, no tenant of the freehold named in the writ, if this is found,

On such a plea of the defendant, the plaintiff says that he hath made a feoffment to per- as a record or release, which could not have sons unknown, and he himself hath continually taken the profits: if then they are at issue upon the taking the profits, and it be found against the defendant, it shall not be inquired of the points of the assise, for the disseisin is acknowledged. 1 Danv. Abr. 584. And if the deed of the ancestor of the plaintiff be pleaded in bar, and this is denied, and found for the plaintiff, the assise shall not inquire of the points of the writ, but only of the damages. Ibid. 585.

In this suit, if the defendant fail to make good the exception which he pleads, he shall be adjudged a disscisor, without taking the assise; and shall pay the plaintiff double damages, and be imprisoned a year. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 25. In assise the tenant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff makes title, but the tenant doth neither answer nor traverse the title; in this case, the assise shall be awarded at large. Cro. Eliz. 559. And if any other title is found for the plaintiff, he shall recover. Bro. Assi. 281. If a tenant pleads in abatement in an assise, he must at the same time plead over in bar; and no imparlance shall be allowed without good cause: and where there are several defendants, and any of them do not appear the first day, the assise shall be taken against them by default. Pasch. 5 W. 3.

If assise be brought against a lessee, he may not plead asisa non; for that is the form of the plea in bar for tenant of the freehold; he ought to plead the special matter, viz. his lease, the reversion in the plaintiff, and that he is possessed, and so in without wrong. Jenk. Cent. 142. An assise is to be first arraigned, and the plaintiff's counsel prays the court that the defendant may be called; where-upon he is called; and if the defendant appears, then his counsel demand over of the writ of assise, and the return of it; which is granted; and then he prays leave to imparl to a short time after, and the jury is adjourned to that day: at the day given by the court, the defendant is again called, and, upon his appearance, he pleads to the assise; and upon this an issue is joined between the parties, and the jurors are sworn to try the issue, the counsel proceeding to give them their evidence: after the trial the court gives judgment, and the plaintiff recovering is to have writ of seisin, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 105, 106.

The jurors that are to try the assise are to view the thing in demand; by writ of assise the sheriff is commanded, Quod faciat duodecium liberos et legales homines de vicineto, &c. Videre tenementum illud, et nomina eorum imbreviari, et quod summoneat eos per bonas summonitiones, quod sint coram justitiariis, &c. parati inde facere recognitionem, &c.

been pleaded by his bailiff; or when the assise was taken against himself by default, to have the deed tried, and the record brought in before the justices, and the former jury summoned to appear before them at a certain day and place, for a farther examination and trial of the matter. See Booth, 215. 287: 4 Co. 4. b: 2 Inst. 26: F. N. B. 181: 3 Comm.

The plaint need not be so certain in assise as in other writs; the judgment being to recover per visum recognitorum: and if the plaint be but so certain as that the recognitors may put the demandant into possession, it is sufficient. Dyer, 84.

To prevent frequent and vexatious disseisins, it is enacted by the statute of Merton, 20 H. 3. c. 3. that if a person disseised recover seisin of the land again, by assise of novel disseisin, and be again disseised of the same tenements by the same disseisor, he shall have a writ of re-disseisin; and, if he recover therein, the re-disseisor shall be imprisoned; and by the statute of Malberge, 52 H. 3. c. 8. shall also pay a fine to the king; to which the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 26, hath superadded double damages to the party aggrieved. In like manner, by the same statute of Merton when any lands or tenements are recovered by assise of mort d'ancestor, or other jury or any judgment of the court, if the party be afterwards disseised by the same person against whom judgment was obtained. he shall have a writ of post-disseisin against him; which subjects the post-disseisor to the same penalties as a re-disseisor. The reason of all which, as given by Sir Edward Coke (2 Inst. 83, 84.), is because such proceeding is a contempt of the king's court, and in despite of the law. 3 Comm. 188. See Reg. Orig. 208: F. N. The court of Common Pleas or King's Bench may hold plea of assises of land in the county of Middlesex, by writ out of Chancery. 1 Lill. Ab. 105. And in cities and corpora-tions an assise of fresh force lies for recovery of possession of lands, within forty days after the disseisin, as the ordinary assise in the county. F. N. B. 7.

This writ as well as the four writs of assise next mentioned, have been abolished. Disseisin, Limitation of Actions, ii. 1.

ASSISE OF MORT D'ANCESTOR, Assisa mortis antecessoris.] Is a writ that lay where a man's father, mother, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, &c., died seised of lands, tenements, rents, &c., that were held in fee, and after their death a stranger abated. Reg. Orig. 223. It is good as well against the abator, as any other in possession of the land; person prosecuting and them. Co. Lit. 242. And it must be brought within the time limited by the statute of limitations [50 years, 3 Comm. 189.] or the right may be lost by ne-

If tenant by the curtesy alien his wife's inheritance, and dieth, the heir of the wife shall have an assise of mort d'ancestor, if he have not assets by descent from the tenant by the curtesy; and the same shall be as well where the wife was not seised of land the day of her death, as where she was seised thereof. New. Nat. Br. 489. A warden of a college, &c. shall have assise of mort d'ancestor of rent where his predecessor was seised. And a man may have assise of mort d'ancestor of rents, against several persons in several counties; having, in the end of the writ, several summons against the tenants: and the process in this writ is summons against the party; and if he makes default at the day of the assise returned, then the plaintiff ought to sue out a re-summons; and if he makes default again, the assise shall be taken, &c. Bro. Assis. 88. In a mort d'ancestor, if the tenant says, the plaintiff is not next heir, and this is found against him, the points of the writ shall be inquired of: and in this case the assise may find, that though the plaintiff be the next heir, yet he is not next heir as to this land; for this is in regard of their inquiry at large. Br. Mort. d'An. 47: 1 Danv. Ab. 584. Damages shall be recovered in the assise of mort d'ancestor: but it lieth not of an estatetail, only where the ancestor was seised in demesne as of fee. Bro. Assis. If a man be barred in assise of novel disseisin, upon showa descent or other special matter, he may have mort d'ancestor, or writ of entry sur disseisin, 4 Rep. 43.

If the abatement happened on the death of one's grandfather or grandmother, then an assise of mort d'ancestor no longer lies, but a writ of ale or de avo; if, on the death of the great-grandfather or great-grandmother, then a writ of besayle or de proavo; but if it mounts one degree higher, to the tresayle, or grandfather's grandfather, or if the abatement happened upon the death of any collateral relation other than those before mentioned, the writ is called a writ of cosinage, or de consanguineo. Finch. L. 266, 267. And the same points shall be inquired of, in all these actions ancestrel, as in an assise of mort d'ancestor, they being of the very same nature. Stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 20; though they differ in this point of form, that these ancestrel writs (like all other writs of præcipe) expressly assert a title in the demandant (viz. the seisin of the ancestor at his death, and his own right of inheritance), the assise asserts nothing directly, but only prays an inquiry whether those points be so. 2 Inst. 399. There is also another ancestrel writ, denominated a nuper obiit, to establish an equal divi- were, setting foot to foot with the demand-where there is privity of blood between the sion of the land in question, where, on the death of an ancestor, who has several heirs, or co-heiresses, one enters and holds the others out of possession. F. N. B. 197: Finch, L. 293: Leg. Orig. 226: New Nat. Br. 437, 438: Booth on Real Actions. But a man is not allowed to have any of these actions ancestrel for an abatement, consequent on the death of any collateral relation, beyond the fourth degree (Hale on F. N. B. 221.); though in the lineal ascent he may proceed ad infinitum. (Fitzh. Ab. tit. Cosinage, 15.) 3 Comm.

It was always held to be law, that where lands were devisable in a man's last will by the custom of the place, there an assise of mort d'ancestor did not lie. For, where lands were so devisable, the right of possession could never be determined by a process which inquired only of these two points-the scisin of the ancestor, and the heirship of the de-mandant. And hence it may be reasonable to conclude, that when the statute of wills, 32 H. 8. c. 1. made all socage lands devisable, an . assise of mort d'ancestor could no longer be brought of lands held in socage. See 1 Leon. 267. And that now, since the stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. (which converts all tenures, a few only excepted, into free and common socage), no assise of mort d'ancestor can be brought of any lands in the kingdom; but that, in case of abatements, recourse must be properly had to the writs of entry. 3 Comm. 187.

It is to be observed, morcover, that these writs are now almost obsolete, being in a great measure superseded by the action of ejectment, which answers almost all the purposes of real actions; except in some very pe-

ASSISE OF THE FOREST, Assisa de Foresta.] Is a statute touching orders to be observed in the king's forest. Manwood, 35. The statute of view of frank pledge, anno 18 Ed. 2. is also called the assise of the King; and the statute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3. is termed the assise of bread and ale. And these are so called, because they set down and appoint a certain measure, or order, in the things they contain. There is farther an assise of nuisance, assisa nocumenti, where a man maketh a nuisance to the freehold of another, to redress the same. And besides Littleton's division of assises, there are others mentioned by other writers, viz. assise at large, brought by an infant to inquire of a disscisin. and whether his ancestor were of full age, good memory, &c. when he made the deed pleaded, whereby he claims his right.

Assise in point of assise: assisa in modum assisæ.] Which is when the tenant, as it ant, without any thing further, pleads directly riff upon a writ of re-disseisin, as well as to the writ no wrong, no disseisin.

Assise out of the point of assise, is when the tenant pleadeth something by exception; as a foreign release, or foreign matter, triable in a foreign county; which must be tried by a jury, before the principal cause can proceed.

Assise of right of damages, is where the tenant confesseth an ouster, and referring it to a demurrer in law, whether it were rightly done or not, is adjudged to have done wrong; whereupon the demandant shall have a writ of assise to recover damages. Bract. lib. 4: F. N. B. 105. Assises are likewise awarded by default of tenants, &c .-- Of the Grand Assise, see tit. Jury .- For further particulars relative to Assise in general, see Com. Dig. and ante, tit. Assise.

ASSOCIATION, associatio.] Is a writ or patent sent by the king, either at his own motion, or at the suit of a party plaintiff, to the justices appointed to take assises, or of oyer and terminer, &c. to have others associated unto them. And this is usual where a justice of assise dies; and a writ is issued to the justices alive to admit the person associated: also where a justice is disabled, this is practised. F. N. B. 185: Reg. Orig. 201. 206. 223. The clerk of the assise is usually associate of course; in other cases, some learned serjeants at law are appointed. It hath been holden, that an association after another association allowed and admitted, doth not lie; nor are the justices then to admit other association in that writ afterwards, so long as that writ and commission stand in Bro. ASSUMPSIT, from the Lat. Assumo.] taken for a voluntary promise, by which a man assumes or takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another; it comprehends any verbal promise, made upon consideration, and the civilians express it diversely, according to the nature of the promise, calling it sometimes pactum, sometimes promissionem, or constitutum, &c. Terms de Ley. An action upon the case on assumpsit (or as it is also expressed, on promises), is an action the law gives the party injured by the breach or non-performance of a contract legally entered into; it is founded on a contract either express or implied by law; and gives the party damages in proportion to the loss he has sustained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92: Moor, 667.

Here it is to be considered,

I. In what cases an Assumpit is or is not the proper action.

II. What words will create an Assumpsit.

III. What consideration is sufficient.

IV. Of the proceedings.

I. In every action upon assumpsit, there ought to be a consideration, promise, and breach of promise. 1 Leon. 405. For,

The law distinguishes between a general indebitatus assumpsit and a special assumpsit; for though they come under the denominations of actions on the case, and the party is to be recompensed in damages alike in both, yet the first seems to be of a superior nature, and will lie in scarcely any case but where debt will lie; but for a particular undertaking, or collateral promise to discharge the debt or duty of another, a special assumpsit must be brought. Bac. Ab. vol. i. 337, (7th ed.)

Action on the case on assumpsit lies, for not making a good estate of land sold, according to promise; not paying money upon king may make an association unto the she- a bargain and sale, according to agreement; not delivering goods upon promise, on demand; this is by express assumpsit: an implied assumpsit is where goods are sold, or remedy by action of debt on the bond. 1 work is done, &c. without any price agreed upon; in an action on the case by quantum meruit, or quantum valebat, the law implies a promise and satisfaction to the value.

When one becomes legally indebted to another for goods sold, the law implies a promise that he will pay this debt; and if he be not paid, indebitatus assumpsit lies. 1 Danv. Ab. 26. And indebitatus assumpsit lies for goods sold and delivered to a stranger, ad requisitionem of the defendant. Ib. 27. But on indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold, you must formerly prove a price agreed on, otherwise the action would not lie; but now the plaintiff may recover in indebitatus assumpsit either on an agreed price or a quantum me-

Where the consideration on the part of the defendant is performed and executed, and the thing to be done by the defendant is mere payment of a sum of money due immediately, or where money is paid on a contract which is rescinded, so that defendant has no right to retain it, this constitutes a debt for which the plaintiff may sue in indebitatus assumpsit. Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (G.) (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

Indebitatus assumpsit lies to recover del credere commissions for guaranteeing sums insured upon policies. 14 E. R. 578.

If A. and B., having dealings with each other make up their accounts, and B. is found in arrear, and promises to pay the balance, an assumpsit lies against him on insimul computassent, and A. need not bring a writ of account. So if A. gives money, or delivers goods to B. to merchandise therewith, and B, promises to render an account, assumpit lies on this express promise, as well as account. 1 Salk. 9.

So if a tenant, being in arrear for rent, settles an account of arrears with his landlord, and promises to pay him the sum in which he is found in arrear, an assumpsit lies on this promise. 1 Roll. Where a man comes to buy goods, and they agree upon a price, and a day for the payment, and the buyer takes them away, an assumpsit for the money is the proper action; for trover will not lie for the goods, because the property was changed by a lawful bar-gain, and by that bargain the buyer was to convert the goods before the money was due. Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (B.) But if the goods are bought fraudulently, with an intention not to pay for them, trover will lie. 9 Barn. & C.

If a man and a woman, being unmarried, mutually promise to marry each other, and afterwards the man marries another woman, by which he renders himself incapable of performing his contract, an assumpsit lies, in which the woman shall recover damages. Carter, 233.

An indebitatus assumpsit lies for money by custom due for scavage; adjudged upon a special verdict, by which it was found that the sum demanded was due by custom, but that there was no express promise to pay it. Lev. 174.

If one receives my rent, under pretence of title, I may have an indebitatus assumpsit against him, for money had and received to my use. 2 Mod. 263: and see 10 Barn. & C. 234: Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (A.) (7th ed.)

If a feme sole marries a man, who, in truth, is married to another woman, and he makes a lease of her lands, and receives the rents, she may bring an indebitatus assumpsit against him for so much money received to her use; adjudged after verdict. 1 Salk. 28.

Where action is brought upon a contract, if the plaintiff mistakes the sum agreed upon, he fails in his action; but if he brings it upon the promise in law, arising from the debt there, though he mistakes the sum, he shall recover. Alleyn, 29. And where the action is special on the contract, the variance as to the sum is not fatal, unless it is in setting out a written contract, or unless it is made material by the mode of stating it in the declaration. See Bac. Ab. Pleas and Plead. ing. (B.) Every contract made between parties implies a mutual promise for performance: and yet an action may be brought on a reciprocal promise by one against the other, although he who brings it hath not performed on his side; Dyer, 30. 75; unless the performance on the other side be a condition precedent to the defendant's performance; as to which see Bac. Ab. Pleas and Pleading. (B. 2.) When an assumpsit or promise is the ground of the action, it must be precisely set

If a promise be made without limitation of time for its performance, reasonable time shall be allowed, if there be an immediate consideration for it; and not time during life. 1 Lill. Ab. 112. On promise to deliver a thing such a day, the party is bound to do it without request. 1 Lev. 284. But if a promise be to do any thing upon request, the request is necessary to entitle the plaintiff to the action, on which it shall arise. 1 Lev. 48. Though in every indebitatus assumpsit it is alleged the defendant promised to pay on request, and that he was requested, and refused payment, yet no request is ever proved. The time for the performance of the promise being elapsed, and the promise not performed, the law presumes request, unless in a particular case where a thing is not to be done until request. See 3 Camp. 459. Every executory contract, and debt that is not upon record, or on a specialty, which may be turned into damage, imports it in an assumpsit in law, and one may have debt or action on the case upon it at his election; for when a man doth agree to pay money, or to deliver any thing, he thereby promiseth to pay or deliver it. Plowd. 128: 1 Cro. 94.

Every contract executory implies an assumpsit to pay money at the day agreed, or immediately, if no time be limited. Mo. 667.

The assumpsit in an agreement that will be binding and give action, must be complete and perfect, and duly pursued and observed: and if the party that makes the assumpsit, and he to whom it is made, agree together, and a bond is given and taken for what is promised; by this the assumpsit is discharged. Also where an assumpsit is to stand to an award, if the award made be void, it will make the assumpsit void. Yelv. 87: 2 Leon. c. 223: 1 Leon. 170. Indebitatus assumpsit lies by a prothonotary against an attorney, for fees, for work done for defendant as attorney. Holt's Rep. 20.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for a customary fine, super mortem domini. Show. 35. Indebitatus assumpsit lies upon a personal contract for a sum in gross, as pro rebus venditis; per Holt, Ch. J. Show. 36.

Indebitatus lies for fees for being knighted. Show. 78.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for money paid by mistake, on an account; but not for money paid knowingly on illegal consideration, as an usurious bond. Salk. 22.

The mistake must be as to facts; for if the party knows the facts he cannot recover back the money on the ground that he mistook the law. 2 East, 469: 3 Maule & S. 378: 5 Taunt. 143: Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (A.)

But not upon a judgment by default obtained in one of the colonics against a party, who was summoned, according to the practice of the court there, in his absence, by nailing up a copy of the declaration at the court-house door; the defendant never having been present in the colony, or at any time subject to the jurisdiction of the colonial court. 9 E. Though assumpsit lies not for rent usually reserved on leases, yet if a man promise to pay, without a lease, so much a week as long as A. B. &c. permits him to enjoy a warehouse, &c. which is a special cause of promise, this action will lie. 2 Cro. 592. Now, by 11 G. 2. c. 19. § 14. where the demise is not by deed, the landlord may recover his rent in an action on the case for use and occupation. See Bac. Ab. Rent. (K. 7.)

Assumpsit lay against a lessee from year to year, upon his agreement to pay rent, not-withstanding his bankruptcy, and the occupation of the premises by his assignees during part of the time for which the rent accrued.

But now by the bankrupt act, 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 75. the bankrupt is not liable if the assignees accept the lease or agreement, nor if they decline it, and he deliver it up to the lessor. See Bac. Ab. tit. Bankrupt, vol. i. 620. (Ed.

Where a person pays money upon a mistake; or if he receives more from another in a reckoning than he ought, or more fees than should be taken, an assumpsit lies. 1 Salk. 22: Comb. 447. If a man receives money for the use of another person, assumpsit may be had against him, which supplies the place of action of account; and where money was deposited on a wager, an indebitatus lay for money received to a man's use; Show. 117; that is, if the party, before the wager is decided, give notice to rescind it, he may recover back the deposit. 8 Term Rep. 573:1 Barn. & A. 683. And after an illegal wager is decided, the parties may in assumpsit recover back the deposits from the stakeholder, if they give him notice before he has paid them over. 5 Term Rep. 405: 7 Price, 540: 8 Barn. & C. 221. See Bac. Ab. Assumpsit, vol. i. 348. 367. (7th ed.)

shall have the action: and not those who are originally, and the party furnishing the goods strangers, or for whose benefit it is intended. cannot recover against the person for whose Danv. 64. Nor shall action be brought against use they were furnished, then the person proone for what another receives, nor at his request, &c. 1 Salk. 23. But if a man delivers goods, and I will pay you;" or, "look to money to A. B. to my use, I may have an assumpsit against him for this money. If a man accounts, and, upon the account, is found in arrear to a certain sum, and presently, in consideration thereof, assumes to pay the debt at a day; assumpsit lies for this after the day. Yelv. 70. And on a promise to pay a sum of money at so much a month, an assumpsit may be brought before the whole is payable; for it is grounded upon the promise, which is broken by every non-payment, and damages may be recovered. 2 Cro. 504; 1 H. B. 547: 2 Bos. & Pull. 429.

II. Some agreements, though never so expressly made, are deemed of so important a nature, that they ought not to rest in verbal promise only, which cannot be proved but by the memory of witnesses. To prevent which, the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3. enacts, that in the five following cases no verbal promise shall be sufficient to ground an action upon; but at the least some note or memorandum of it shall be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged there-1. Where an executor or administrator promises to answer damages out of his own estate. 2. Where a man undertakes to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. 3. Where any agreement is made, upon consideration of marriage. 4. Where any contract or sale is made of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein. And lastly, where there is any agreement that is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. In all these cases a merc verbal assumpsit is void. See 2 Comm. 448. (See ante, tit. Agreement.)

The same statute provides that no contract for sale of goods for the price of 10l. or upwards shall be good, except the buyer actually receive part of the goods sold, or give earnest; or there be some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain being made by the

The intent of the parties by and to whom the promise or assumpsit is made, is more to be regarded than the form of words, and this intent and meaning is to be followed, not in the letter, but the substance of it: if a promise be to provide wedding clothes for a woman, this shall be taken for such clothes to be worn on the wedding or feast day, according to the dignity of the person. Poph. 182:

Yelv. 87: 3 Cro. 53.

All promises and contracts are to receive a favourable interpretation; and such construction is to be made, where any obscurity appears, as will best answer the intent of the parties; otherwise a person, by obscure wording of his contract, might find means to evade and elude the force of it. Hence it is a general rule, that all promises shall be taken most strongly against the promiser, and are not to be rejected, if they can by any means be reduced to a certainty.

that he will assign to him a certain term to pay him 10l., this is a good assumpsit, though the time of assignment and payment be not appointed; for the 10l. shall be paid in a convenient time after the assignment, which also must be done in a convenient time, and he shall not have time during his life. 1 Roll.

III. The consideration is the ground of the assumpsit: and no action on the case lieth against a man for a promise where there is no consideration why he should make the promise. 1 Danv. 53.

A consideration altogether executed and past was anciently held not to be sufficient to maintain an assumpsit; but this doctrine is denied by the court of K. B.; 3 Burr. 1671: see also Cro. Eliz. 282. by which it appears that though the consideration were executed, it would be sufficient if laid at plaintiff's re-

Where the doing a thing will be a good consideration, promise to do that thing will be so too. Per Holt. Ch. J. 12 Mod. 459.

Parting with my note to the defendant is a good consideration. 7 Mod. 12, 13.

An assumpsit may be upon a general consideration; but it doth not lie where the plaintiff has an obligation to pay the money, which is a stronger lien than assumpsit; nor when the party has a recognizance for the duty, &c. Jenk. Cent. 293.

Love or friendship are not considerations to ground actions upon. 2 Leon. 30. Also idle and insignificant considerations are looked upon as none at all; for wherever a person promises without a benefit arising to the promisor, or loss to the promisee, it is looked upon as a void promise. 2 Bulst. 269. But any detriment incurred by the plaintiff at defendant's request is a good ground for a promise, for the request raises a presumption that it is beneficial to the defendant. 4 East, 463: 4 B. & C. 8.

Lastly, it is to be observed, that considerations may be void, as being against law; for if they are wicked and ill in themselves, or unlawful, by being prohibited by some act of parliament, they are void; therefore if an officer, who, by the duty of his office, is obliged to execute writs, promises, in consideration of money paid him, to serve a certain process, an assumpsit will not lie on this promise; for the receipt of the money was extortion, and the consideration is unlawful. 1 Roll. Ab. 16. So a promise to pay a woman money in consideration of past cohabitation, is void for want of consideration. 4 Barn. & C. 650. So a promise to pay extra wages to a sailor in consideration of extraordinary exertion; for he is bound to exert himself to the utmost for the ship. 2 Camp. 317. A person cannot recover in assumpsit for commission and money expended, in buying for defendant shares in an illegal company. 3 Barn. & C. 639. And as to illegal considerations, see Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (E.) (7th ed.)

Implied contracts are such as do not arise from the express determination of any court, or the positive direction of any statute, but from natural reason and the just construction of law; which extends to all presumptive undertakings and assumpsits: which, though not actually made, yet constantly arise, upon this general intendment of the courts of judicature, that every man hath engaged to perform what his duty or justice requires. Thus, if I employ a person to transact any business for

I undertook, or assumed, to pay him so much as his labour deserved. And if I neglect to make him amends, he has a remedy for this injury, by bringing his action on the case upon this implied assumpsit: wherein he is at liberty to suggest, that I promised to pay him so much as he reasonably deserved, and then to aver that his trouble was really worth such a particular sum, which the defendant has omitted to pay. But this valuation of his trouble is submitted to the determination of a jury; who will assess such a sum in damago as they think he really merited. This is called an assumpsit upon a quantum meruit. There is also an implied assumpsit on a quantum valebat, which is very similar to the former; as where one takes up goods or wares of a tradesman, without expressly agreeing for the price. There the law concludes that both parties did intentionally agree, that the real value of the goods should be paid; and an action on the case may be brought accordingly, if the vendee refuses to pay that Another species of implied assumpsit is, when one has had and received money belonging to another, without any valuable consideration given on the receiver's part; for the law construes this to be money had and received for the use of the owner only; and implies, that the person so receiving promised and undertook to account for it to the true proprietor: And if he unjustly detain it, an action on the case lies against him for the breach of such implied promise and undertaking; and he will be made to repair the owner in damages equivalent to what he has detained in such violation of his promise. This is applicable to almost every case where the defendant has received money, which ex æquo et bono, he ought to refund. 2 Burr. 1012.

This species of assumpsit lies in numberless instances for money the defendant has received from a third person; which he claims title to, in opposition to the plaintiff's right, and which he had by law authority to receive from such third person. 2 Burr. 1008.

One great benefit which arises to suitors from the nature of this action is, that the plaintiff need not state the special circumstances, from which he concludes, that ex æquo et bono, the money received by the defendant ought to be deemed as belonging to him: he may declare generally, that the money was received to his use, and make out his case at the trial. 2 Burr. 1010.

This is equally beneficial to the defendant. It is the most favourable way in which he can be sued: he can be liable no farther than the money he has received; and against that may go into every equitable defence upon the general issue; he may claim every equitable allowance; he may prove a release without pleading it; in short, he may defend himself by every thing which shows that the plaintiff, ex æque et bono, is not entitled to the whole of his demand, or to any part of it.

This action will lie to recover premiums of insurance paid by the insured to the lottery-office-keeper. Comp. 790. But it will not lic to recover back winnings paid by the lottery-office-keeper or insurer of lottery tickets. 4 Burr. 1984.

It will lie against an auctioneer selling goods to which he had reason to know there was no title, which knowledge he concealed from the buyers, and this after he had paid over the proceeds of the sale. 5 Taunt. 657.

If two persons engage jointly in an illegal stock-jobbing transaction, and incur losses, and employ a broker to pay the differences, and one of them repay the broker, with the privity and consent of the other, the whole sum, he may recover a moiety from the other, in an action for money paid to his use. 3 Term Rep. 418. But this is now overruled. See 2 Boss. & Pull. 371: 3 Barn. & A. 179. And where it is necessary for the plaintiff to go into the illegal transaction in order to prove his case, he cannot recover. See the cases Bac. Ab. Assumpsit. (E.) vol. i. 370, 371. (7th ed.)

In such a case of an illegal transaction, if one partner pay money for another without an express authority he cannot recover it back.

3 Term. Rep. 418.

And, generally, assumpsit for money paid, laid out, and expended will not lie when the money has been paid against the express consent of the party for whose use it is supposed to have been paid. 1 Term. Rep. 20.

See title Consideration.

IV. The plaintiff must set forth every thing essential to the gist of the action, with such certainty, that it may appear to the court that there were sufficient grounds for the action: for if any thing material be omitted, it cannot appear to the court whether the damages given by the jury were in proportion to the demand, or whether the party was at all entitled to a verdict. And therefore, in an action upon the case, the plaintiff cannot declare quod cum the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum, and that the defendant, in consideration thereof, super se assumpsit to pay, &c. without showing the cause of the debt. 10 Co. 77. As to the certainty requisite in a declaration, see Bac. Ab. Pleas and Pleadings, B. (Ed. Gwillim and Dodd.)

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, quod cum there were several reckonings and accounts between the plaintiff and defendant; and at such a day, &c. insimul computaverunt for all debts, reckonings, and demands; and the defendant, upon the said account, was found to be in arrear the sum of 201. in consideration whereof the defendant promised to showing it was pro mercimoniis, or otherwise, wherefore he should have an account; for an account may be for divers causes, and several matters and things may be included and comprised therein, which in pede computi are reduced to a sum certain, and thercupon being indebted to the plaintiff, it is sufficient to ground an action. Cro. Car. 116. And the acknowledgement of a single item of debt due from defendant to plaintiff is sufficient to support an action on an account stated. 13 East, 249: 5 M. & S. 65. But the acknowledgment must be absolute and not qualified. Ry. & Moo. 239. And the amount must appear. 2 Carr. & Pull. 109. And see farther Roscoe on Evid. 235.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that the defendant did assume and promise to pay the plaintiff so much money, and also to carry away certain wood before such a day; the defendant, as to the money, cannot plead that he paid it; and as to the carriage of wood, non assumpsit; for the promise being entire, cannot be apportioned. March, 100. The defendant in such case might now plead non assumpsit generally, and show that he paid the money, and also that he did not undertake as to the wood, if such were the fact.

On an assumpsit in law, payment, or any other matter that excuses payment, may be given in evidence, on the general issue. In an assumpsit in deed, it must be formerly pleaded. Gilb. Evid. 204, 205. But now it may be given in evidence in either case. Any matter may be given in evidence on non assumpsit which negatives the promise, and many matters which admit the promise, but show it discharged, as accord and satisfaction, release, payment, infancy; though these last matters are certainly contrary to the strict meaning of the plea. But the statute of limitations, tender, bankruptcy, must be pleaded. Set-off may be pleaded or given in evidence on non assumpsit with a notice of set-

If the plaintiff declares upon an indebitatus assumpsit, and upon a quantum meruit, and the defendant pleads, that after the said several promises made, and before the action brought, the plaintiff and defendant came to an account concerning divers sums of money, and that the defendant was found in arrear to the plaintiff 30l., and thereupon, in consideration that the defendant promised to pay the said 301, the plaintiff likewise promised to release and acquit the defendant of all demands, this is a good plea; for, by the account, the first contract is merged. 2 Mod. 43, 44.

The defendant cannot plead that he revoked his promise; as if A. is in execution at the suit of B., and J. S. desires B. to let him go at large, and that he will satisfy him; to which B. agrees; though J. S., before any thing is done in pursuance of this promise and agreement, comes to B. and tells him, pay, &c.; this is a good declaration, without that he revokes his promise, and that he will not stand to it; yet such revocation cannot and serious denial of the attributes of God be pleaded in bar to the action. I Roll. Abr. 32. Sed quære if the revocation be before any

In an action upon an assumpsit, if the consideration be executory: as if one promises to do something for me, in consideration of something to be done before by me, to or for him, if I will sue him for what he is to do for me, I must aver that I have done that which was first to be done by me; for till that be done I may not maintain an action upon the promise. Cro. Jac. 583, 620. See as to the cases where the plaintiff's agreement is a condition precedent to the defendant's, and where the plaintiff must consequently show a performance on his part. Bac. Ab. To ATTACH, Attachiare, from the Fr. attacher.] To take or apprehend by commandment of a writ or precept. Lamb. Eiren, lib. 1. c. 16. It differs from arrest, in that he who arresteth a man carrieth him to a person of higher power to be forthwith disposed of; but he that attacheth keepeth the party attached, and presents him in court at the day assigned; as appears by the words of the writ. Another difference there is, that arrest is only upon the body of a man; whereas an attachment is oftentimes upon his goods. Kitch. 279. ATTACHMENT, is a process from a court of record, awarded by the justices at their discretion, on a bare suggestion, or on their own knowledge; and is properly grantable in cases of contempts, against which all courts of record, but more especially those of Westminster-hall, and above all the court of B. R. may proceed in a summary manner. Leach's Hawk. P. C. 2. c. 22. Sec 1 Wils. 300.

The most remarkable instances of contempts seem reducible to the following heads:-1. Contempts of the king's writs. 2. Contempts in the face of a court. 3. Contemptuous words or writings concerning the court. 4. Contempts of the rules or awards of the court. 5. Abuse of the process of the courts. 6. Forgeries of writs and other deceits tending to impose on the court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33.

All courts of record have a kind of discretionary power over their own officers, and are to see that no abuses be committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves; therefore if a sheriff or other death, according as it extends to any express not serving a writ: as if he refuse to do it,

Br. 6. 27: the plaintiff, or receive a bribe from the defendant, or give him notice to remove his person or effects, in order to prevent the service of any writ; the court which awarded it may punish such offences in such a manner as shall seem proper by attachment. Dyer, 218: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 2.

But if there be no palpable corruption, nor extraordinary circumstance of wilful negligence or obstinacy, the judgment whereof is to be left to the discretion of the court, it seems not usual to proceed in this manner; but to leave the party to his ordinary remedy against the sheriff, either by action or by rule to return the writ, or by an alias and pluries, which if he have no excuse for not executing, an attachment goes of course. Hob. 62, 264, Noy. 101: F. N. B. 38: Finch, 237: 5 Mod. 314, 315. And the court will not grant an attachment against the deputy sealer of the writs for a criminal act in refusing to seal a writ on a legal holiday without an extra fee. 7 Taunt. 182. But quere whether the officer is entitled to demand such fee?

Attachment lies against attorneys for injustice, and base dealing by their clients, in delaying suits, &c. as well as for contempts to the court. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 11. If affidavits to ground an attachment are full as to the charge; yet if the party deny such charge by as plain and positive affidavits, he shall be discharged; but if he take a false oath, he may be indicted of perjury. Mod. Cas.

Against sheriffs making false returns of writs, and against bailiffs for frauds in arrest, and exceeding their power, &c. attachment may be had. For contempts against the king's writs; using them in a vexatious manner; altering the teste, or filling them up after sealed, &c. attachment lies. And for contempts of an enormous kind, in not obeying writs, &c. attachment may issue against peers. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 33. &c. and see 1 Brod. & Bing. 24: 4 Moo. 147. For persuading jurors not to appear on a trial, attachment lies against the party, for obstructing the procecdings of the court. 1 Lill. 121. The court of B. Attachment lies for proceeding in an inferior court, after a habeas corpus issued, and a supersedeas to stay proceedings. 21 Car. B. R. And attachment may be granted against justices of peace, for proceeding on an indictment after a certiorari delivered to them to remove the indictment. 1 Lill. 121. Tidd. 478. (9th ed.)

An attachment is the proper remedy for disobedience of the rules of court; as of those made in ejectment, arbitrament, &c. So where a defendant in account, being adjudged to account before the auditors, refuses to do it, unless they will allow matter disallowed by the court before; or where one refuses to pay costs taxed by the master, whose taxation the law looks upon as a taxation by the court. 1 Mod. 21: 1 Salk. 71.

But an attachment is not granted for disobedience of a rule of Nisi Prius, unless it be first made a rule of court; nor for disobedience of a rule made by a judge at his chainber, unless it be entered; nor for disobedience of any rule without personal service. 1 Salk. 84: Bac. Ab. Attachment. (A.) (7th ed.)

Also an attachment is proper for abuses of the process of the court, as for suing out execution where there is no judgment; bringing an appeal for the death of one known to be alive; making use of the process of a superior court, to bring a defendant within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, and then dropping it; using such process in a vexatious, oppressive, or unjust manner, without colour of serving any other end by it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33. &c. It seems also that counsellors are punishable by attachment for foul practices. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 30. Gaolors are thus punishable for misbehaviour in their offices. Id. ib. Witnesses for nonattendance on a trial. Leach's Hawk. P. C. 2. c. 22. § 33.—Peers are liable to attachment for certain outrageous contempts, as a disobedience to a writ of habeas corpus, and generally of other writs. Id. ib. But the court of King's Bench will not grant an attachment against a peer for not paying money awarded, though the defendant consent it shall issue on condition that it should lie in the office for a certain time. 7 Term. Attachments are usually granted on a rule to show cause, unless the offence complained of be of a flagrant nature, and positively sworn to, in which last case the party is ordered to attend, which he must do in person, as must every one against whom an attachment is granted; and if he shall appear to be apparently guilty, the court in discretion, on consideration of the nature of the crime, and other circumstances, will either commit him immediately, in order to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him concerning the contempt complained of, or will suffer him to enter into recognizance to answer such interrogatories; which if they be not exhibited within four days, the party may move to have the recognizance discharged; otherwise fuses to hold his court, after a writ issued to he must answer them, though exhibited after

ATTACHMENT OF PRIVILEGE is where a man, by virtue of his privilege, calls another to that court whereto he himself belongs, and in respect thereof, is privileged, there to answer some action (as an attorney, &c.); or it is a power to apprehend a man in a place privileged. Book. Entr. 431. But this proceeding is virtually abolished by the act for uniformity of process, 2 W. 4. c. 39. which establishes only three species of process;

Affachment foreign, is an attachment of the goods of foreigners, found in some liberty, to satisfy their creditors within such liberty.

Foreign Attachment under the custom of Loudon is thus: if a plaint be entered in the court of the mayor or the shcriff against A., and the process be returned nihil, and thereupon plaintiff suggest that another person within London is indebted to A., the debtor shall be warned (whence he is called the garnishee), and if he does not deny himself to be indebted to A. the debt shall be attached in his hands. Com. Dig. tit. Attachment foreign, cites 22 Ed. 4. 30.

The plaint may be exhibited in the mayor's or the sheriff's court; but the proceeding in the former is the most advantageous. Id. ib.

But a foreign attachment cannot be had when a suit is depending in any of the courts at Westminster. Cro. Eliz. 691. And nothing is attachable but for a certain and due debt; though by the custom of London, money may be attached before due, as a debt; but not levied before due. Sid. 327: 1 Nels. Ab. 252,

Foreign attachments in London, upon plaint of debt, are made after this manner; A. oweth B. 100l. and C. is indebted to A. 100l. B. enters an action against A. of 200l., and by virtue of that action a sergeant attacheth 100%. in the hands of C. as the money of A. to the use of B., which is returned upon that action. The attachment being made and returned by the sergeant, the plaintiff is immediately to see an attorney before the next court, or the defendant may then put in bail to the attachment, and nonsuit the plaintiff: four court days must pass before the plaintiff can cause C. the garnishee, in whose hands the money was attached, to show cause why B. should not condemn the 100l. attached in the hands of C. as the money of A:, the defendant in the action (though not in the attachment,) to the use of B. the plaintiff; and the garnishee C. may appear in court by his attorney, wage his law, and plead that he hath no money in his hands of the defendant's, or other special matter; but the plaintiff may hinder his waging of law by producing two sufficient citizens to swear that the garnishee had either money or goods in his hands of A. at the time of the attachment, of which affidavit is to be made before the lord mayor, and being filed, may be pleaded by way of estoppel: then the plaintiff must put in bail, that if the defendant come within a year and a day into court, and he can discharge himself of the money condemned in court, and that he owed nothing to the plaintiff at the time in the plaint mentioned, the said money shall be forthcoming, &c. If the garnishee fail to appear by his 1st, a writ of summons where no bail is re- attorney, being warned by the officer to come into court to show cause as aforesaid, he is attach the debt before the day of payment taken by default for want of appearing, and judgment given against him for the goods and money attached in his hands, and he is without remedy either at common law or in equity; for if taken in execution, he must pay the money condemned, though he hath not one penny, or go to prison; but the garnishee appearing to show cause why the money or goods attached in his hands ought not to be condemned to the use of the plaintiff, having feed an attorney, may plead as aforesaid, that he hath no money or goods in his hards of the party's against whom the attenment is made; and it will then be tried by a jury, and judgment awarded, &c.; but after trial, bail may be put in, whereby the attachment shall be dissolved, but the garnishee &c. and his security will then be liable to what debt the plaintiff shall make out to be due, upon the action; and an attachment is never thoroughly perfected, till there is a bail, and satisfaction upon record. Privileg. Loud.

But the original defendant must be summoned and have notice; otherwise judgment against the garnishee will be erroneous; and the money paid or levied in execution, or it will not discharge the debt from the garnishee to the defendant: (though it was alleged that the custom of the city court is to give no no-3 Wils. 297: 2 Black. Where a foreign attachment is pleaded to an action, the custom is to set forth that he who levied the plaint shall have execution of the debt owing by himself, and by which he was attached, if the plaintiff in the original action shall not disprove it within a year and a day; now if the plaintiff in the action below doth not set forth such conditional judgment given by the court, it is wrong, because he doth not bring his case within the custom. Vide 2 Lutw. 985: 2 Chitt. R. 438: Tidd's Appendix, c. 16. § 4. (9th ed.)

In assumpsit, &c. there was evidence given, that the debt was attached by the custom of London before the action brought, and that it was condemned there before the plea pleaded; and this evidence was given upon the general issue non assumpsit: and it being insisted for the defendant, that this should relate so as to defeat the plaintiff's action, it was adjudged that where there is an attachment and condemnation before the action brought, it may be given in evidence upon the general issue, because there is an alteration of the property: but if the attachment be only before the action brought, and the condemnation 'afterwards, the attachment may be pleaded in abatement, and the condemnation may be pleaded in bar, but shall not be given in evidence on the general issue, because by the condemnation the property is altered, but not before. 1 Salk. 280. 291.

Action of debt, &c. the defendant pleaded in bar, that there was a custom in London to came; et per curiam such a custom may be good; but to have judgment to recover the debt before the day of payment is come, cannot be a good custom, because the debtee himself could not recover in such case, and therefore he who made the attachment shall not. This custom was pleaded, that the debtee in person, or by his attorney, may swear that the debt is due; but this cannot be good as to the attorney; it was agreed that goods might be attached by a foreign attachment, and that the value thereof ought to be found before judgment; but that this plea was ill, because the defendant did not aver it, viz. et hoc paratus est verificare. W. Jones, 406.

A sum of money was to be paid at Michaelmas, and it was attached before that day; adjudged that a foreign attachment cannot reach a debt before it is due: therefore, though the judgment on the attachment was after Micharlmas, yet the money being attached before it was due, it is for that reason void. Cro. Eliz. 184. For farther matter, see Com. Dig. tit. Attachment, Foreign Attachment.

Money due to an executor or administrator, as such, cannot be attached. It would give a simple contract creditor priority over judgments, &c. Fisher v. Lane and others, 3 Wils. 297. Nor trust-money in the hands of the garnishee. See Doug. 380.

In an action on the case the plaintiff had judgment against the defendant, and he owing 60l. to one G. D., he entered a plaint against him in London, and attached the 60%. in the hands of the said defendant, against whom the plaintiff had recovered as aforesaid, and had execution according to the custom; afterwards the plaintiff brought a sci. fa. against the defendant, to show cause why he should not have execution upon the judgment which he had recovered, to which the defendant pleaded the execution upon the attachment; and upon demurrer to that plea it was adjudged against the defendant, because a duty which accrueth by matter of record, cannot be attached by the custom of London; for judgments obtained in the king's courts shall not be defeated or avoided by such particular customs, they being of so high a nature that they cannot be reached by attachment. 1 Leon. 29.

Debtor and creditor being both citizens of London, the debtor delivered several goods to the Exeter carrier then in London, to carry and deliver them at Exeter, and the creditor attached them in the hands of the carrier for the debt due to him from his debtor; adjudged that the action should be discharged, because the carrier is privileged in his person and goods, and not only in the goods which are his own, but in those of other men, of which he is in possession, for he is answerable for them. 1 Leon. 189.

An executor submitted to an award, and the arbitrators awarded, that the defendant should pay the executor 350l. This money is not attachable in his hands by any creditor of his testator, though it is assets in his hands when recovered; because it was not due to the testator tempore mortis, and the custom of foreign attachments extends only to such debts.

Money awarded under a rule of court cannot in any case be attached, 4 Term. Rep. 313. n.

Money directed to be paid by A. to B. by the master's allocatur, cannot be attached in A.'s hands by process out of the sheriffs' court against B. 4 Term. Rep. 312. A garnishee against whom a recovery was had in the mayor's court on foreign attachment, after a summons to defendant, and nihil returned, may protect himself by giving such proceedings in evidence upon assumpsit in an action to recover the same debt brought by the defendant below, without proving the debt of the plaintiff below, who attached the money in his hands, although by the course of proceedings in the mayor's court, bail not having been put in, the plaintiff below was not obliged to prove the debt to entitle himself to recover against the garnishee. 3 East, 367.

ATTACHMENT OF THE FOREST, is one of the three courts held in Forests. Manwood, 90. The lower court is called the Attachments: the middle one, the Swainmote: the highest, the Justice in Eyre's seat. The court of attachment seemeth to be so called, because the verderers of the forest have therein no other authority, but to receive the attachments of offenders against vert and venison, taken by the rest of the officers, and to enrol them, that they may be presented and punished at the next justice's seat. Manwood, 92. And this attaching is by three means: 1. By goods and chattels. 2. By the body, pledges, and mainprize. 3. By the body only. This court is to be kept every forty days. See Crompton in his Court of the Forest, and this Dict. tit. Forest.

ATTAINDER, attincta and attinctura.] The stain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned; the immediate inseparable consequence by the common law, on the pronouncing the sentence of death.

He is then called attaint, attinctus, stained or blackened. He is no longer of any credit or reputation; he cannot be a witness in any court; neither is he capable of performing the functions of another man; for by an anticipation of his punishment, he is already dead in law. 3 Inst. 213. This is after judgment; convicted and attainted; though they are frequently, through inaccuracy, confounded together; when judgment is once pronounced, both law and fact conspire to prove him completely guilty; and there is not the remotest possibility left of any thing to be said in his Upon judgment therefore of death, and not before, the attainder of a criminal commences; or upon such circumstances as are equivalent to judgment of death; as judgment of outlawry on a capital crime, pronounced for absconding or fleeing from justice, which tacitly confesses the guilt. And therefore either upon judgment of outlawry, or of death, for treason or felony, a man shall be said to be attainted. 4 Comm. 380, 381.

A man is attainted by appearance, or by process: attainder on appearance is by confession, or verdict, &c. Confession, when the prisoner upon his indictment being asked whether guilty or not guilty, answers guilty, without putting himself upon his country; (and formerly confession was allowed before the coroner in sanctuary; whereupon the offender was to abjure the realm, and this was called attainder by abjuration.) Attainder by verdict is when the prisoner at the bar pleaded not guilty, and is found guilty by the verdict of the jury of life and death. And attainder by process (otherwise termed attainder by default or outlawry,) is when the party fleeth, and is not to be found until he hath been five times publicly called or proclaimed in the country, on the last whereof he is outlawed upon his default. Staundf. Pl. Co. 44. 122. 182. Also persons may be attainted by act of parliament.

Acts of attainder of criminals have been passed in several reigns, on the discovery of plots and rebellions, from the reign of king Charles II., when an act was made for the attainder of several persons guilty of the murder of king Charles I. to this time; among which that for attainting Sir John Fenwick, for conspiring against King William, is the most remarkable; it being made to attaint and convict him of high treason on the oath of one witness, just after a law had been enacted, that no person should be tried or attainted of high treason where corruption of blood is incurred, but by the oath of two lawful witnesses, unless the party confess, stand mute, &c. Stat. 7 and 8 W. 3. c. 3. But in the case of Sir John Fenwick, there was something extraordinary; for he was indicted of treason, on the oaths of two witnesses; though but one only was produced against him on his trial. It was alleged Sir John had tampered with, and prevailed on, one of the witnesses to withdraw.

sec this Dict. tit. Forfeiture. As to Corruption of Blood, this operates upwards and neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his ancestors, nor retain those he is already in possession of, nor transmit them by descent to any heir; but the same shall escheat to the lord of the fee, subject to the king's superior right of forfeiture; and the person attainted shall also obstruct all descents to his posterity, wherever they are obliged to derive a title through him to a remoter ances-See tit. Tenure, Descent, Forfeiture.

This is one of those notions which our laws have adopted from the feudal constitutions, at the time of the Norman conquest, as appears from its being unknown in those tenures which are indisputably Saxon, or Gavelkind; wherein, though by treason, according to the ancient Saxon laws, the land is forfeited to the king, yet no corruption of blood, no impediment of descent, ensues; and on judgment of mere felony no escheat accrues to the lord. And therefore as every other oppressive mark of feudal tenures is now happily worn away in these kingdoms, it is to be hoped that the corruption of blood, with all its connected consequences, not only of present escheat, but of future incapacities of inheritance even to the twentieth generation, may in process of time be abolished by act of parliament; as it stands upon a very different footing from the forfeiture of lands for high treason, affecting the king's person or government. And indeed the legislature has, from time to time, appeared very inclinable to give way to so equitable a provision; by enacting that, in certain treasons respecting the papal supremacy, stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1; and the public coin, stats. 5 Eliz. c. 11; 18 Eliz. c. 1; 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 26; 15 and 16 G. 2. c. 28; and in many of the new made felonies, created since the reign of Henry the Eighth by act of parliament, corruption of blood shall be saved. But as in some of the acts for creating felonies (and those not of the most atrocious kind) this saving was neglected, or forgotten to be made, it seems to be highly reasonable and expedient to antiquate the whole of this doctrine by one undistinguishing law. By the stat. of 7 A. c. 21. (the operation of which was postponed by stat. 17 G. 2. c. 39.) after the death of the sons of the late Pretender, no attainder for treason was to extend to the disinheriting any heir, nor the prejudice of any person, other than the offender himself; these acts virtually abolished all corruption of blood for treason, though (unless the legislature should interpose) they still continue for many sorts of felony. It is to be regretted that it should have been deemed necessary by 39 G. 3. c. 93. to repeal these merciful enactments. See farther tit. Forfeiture, Corruption of Blood.

By 55 G. 3. c. 145. it is enacted that no attainder for felony, except in cases of high

As to forfeiture of lands, &c. by attainder, treason, petty treason, or murder, or of abetting, procuring, or counselling the same, shall extend to the disinheriting of any heir, nor to downwards, so that an attainted person can the prejudice of the right or title of any person or persons, other than the offender during his natural life only: and every person to whom the right or interest of any lands or tenements, after the death of such offender, shall have appertained, if no such attainder had been, may enter into the same.

By attrinder all the personal property and rights of action in respect of property accruing to the party attainted, either before or after attainder, are vested in the crown, without office found, and therefore attainder may be well pleaded in bar to an action, or a bill of exchange indorsed to the plaintiff after his attainder. 2 B. & A. 258.

In treason for counterfeiting the coin, although, by the statutes, corruption of blood is sayed, yet the lands of the offender, are forfeited immediately to the king on attainder, it being a distinct penalty from corruption of blood: for the corruption may be saved, and the forfeiture remain, &c. And accordingly so it is provided by some statutes. 1 Salk. 85.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 4. for England, 9 G. 4. c. 54. for Ireland, no attainder shall be pleaded in bar of any indictment, unless the attainder be for the same offence as that charged in the indictment.

Attainders may be reversed or falsified, by a writ of error, or by plea; if by writ of error, it must be by the king's leave, &c. and when by plea, it may be by denying the treason, pleading a pardon by act of parliament, &c. 3

By a king's taking the crown upon him, all attainders of his person are ipso facto purged, without any reversal. 1 Inst. 26: Finch. L. 82: Wood. 17. This was the declaration of parliament, made in favour of Henry the Seventh. See 1 Comm. 248.

The stat. 8 W. 3. c. 5. requires Sir George Barclay, Major-General Holmes, and other persons, to surrender themselves to the lord chief justice, or secretaries of state; or to be attainted. By the 13 W. 3. c. 3. the pretended Prince of Wales is under attainder of treason, &c. And by 1 G. 1. c. 16. the Duke of Ormond and others are attainted. And besides these acts of attainder, bills for inflicting pains and penalties are sometimes passed; as that against the bishop of Rochester. Stat. 9 G. 1. c. 17. See tit. Corruption of Blood.

ATTAINT, attincta.] A writ that has to inquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a false verdict, that so the judgment following thereupon might be reversed. This proceeding is now repealed by the stat. 6 G. 4. c. 50. δ δ 0. (see tit. Jury) which enacts "that it shall not be lawful for the king, or any one on his behalf, or for any party or parties in any case whatsoever, to commence or prosecute any writ of attaint against any jury or jurors for Every person that owes suit to the county-court, court-baron, &c. may make an attorney to do his suit. Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 10.

ATTORNEY, attornatus.] Is one that is appointed by another man to do anything in his absence. West. Symb .: Crompt. Jurisdict. 105. An attorney is either public, in the courts of record, the King's Bench, and Common Pleas, &c. and made by warrant from his client: or private, upon occasion for any particular business, who is commonly made by letter of attorney. In ancient times, those of authority in courts had it in their power whether they would suffer men to appear or sue by any other but themselves: and the king's writs were to be obtained for the admission of attornies: but, since that, attornies have been allowed by several statutes. Attornies may be made in such pleas whereon appeal lieth not: in criminal cases there will be no attornies admitted. See stat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 8. ATTORNIES AT LAW, are such persons as take upon them the business of other men, by whom they are retained.

Before the statute of West. 2. c. 10. [13 Ed. 1. A. D. 1285] all attornies were made by letters patent under the great seal, commanding the justices to admit the person to be his attorney. These patents, where they were obtained, seem to have been enrolled by a proper officer, called the clerk of the warrants; and also the courts enrolled those patents on which any proceedings were. If such letters patent could not be obtained, the persons were obliged to appear each day in court in their proper persons. Gilb. H. C. P. 32, 33.

The said statute of West. 2. c. 10. gives to all persons a liberty of appearing, and appointing an attorney, as if they had letters patent; and therefore the clerk of the warrants received each person's warrant, and upon the warrant it equally appeared to the court, that he had appointed such a one his attorney to the end of the cause, unless revoked; so that on each act there is no occasion of the plaintiff's and defendant's presence, as was used before that time. This authority continues till judgment, and for a year and a day, and afterwards to sue out execution, and for a longer time, if they continue execution; but if not, the judgment is supposed to be satisfied; and to make it appear otherwise, the plaintiff must again come into court, which he either does by a scire fac' or an action of debt on the judgment. Gilb. H. C.

Parties to fines, as well demandant or plaintiff as tenants or defendants, that will acknowledge their right of lands unto others in pleas of warrantia chartæ, covenant, &c. before the fines pass, shall appear personally, so that their age, idiotey, or other default (if any be) may be discerned; provided that if any, by age, impotency, or casualty, is not able to come into court, one of the justices shall go to the party and receive his cognizance, and shall take with him a knight or man of good fame. Barons of the exchequer and justices. shall not admit attornies, but in pleas that pass before them, and where they be assigned. Reserving to the Chancellor his authority in admitting attornies, and to the Chief Justices. Stat. 15 Ed. 2. stat. 1.

In respect of the several courts, there are attornies at large, and attornies special, belonging to this or that court only. An attorney may be a solicitor in other courts, by a special retainer: one may be attorney on record, and another do the business; and there are attornies who manage business out of the courts, &c. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 18. was enacted, that the justices should examine attornies, and remove the unskilful; and attornies shall swear to execute their offices truly, &c.; and by stat. 33 H. 6. c. 7. the number of attornies in Norfolk and Suffolk were limited.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. attornies, &c. shall not be allowed any fees laid out for counsel, or otherwise, unless they have tickets thereof signed by them that receive such fees; and they shall give in true bills to their clients of all the charges of suits, under their hands, before the clients shall be charged with the payment thereof. If they delay their client's suit for gain; or demand more than their due fees and disbursements, the clients shall recover costs and treble damages; and they shall be for ever after disabled to be attornies. None shall be admitted attornies in courts of record, but such as have been brought up in the said courts, or are well practised and skilled, and of an honest disposition; and no attorney shall suffer any other to follow a suit in his name, on pain of forfeiting 201. to be divided between the king and the party grieved. > The act 2 G. 2. c. 23. ordains, that all attornies shall be sworn, admitted, and enrolled, before allowed to sue out writs in the courts at Westminster; and after the 1st of December, 1730, none shall be permitted to practise but such as have served a clerkship of five years to an attorney, and they shall be examined, sworn, and admitted in open court; and attornies shall not have more than two clerks at one time, &c. Every writ, and copy of any process, served on a defendant, and also every warrant made out thereon, shall be indorsed with the name of the attorney by whom sued forth: and no attornies or solicitors shall commence any action for fees till a month after the delivery of their bills, subscribed with their hands; also the parties chargeable may, in the mean time, get such bills taxed, and, upon the taxation, the sum remaining due is to be paid in full of the said bills, or in default the parties shall be liable to attachment, &c. By 9 G. 4, c. 25, any person appointed on behalf of his majesty, solicitor for the Treasury, Customs, Excise, or Stamps, &c., may practise as such in all courts and places. See 6 Bing. 404. By 1 W. 4. c. 70. all attornies admitted and practising in the courts of Wales and Chester may, on payment of one shilling, be entered and practise in the courts at Westminster.

By the 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 48. § 1. (as amend. ed by the 3 G. 4. c. 16.) persons, who at the time of being articled have taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts, or Bachelor of Law, at Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, may be admitted as attornies after three years' service, provided the degree of B. A. have been taken within six years, and that of B. L. within eight years after matriculation, and provided four years have not elapsed between the time of taking the degree and the entering into articles; and by sect. 2. if any person articled for five years shall bona fide be a pupil to a barrister or special pleader for one year, he may be admitted an attorney in like manner as now done where the clerk has served part of his time with the agent of the person to whom he is bound.

By several stamp acts, every admitted attorney, solicitor, notary, proctor, agent, or procurator, shall annually take out a certificate from the courts in which they practise, on penalty of 50l.

By the last stamp act, 55 G. 3. c. 184. the duty is 12l. where the attorney resides in the limits of the two-penny post, if he has been admitted three years, and 61. if not admitted so long; if he reside elsewhere 81. if admitted three years, and 4l. if not so long. Bac. Ab. Attorney (A.) (7th ed.) Tidd. 75. (9th ed.)

Stamp duties are imposed by several acts on articles of clerkship to attornies and solicitors. Acts of indemnity are from time to time passed, allowing farther time for stamping articles, and taking out certificates.

By 9 G. 4. c. 49. articles under which any person has been bound in order to admission in the courts of Wales, and the counties palatine, may be stamped on the payment of 120l., and the party having served under them may thereupon be admitted in the courts at Westminster. Attornies may now practise in the Exchequer. See that title. And it was provided, on the abolition of the courts of great session in Wales, and of the courts in the county palatine of Chester, that attornies of those courts might be admitted as attornies of the courts of Westminster. See Wales.

Attornies of courts, &c., shall not receive or procure any blank warrant for arrests from any sheriff, without writ first delivered, on pain of severe punishment, expulsion, &c. And no attorney shall make out a writ with a clause ac etium billa. &c. where special bail is not required by law. Pasch. 15 Car. 2. See tit. Appearance. In a criminal case the attorney for the defendant may be his bail. Doug. 467. See tit.

Payment to the attorney is payment to the principal. Doug. 623: 1 Black R. 3.

An action lies against an attorney for neglecting to charge a person in execution at his elient's suit, according to a rule of court; court will not proceed against him for it in a summary way. 4 Burr. 2060.

In ordinary cases, if an attorney be defi-cient in skill or care, by which a loss arises to his client, he is liable to an action on the case for damages., 2 Wils. 325: 8 Moo. 340: 1 Bing. 347: and see Tidd, 85. (9th ed.) And in some instances the court will make him pay costs to his own client for neglect, or to the opposite party for vexatious and improper conduct. Tidd, 86.

An attorney has a lien on the money recovered by his client, for his bill of costs; if the money come to his hands he may retain to the amount of his bill. He may stop it in transitu if he can lay hold of it; if he apply to the court, they will prevent its being paid over until his demand is satisfied. If the attorney give notice to the desendant not to pay till his bill be discharged, a payment by the defendant after such notice, would be in his own wrong, and like paying a debt which has been assigned after notice. Doug. 238.

An attorney has a lien upon a sum awarded in favour of his client as well as if recovered by judgment; and if after notice to defendant, the latter pay it over to his plaintiff, the plaintiff's attorney may compel a repayment of it to himself; and he shall not be prejudiced by a collusive release from the plaintiff to the detindent. Ormerod v. Tate, 1 East, 464; and see 5 Taunt. 429: 2 Barn. & A. 402: 3 Bing. 132: Tidd, 338; (9th ed.)

An attorney is bound to disclose, when called as a witness, the contents of a notice which he received to produce a paper in the hands of his client. 7 E. R. 357.

But an attorney of one court may, in that court, hold an attorney of another court to bail. See tit. Privilege. By the 2 W. 4. c. 39, the proceedings by bill against attornies, and by attachment of privilege at suit of them are virtually abolished.

Those who have not been attending their employment in King's Bench for one year last past, unless hindered by sickness, are not to be allowed their privilege as attornies. 2

In the case of an attorney who takes securities from his client, such securities cannot be used as conclusive evidence of the consideration advanced, as expressed in the securities, but require extrinsic evidence of the money having been actually advanced to prove the transaction to have been bona fide. ATTORNEY OF THE DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER. Attornatus curiæ ducatus Lancastriæ.] Is the second officer in that court; and seems for his skill in law to be there placed as assessor to the chancellor, and chosen for some special trust reposed in him, to deal between the king and his tenants. Cowel.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, is a great officer under the king, made by letters patent. It is his place to exhibit informations, and prosecute for the crown in matters criminal; and to file bills in the Exchequer, for any thing concerning the king in inheritance or profits; and others may bring bills against the king's attorney. His proper place in court, upon any special matters of a criminal nature, wherein his attendance is required, is under the judges, on the left hand of the clerk of the crown; but this is only upon solemn and extraordinary occasions; for usually he does not sit there, but within the bar in the face of the court.

By royal mandate, 14 Dec. 54 G. 3. the king's Attorney and Solicitor General have place and audience before the king's two ancient serjeants: and it may be presumed also before the king's Advocate General. ATTORNMENT, Attornamentum, from the French tourner, to turn.] Sir Martin Wright and many other writers have laid it down as a general rule, that by the old feudal law, the feudatory could not alien the feud without the consent of the lord; nor the lord alien or transfer his seignory without the consent of his feudatory. Wright's Tenures, 30, 31. It is certain that this doctrine formerly prevailed in England; if not at least to equal extent in other countries.

This necessity of the consent of the tenant to the alienation of the lord, gave rise in our old law to the doctrine of attornment; which at common law signified only the consent of the tenant to the grant of the seignory; whereby he agreed to become tenant of the new lord. But after the statute quia emptores terrarum (18 Ed. 1. st. 1.) was passed, by which subinfeudation was prohibited, it became necessary that when the reversion or remainderman after an estate for years, for life, or in tail, granted his reversion or remainder, the particular tenant should attorn to the grantce. The necessity of attornment was, in some measure, avoided by the statute of uses (27 H. 8. c. 10.), as by that statute the possession was immediately executed to the use; and by the statute of Wills (34 and 35 H. 8 c. 5,) by which the legal estate is immediately vested in the devisec.

Attornments, however, still continued to be necessary in many cases; but both their necessity and efficacy are now almost totally taken away; for by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 9, it is enacted that all grants and conveyances of manors, lands, rents, reversions, &c. by fine, or otherwise, shall be good without the attornment of the tenants; but notice must be given of the grant, to the tenant, before which he shall not be prejudiced by payment of any rent to the grantor, or for breach of the condition for non-payment. And by stat. 11 G. 2. c. 19. attornments of lands, &c. made by tenants to strangers, claiming title to the estate of their landlords shall be null and void, and their landlord's possession not affected thereby; though this shall not extend to vacate any attornment made pursuant to a judgment at law, or with consent of the landlord; or to a mortgagee on a forfeited mortgage.

Till the passing of these statutes, the doc-The Attorney General is the only legal trine of attornment was one of the most copious and abstruce points of the law. But jowner his remedy against the bidder, on the useless. See 1 Inst. 309.

AUCTIONS and AUCTIONEERS. der various statutes, every auctioneer must take out an annual license: paying certain duties within the bills of mortality and without; and duties are imposed on goods sold by action; which duties are a charge on the auctioneer, not on the purchaser.

The practice of puffing, as it is called, at auctions, was in Bexwell v. Christie, Cowp. 395. considered as illegal; but the legislature having enacted, that property put up to sale at auction shall, upon the knocking down the hammer, subject the auctioneer to the payment of certain duties, unless such property can, by the mode prescribed by the act, be shown to have been bought in by the owner himself, or by some person by him authorised, seems indirectly to have given a sanction to this practice.

An auctioneer is an agent authorised by a buyer to sign a contract for him. 2 Taunt. 38: 4 Taunt. 209.

A sale was appointed for two certain days, for the disposal of furniture, but some not being sold, announcement was made that the remainder would be sold at a future day. The persons who then attended to buy were directed to retire to another room, where each was to write the sum offered by him on a piece of paper, and the person writing the largest sum was to be the purchaser.—Held to be a sale by auction, so as to subject the party directing that mode of bidding to penalty, for acting as an auctioneer, and not licensed as such. Attorney General v. Taylor, 13 Price, 636.

An auctioneer cannot, in conducting a sale, deviate from the strict terms of the conditions: if he does he will be personally responsible for all the consequences, as well in respect of his liability to actions for duties demandable against him, as of losing his right to bring actions for remedies to which he might otherwise resort, and the proper course to be pursued by such auctioneer where he has been called upon to pay the officer of the crown the duties on a sale by auction, is to proceed by action, on the implied assumpsit, against the vendor as his employer, which he may maintain if he has acted AUDIENCE COURT, Curia audientiæ Cantuariensis.] A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, having the same authority with the court of arches, though inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. It was held in the archbishop's palace; and in former times the archbishops were wont to try and determine a great many ecclesiastical causes in their own palaces; but before they pronounced their definitive sentence they comin the law, whom they named their auditors: who, at this day, is called causarum negotiorumque audientiæ Cantuariensis auditor officialis. And to the office of auditor was forwhich meddleth not with any point of contentious jurisdiction, that is, deciding of causes between party and party, but only such as are of effice, and especially as are voluntaria jurisdictionis; as the granting the custody of spiritualities, during the vacancy of bishoprics, institutions to benefices, dispensations, &c.; but this is now distinguished from the audience. The auditor of this court anciently, by special commission, was vicar general to the archbishop, in which capacity he exercised ecclesiastical jurisdiction of every diocese becoming vacant within the province of Canterbury. 4 Inst. 337. But now these three great offices of official principal of the archbishop, dean or judge of the peculiars, and official of the audience, are, and have been for a long time past, united in one person, under the general name of Dean of the arches.

AUDITA QUERELA. A writ whereby a defendant, against whom judgment is recovered, and who is therefore in danger of execution, or perhaps actually in execution, for on a statute-merchant, statute-staple, or recognizance,] may be relieved upon good matter of discharge, which has happened since judgment: as if the plaintiff had given him a general release; or if the defendant hath paid the debt to the plaintiff, without procuring saproperly in conducting the sale, leaving the tisfaction to be entered on the record.

these and the like cases, wherein the defend- | tors for the same cause, &c. they may have ant hath good matter to plead, but hath had the writ audita querela. Plowd. 439. If two no opportunity of pleading it (either at the beginning of the suit or puis darrien continuance, which must always be before judgment), an audita querela lies, in the nature of a bill in equity, to be relieved against the oppression of the plaintiff. It is a writ directed to the court stating that the complaint of the defendant had been heard, (audita querela defendentis), and then, setting out the matter of the complaint, it at length enjoins the court to call the party before them, and, having heard their allegations and proofs, to cause justice to be done between them. Finch, L. 488. F. N. B. 102. It also lies for bail, when judgment is obtained against them by scire facias, to answer the debt of their principal, and it happens afterwards, that the original judgment against their principal is reserved: for here the bail, after judgment had against them, have no opportunity to plead this special matter, and therefore they shall have redress by audita querela; (1 Roll. Ab. 308.) 2 Mant. 37; which is a writ of a most remedial nature, and seems to have been invented, lest in any case there should be an oppressive defect of justice, where a party, who hath a good defence, is too late to make it in the ordinary forms of law. But the indulgence now shown by the courts in granting a summary relief upon motion, in cases of such evident oppression (Lord Raym. 439: 1 Salk. 93.) has almost rendered useless the writ of audita querela, and driven it quite out of practice. 3 Comm. 406.

The audita querela is of common right.
Where it clearly affords relief to the party, the court of C. B. will relieve him on motion without putting him to the writ; 5 Taunt. 558; but not if the relief is questionable.

Some part of the old law on this subject is here stated, to give the student a general idea of this circuitous proceeding.-If necessary to enter more at large into this learning, let him look into Viner's Abridgment and Comyns's Digest: Buc. Ab. vol. 1. (7th ed.)

On a statute, the conusor or his heir may bring audita querela, before execution is sued out; but this may not be done by a stranger to the statute, or a purchaser of the land. Danv. Ab. 630: 3 Rep. 13. If a lessee covenants for him and his assigns to repair, and the lessee assign over, and the covenant is broken; if the lessor sues one of them, and recovers damages, and then sues the other, he may bring audita querela for his relief. Bro. 74. And where a man hath goods from me by my delivery, and another takes them from him, so that he is liable to both our suits; and one of us sue and recover against him, and then the other sues him, his remedy is by this writ. Dyer, 232. One binds himself as such till the contrary appeared; which the and his heirs in an obligation, if the obligee cognisor could not set forth before execution, joint and several obligers are sued jointly, and both taken in execution, the death or escape of one will not discharge the other, so as to give him this action; but if such obligors be prosecuted severally, and a satisfaction is once had against one of them, or against the sheriff upon the escape of one, the other may have it. Hob. 58: 5 Rep. 87. Judgment is had against a sheriff on an escape of a person in execution, and after the first judgment is reversed for error, the sheriff shall have relief by audita querela. 8 Rep. 142.

If a plaintiff that sues as administrator, and recovers judgment and sues out execution, has his letters of administration revoked, the defendant must be relieved by audita querela.

If A., being within age, becomes bail for B., and after two scire facias and nihil returned, judgment is given against A., &c., he may have an audita querela, and avoid the recognizance: and so the judgment there-upon, of consequence, shall be avoided. Yelv.

But if A., being within age, enters into a bond to B., who procures C., without any warrant, to appear for A., and confesses a judgment thereupon, yet A. shall not have an audita querela, but he must take his remedy by action of disceit against the attorney. Cro. Jac. 694.

The writ of audita querela may be had where a recognizance or statute entered into is defective, and not good; or being upon an usurious contract, by duress of imprisonment, or where there is a defeasance upon it, &c. So in trespass or other action, if it be found for the plaintiff by nisi prius, and after, before the day in bank, the plaintiff releases to the defendant, and after judgment is given for the plaintiff, the defendant shall have an audita quercla upon this matter; because he could not plead the release at the day in bank. 1 Roll. And if there be a default by the defendant upon a scire feci, or two nihils returned, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 1 Salk. 93. But, where an audita querela is sued quia timet, and the party is at large, there shall never be a scire facias. 1 Salk. 92: 1 Inst. 100. a.

An audita querela shall be granted out of the court, where the record, upon which it is founded, remains, or it may be returnable in the same court. F. N. B. 105. b. And, therefore, if a man recover in B. R. or C. B., the defendant, having a release after judgment, and before execution, shall sue the audita querela, out of B. R. or C. B. where the record is. F. It is in this sense called average, because it is proportioned and allotted after the rate of every man's goods carried. So if a ship or goods insured for a voyage reach their destination, but are in some degree injured by any of the accidents insured against, this is an average loss, and the insurer is bound to compensate the insured in the proportion which the average loss bears to the whole insurance. AVER CORN, is a reserved rent in corn, paid by farmers and tenants to religious houses; and signifies, by Somner, corn drawn to the lord's granary, by the working cattle of the tenant. It is supposed that this custom was owing to the Saxon cyriac sceat, a measure of corn brought to the priest annually on St. Martin's day, as an oblation for the first-fruits of the earth: under which title the religious had corn-rent paid yearly; as ap-pears by an inquisition of the estate of the abbey of Glastonbury, A. Where a statute is recited, there one may not aver that there is no such record: for generally an averment, as this is, doth not lie against a record; for a record is a thing of solemn and high nature, but an averment is but the allegation of the party, and not so much credit in law to be given to it. Lit. P. R. 155.

Averment lies not against the proceedings of a court of record. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 14. Nor shall it be admitted against a will concerning lands. 5 Rep. 68. And an averment shall not be allowed where the intent of the testator cannot be collected out of the words of the will. 4 Rep. 44. One may not aver a thing contrary to the condition of an obligation, which is supposed to be made upon good deliberation, and before witnesses, and therefore not to be contradicted by a bare averment. 1 Lill. Ab. 156.

An averment of a wicked and unlawful consideration of giving a bond, may well be pleaded, though it doth not appear on the face of the deed: and any thing which shows an obligation to be void may well be averred, although it doth not appear on the face of the bond. Adjudged on demurrer, after two arguments. Collins v. Blantern, 2 Wilson, 747: and see Greville v. Atkins, 9 Barn. & C. 462.

If an heir is sued on the bond of his ancestor, it must be averred that the heirs of the obligor were expressly bound. 2 Saund. 136. In declaring you show that the obligor bound his heirs.—Another consideration than that mentioned in a deed may be averred, where it is not repugnant or contrary to the deed. Dyer. 146. But a consideration may not be averred, that is against a particular express consideration; nor may averment be against a consideration mentioned in the deed, that there was no consideration given. 1 Rep. 176: 8 Rep. 155. If an estate is made to a woman that hath a husband, by fine or deed, for her life; in this case it may be averred to be made to her for her jointure, although there be another use or consideration expressed. 4 Rep. 4. Averment may be of use upon any fine or common recovery; though or in tail, or from parson of a church, ought in it: it may be received to reconcile a fine, and the indenture to lead the uses. Dyer, 311: 2 Bulst. 235: 1 A. 312.

If one has two manors known by the name of W., and levies a fine, or grants an annuity out of his manors of W. he shall by averment ascertain which of them it was. Per. cur. Mod. 235: Cha. Rep. 138.

If a piece of ground was anciently called by one name, and of late is called by another, and it is granted to me by this new name, an averment may be taken that it is all one thing, and it will make it good. Dyer, 37. 44. No averment lies against any returns of writs, that are definitive to the trial of the thing returned; as the return of a sheriff upon his writs, &c. But it may be where such are not definitive; and against certificates upon commissions out of any court; also against the returns of bailiffs of franchises, so that the lords be not prejudiced by it. Dyer, 348: 8 Rep. 121: 2 Cro. 13.

As to averments in actions on the case for words, see tit. Action, II. 1.

A special averment must be made upon the pleading of a general pardon, for the party to bring himself within the pardon. Hob. 67.

A person may aver he is not the same person on appeal of death in favour of life. 1 Nels. Ab. 305.

Where a man is to take a benefit by an act of parliament, there, in pleading, he must aver, that he is not a person excepted; but where he claims no benefit by it, but only to keep that which he had before, in such case it is not necessary to make such averment. Plow. Com. 87. 488.

Pleas merely in the negative shall not be averred, because they cannot be proved: nor shall what is against presumption of law, or any thing apparent to the court. Co. Lit. 362, 373. By stat. 4 and 5 A. c. 16. no exception or advantage shall be taken upon a demurrer, for want of averment of hoc parademurrer. tus est, &c., except the same be specially set down for cause of demurrer. See tit. Amendment: and see Bac. Ab. Pleas and Pleading, (7th ed.)

AVERRARE. To carry goods in a wagon, or upon loaded horses-a duty required of some customary tenants. Cartular. Glaston.

AVETTING, (abetting,) signifies helping or assisting. Scotch. Dict. AUGMENTATION, augmentatio.] The name of a court erceted 27 H. 8. for the determining suits and controversies relating to monasteries and abbey lands. The intent of this court was, that the king might be justly dealt with touching the profits of such religious houses as were given to him by act of parliament. It took its name from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown, by the suppression of religious houses: and the office of augmentation, which hath many cunot of any other use than what is expressed rious records, remains to this day, though the AUGMENTATION of STIPENDS.—In order to secure a proper provision for the reformed clergy of the church of Scotland, a commission of parliament was appointed by several acts of the legislature. The powers conferred on this commission were, by the act of 1707, c. 9. transferred to the court of session. Under these powers, the court, as a commission of parliament, and as a separate court from the court of session, modify stipends to the clergy out of the teinds of the parish in which the minister officiates. See Tiends.

AUGUSTA. London.

AVISAMENTUM. Advice or counsel.-De avisamento et consensu concilii nostri concessimus, &c., was the common form of our ancient king's grants.

AULA, i. e. a court-baron, aula ibidem tent die, &c. Aula ecclesiæ is that which is now termed navis ecclesiæ. Eadm. lib. 6. p. 141.

AULNAGE. See Alnage.

AUMONE. Fr. aumosne, alms.] Tenure in aumone is where lands are given in alms to some church, or religious house, upon condition that a service or prayers shall be offered at certain times for the repose of the donor's soul. Brit. 164. Vide Frankalmoign.

AUNCEL, or AUNCEL WEIGHT, quasi hand saleweight, or from ansa, the handle of the balance.] An ancient manner of weighing (mentioned in the old stat. 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 12,) by the hanging of scales or hooks at each end of a beam or staff, which, by lifting up in the middle with one's finger or hand, discocovered the equality or difference between the weight at one end, and the thing weighed at the other. This weighing being subject to great deceit, was prohibited by several statutes, and the even balance commanded in its stead. But, notwithstanding, it is still used in some parts of England: and what we now call the stilliards, a sort of hand-weighing among butchers, being a small beam with a weight at one end (which shows the pounds by certain notches), seems to be near the same with the auncel weight .- See tit. Weights and Measures.

AVOIDANCE, in the general signification, is when a benefice is void of an incumbent; in which sense it is opposed to plenarty. Avoidances are either in fact, as by death of the incumbent; or in law: and may be by cession, deprivation, resignation, &c. See tit. Advowson.

AVOIRDUPOIS, or averdupois, Fr. avoir du poids, i. e. habere pondus, aut justi esse ponderis.] A weight different from that of troy weight, which contains but twelve ounces in the pound, whereas this hath sixteen ounces; and in this respect it is probably so called, because it is of greater weight than the other. It also signifies such merchandizes as The lord may avow upon disseisor. 20 H. 6

AVONA. Bungey, in Suffolk, and Hampton Court.

AVONÆ VALLIS. Avondale, or Oundale, in Northamptonshire.

AVOW. See Advow.

AVOWEE, of a church benefice. 29. See Advocate.

AVOWRY, is where a man takes a distress for rent or other thing, and the party on whom he takes sues for a replevin, then the taker shall justify his plea for what cause he took it; and if in his own right, he must show the same, and avow the taking; but if he took it in right of another, he must make cognisance of the taking, as bailiff or servant to the person in whose right he took the same. Terms de Ley, 70: 2 Lill. 454. The avowry must contain sufficient matter for judgment to have return: but so much certainty is not required in an avowry as in a declaration; and the avowant is not obliged to allege seisin within the statute of limita-tions. Nor shall a lord be required to avow on any person in certain; but he must allege seisin by the hands of some tenant within forty years. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 19: 1 Inst. 268. In avowry, seisin in law is sufficient; so that where a tenant hath done homage or fealty, it is a good seisin of all other services to make an avowry, though the lord, &c., had not seisin of them within sixty years. See stat. 32 H. 8. c. 2: 4 Rep. 9. A man may distrain and avow for rent due from a copyholder to a lord of a manor: and also for heriots, homage, fealty, amercements, &c. 1 Nels. Ab. 315.

If a person makes an avowry for two causes, and can maintain his avowry but for one of them, it is a good avowry; and if an avowry be made for rent, and it appears that part of it is not due, yet the avowry is good for the rest: supposing sufficient rent due to justify a distress. An avowry may be made upon two several titles of land, though it be but for one rent; for one rent may depend upon several titles. 1 Lill. Ab. 157: Saund. 285. If a man takes a distress for rent, reserved upon a lease for years, and afterwards accepts a sur-render of the lands, he may nevertheless avow, because he is to have the rent due, notwithstanding the surrender. 1 Danv. Abr. 652. Where tenant in tail aliens in fee, the donor may avow upon him, the reversion being in the donor, whereunto the rent is incident. Ibid. 650. If there be tenant for life, remainder in fee, the tenant for life may compel the lord to avow upon him: but where there is tenant in tail, with such remainder, and the tenant in tail makes a feoffment, the feoffee may not compel the lord to avow upon him. 1 Danv. Ab. 648: Co. Lit. 268. If the tenant enfeoffs another, the lord ought to avow upon the feoffer for the arrearages before the feoffment, and not upon the feoffee. 1 Danv. 650.

And if a man's tenant is disseised, he may foffence more than once. 3 Inst. 213: see 1 be compelled to avow by such tenant, or his heir. A defendant in replevin may avow or justify; but if he justifies he cannot have a return. 3 Lev. 204. The defendant need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est, &c. By stat. 21 H. S. c. 19. it is enacted, that if in any replegiare for rents, &c. the avoury, cognisance, or justification be found for the avowant, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, &c., the defendant shall recover such damages and costs as the plaintiff should have had if he had recovered. See Bull. N. P. 57. that this statute does not extend to an avowry for a nomine pana or estray. And by stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. when a plaintiff shall be nonsuit before issue in any suit of replevin, &c. removed or depending in any of the courts at Westminster the defendant making suggestion in the nature of an avowry for rent, the court, on prayer, shall award a writ to inquire of the sum in arrear, and the value of the distress, &c.; upon return whereof the defendant shall recover the arrears, if the distress amounts to that value, or else the value of the distress with costs; and where the distress is not found to the value of the arrears, the party may distrain for the residue. See tit. Distress, Pleading, I. 2. Replevin, IV. 2.

AURUM REGINÆ. The queen's gold. -This is a royal revenue belonging to every queen-consort during her marriage, from every person who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, of ten marks or upwards, in consideration of any grants, &c., by the king to him; and it is due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire fine to the king. 1 Comm. 221.

AUSCULTARE. Formerly persons were appointed in monasteries to hear the monks read, and direct them how, and in what manner they should do it with a graceful tone of accent, to make an impression on their hearers, which was required before they were admitted to read publicly in the church; and this was called ausculture. See Lanfrancus in Decretis pro Ordine Benedict. c. 5.

Brod. & Bing. 473: 9 East, 437. There is also a plea of auterfoits convict, and auterfoits attaint: that he was heretofore convicted, or attainted, of the same felony. Now a previous conviction can only be pleaded in bar of an indictment for the same felony, though it was otherwise formerly. Archbold, C. L. 85. And so as to the plca of auterfoits attaint, it is no bar, unless for the same offence as that charged in the indictment. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 4. And in effect the plea of auterfoits attaint is at an end. Conviction of manslaughter, where clergy is admitted thereon, will bar any subsequent prosecution for the same death. 2 Hawk, P. C. c. 35, 36.

AUTHORITY, is nothing but a power to do something; it is sometimes given by word, and sometimes by writing; also it is by writ, warrant, commission, letter of attorney, &c., and sometimes by law. The authority that is given must be to do a thing lawful; for, if it be for the doing anything against law, as to beat a man, take away his goods, or disseise him of his lands, this will not be a good authority to justify him that doth it. Dyer, 102: Keilw. 83. An authority given to another person, to do that which a man himself cannot do, is void: and where an authority is lawful, the party to whom given must do the act in the name of him who gave the authority. 11 Rep. 87. Where an authority is given by law, it must be strictly pursued; and if a person acting under such authority exceeds it, he is liable to an action for the ex-

An authority in some cases cannot be transferred.—Thus a person, who has an authority to do any act for another, must execute it himself, and cannot transfer it to another: for this being a trust and confidence reposed in the party, cannot be assigned to a stranger, whose ability and integrity were not so well thought of by him for whom the act was to be done. 9 Co. 77. b: 1 Roll. Abr. 330.

Some authorities likewise determine with the life of the person who gave them.

The authority given by letter of attorney must be executed during the life of the person that gives it; because the letter of attorney is to constitute the attorney my representative for such a purpose, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me that am to be represented. 2 Roll. Abr. 9: Co. Lit. 52. Thus a warrant of attorney is generally countermanded by the death of the giver. Tidd, 550. (9th ed.) But if the warrant is to enter up judgment at suit of two, and one dies, judgment may be entered up by the survivor. 2 Maule & S. 76: 1 Y. & I. 206.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver seisin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the be brought into danger of his life for the same attorney may well execute the power after their death: because the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which subsists after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be represented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private name, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after seems not good. Co. Lit. 52: 2 Roll. Ab. 12.

It is a rule that every authority shall be countermandable, and determine by the death of him that gives it, &c. But where an interest is coupled with an authority, there it cannot be countermanded or determined. And. 1: Dyer, 190: and see Vin. Ab.: Bac. Ab.

tit. Authority. (7th ed.)

A devise to another, to have the disposing, selling, and letting his land; so a devise to upon condition, so as to make a conditional his son, but that his wife shall take the profits; feoffment, and the attorney delivers seisin so a devise, that his executor shall have the oversight and dealing of his lands; so a devise to an infant in tail but that G. D. shall have the oversight of his will, and the education of his son till of age, and to receive, set, and let for him; these and such like words give the devisee an authority, but no interest. Dyer, 26. b. 331: 2 Leon. 221: 3 Leon. 78. 216: Moor, 635. S. P.: Cro. Eliz. 674. 678. 734.

The law makes a difference where lands are devised to executors to sell, and where the devise is, that his lands shall be sold by his executors; for in the first case an interest passes to the executors, because the lands are expressly devised to them, but in the other case they have only an authority to sell. Golds. 2: Dyer, 219: Moor, 61: Keilw. 107. b: 1 And. 145.

The testator devised, that his executors should receive the issues and profits of his lands till his son came of age, to pay his debts and legacies, and to breed up his younger children; the testator died, so did the executor, during the minority of the son, having first made J. S. his executor; adjudged, that this executor of an executor may dispose of the issues and profits, for the purposes mentioned in the will, during the infancy of the son; because the first executor had not only a bare authority, but an interest vested in him. Dyer, 210.

Where the testator gives another authority to sell his lands, he may sell the inheritance, because he gave him the same power he had himself, and in such case the purchaser shall be in by the devise. 2 Rep. 53.

An authority may be apportioned or divided, but an interest is inseparable from the person; and where an act, which is in its nature indifferent, will work two ways, the one by an authority, and the other by an interest, the law will attribute it to the interest. But where an interest and authority meet, if the party declare that the thing shall take effect by virtue of his authority, there it shall prevail against the interest. 6 Rep. 17.

In many cases authorities must be strictly executed according to the power given.

If a man devise that his executors shall sell his land, this gives but a naked authority; and the lands, till the sale is made, descend to the heir at law; and in this case all must join in the sale; and if one die, it being a bare authority, cannot survive to the rest. Co. Lit. 112. b. 113. a. 181. b.

But if a man by will give land to executors to be sold, and one of them die, the survivors may sell; for the trust being coupled with an interest, shall survive together with it. Co. Lit. 113. b. 181. b: Bac. Ab. Legacies and absolutely, the livery is not good; because the attorney had no authority to create an absolute fee-simple; and therefore such absolute feoffment shall not bind the feoffor, because he gave no such authority. 2 Roll. Abr. 9.

If a warrant of attorney be given to make livery to one, and the attorncy makes livery to two; or, if the attorney had authority to make livery of Black-Acre, and he made livery of Black-Acre and White-Acre, though the attorney has in these cases done more, yet there is no reason that shall vitiate what he has done pursuant to his power, since what he did beyond it is a perfect nullity, and void. Park. sect. 189.

If a letter of attorney be given to two jointly to take livery, and fcoffor makes livery to one in the absence of the other, in the name of both, this is void; because they being appointed jointly to receive livery, are to be considered but as one. Co. Lit. 49. b: 2 Roll. Abr. 8.

But if a letter of attorney be made to three, conjunctim et divisim, and two only make livery, this is not good, because not pursuant to their authority; for the delegation was to them all three, or to each of them separately; yet if the third was present at the time of the livery made by two, though he did not actually join with them in the act of livery, yet the livery is good; because, when they all three are upon the land for that purpose, and two make livery in the presence of the third, there is his concurrence to the act, though he did not join in it actually, since he did not dissent to it. Dyer, 62: 1 Roll. Abr. 329: Co. Lit. 181. b: 1 Roll. Rep. 299: Yelv. 26. A power to fifteen jointly or severally, to execute such policies as they shall think, may be well executed by four only. 5 Barn. & A.

If a letter of attorney be given to A. to make livery of lands already in lease, the attorney may enter upon the lessee in order to make livery; because, whilst the lessee continucs in possession, the attorney cannot deliver seisin of it; and therefore, to execute the lie service; as where taxes are granted by power given him by the letter of attorney, it is necessary he should have a power to enter upon the lessee. Co. Lit. 52: Poph. 103: Dyer, 131. a. 340. a. Where a power of sale was reserved in a deed to three trustees and their heirs, and on one dying, the other two executed the power, it was held not well executed. 1 Barn. & A. 608: and see 2 Barn. & A. 405: Sugden on Powers, 168.

So if the lord gives license to a copyholder for life, to lease the copyhold for five years, if the copyholder tamdiu vixerit, and he leases it for five years, generally without limitation, this is a good execution, and pursuant to the license; for the lease is determinable by his death, by a limitation in law; and therefore as much is implied by law, as if he had made an actual limitation. 1 Roll. AVULSION, Avulsio. Is where lands are by an inundation or current torn off from the property to which they originally belonged, and gained to the estate of another person; or where a river changes its course, and in place of continuing to run betwixt two properties, cuts off part of one and joins it to the other property. The property of the part thus separated continues in the original proprietor, in which respect the term avulsio stands in contradistinction to the term alluvio, by which an addition is insensibly made to a property by the gradual washing down of a river, and which addition becomes the property of the owner of the lands to which the addition is made. See Alluvion, Occupancy.

AUXILIUM AD FILIUM MILITEM FACIENDUM ET FFLIAM MARITAN-DAM. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff of every county where the king or other lord had any tenants, to levy of them an aid towards the knighting of a son, and the marrying of a daughter. F. N. B. 82. See tit. Aid, Tenure.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ. A precept or order of court for the citing or convening of one party, at the suit and request of another, to warrant some thing. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq.

AUXILIUM FACERE ALICUI IN CU-RIA REGIS. To be another's friend and solicitor in the king's courts; an officer undertaken for and granted by some courtiers to their dependants in the country. Paroch.

AUXILIUM REGIS. The king's aid, or money levied for the king's use, and the pub- subject, and investing them with more or less

AUXILIUM VICECOMITI. A customary aid or duty anciently payable to sheriffs out of certain manors, for the better support of their officers. See Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 245. AWAIT, seems to signify what we now call waylaying, or lying in wait, to execute some mischief. By stat. 13 R. 2. st. 2. c. 1. it is ordained that no charter of pardon shall be allowed before any justice for the death of a man slain by await, or malice prepensed, AWARD, from the Fr. Agard.] Perhaps, because it is imposed on both parties, to be observed by them. Dictum quod ad custodiendum seu observandum partibus imponitur.

That act by which parties may refer any matter in dispute between them to the private decision of another party, (whether one person or more,) is called a Submission; the party to whom the reference is made, an Arbitrator or Arbitrators: when the reference is made to more than one, and provision made, that in case they shall disagree, another shall decide, that other is called an Umpire. judgment given, or determination made, by an arbitrator or arbitrators, or umpire, is termed an Award; that by an umpire an Umpirage, or less correctly an award.

Excellent as the trial by jury undoubtedly is, as a mode of investigating the truth, yet there are some cases to which, for various reasons, that mode of proceeding is not applicable or fully satisfactory. Thus, when long and complicated accounts are to be examined, it can hardly be expected that 12 men placed at hazard on a jury should be able to determine accurately upon the allowance of particular items, or to strike a nice balance between the contending demands. It will also often happen that two parties lay claim to the whole of the same thing as a matter of mere right, which under proper regulation might very well serve for both, and of which it might be ruinous to either to be wholly deprived. A particular instance of this is a stream of water. Yet, in such case the verdict of a jury could only determine to whom the right belonged; it could not look to the consequences, nor make a beneficial division of the use between both. For these and many other reasons it has been a practice of very early date to refer disputes to arbitration. In this way the parties have the benefit of a more deliberate investigation; if the matter be of a scientific nature, or removed from the common information of man, they may select some one or more to decide it, whose habits have made them conversant with the AWARD.

power, the parties may have a decision less single and unbending than that of the law, prospective in its operations, and limiting in detail the future exercise of their disputed rights.

impeached. The court, therefore, in order to inform its discretion, opened its ear to complaints which the rules of law prevented it from receiving in the shape of a formal pleating its content of the action; nor was the court, therefore, in order to inform its discretion, opened its ear to complaints.

This submission to arbitration might always take place before or after the commencement of an action; but convenient as it was in many respects, it laboured in early times under severe disadvantages, which for a long time diminished its frequency. For (not to mention that courts of law had established subtle and narrow grounds of construction upon awards, and often set them aside upon mere technical and frivolous objections) it is obvious that in whatever way the parties had bound themselves to the performance of the award, still the arbitrator was not the judge of any court; there was no process to compel obedience; and therefore an obstinate person might still oblige the other party to resort to his action for the original matter in dispute, or to a like proceeding for the breach of the agreement to perform the award. In such case not only was all the benefit of the reference lost, but delay and expence were occasioned by it; the party's case was disclosed, and perhaps, by the death or absence of some necessary witness, a serious ultimate disadvantage was sustained. The arbitrator might also in some cases prove wrongheaded or corrupt, and yet, as the parties had voluntarily put the dispute on his judgment, the court would not permit that to be assigned as an excuse for the non-performance of the award, when an action was brought to enforce it, and the party was compelled to obey, or at a great expence to seek relief in a court

Both the

Both these inconveniences have been gradually removed, partly by the enlarged application of legal principles by the courts of law, and partly by the interference of the legislature in passing the act 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. For in the first case, where the submission had taken place after the commencement of the action, the parties were obviously before the court, and within its jurisdiction; a cause was pending, and neither party could regularly or safely suspend the proceedings in such cause, unless by the consent and under a rule of the court. The judges then made it a part of this rule that the parties should perform the award when published; and, as disobedience to the rule of the court is a contempt of the court, and punished summarily as all other contempts, by attachment of the person; the court in this case gained a double power, the one direct, the other incidental, but almost equally beneficial: on the one hand it could enforce performance of the award without the party being driven to a second action; and, on the other hand, as the exercise of this power was purely discretionary, the court could abstain from it whenever the inform its discretion, opened its ear to complaints which the rules of law prevented it from receiving in the shape of a formal plea to the action; nor was this negative relief all that was afforded; for in process of time it came to be held, that as the arbitrator acquired the main sanction of his authority from the rule of the courts, the same rule gave the court a general superintendance over the award; and therefore, though the judges wisely abstained from scrutinising too nicely the decision of that authority to which the parties had voluntarily submitted tnemselves, and refused to examine over again the questions upon which the arbitrator had come to an honest and deliberate opinion; yet, where the award upon the face of it appeared to be illegal, or there was manifest misbehaviour or error in the arbitrator, the court not only refused to enforce performance by attachment, but held themselves empowered (if the application was made within a reasonable time) to set aside the award; and thus the proceedings were rendered complete by the judicious interference of the courts in cases where the pendency of an action had given them jurisdiction: and, at length, the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. gave a complete remedy, so that both classes of submission before or after action now stand on the same footing. VIII. The Effect, in precluding the Parties from suing on the original cause of Action, or subject of Reference.

I. Of the Submission. The submission may be purely by the act of the parties themselves; or it may be by their act, with the interposition of a court of justice; in either case it may be either verbal or in writing; the general practice, as well as the most safe, is to prefer the latter.

but almost equally beneficial: on the one hand it could enforce performance of the award without the party being driven to a second action; and, on the other hand, as the exercise of this power was purely discretionary, the court could abstain from it whenever the conduct of the arbitrator could be successfully not perform the award. The submission may also be by indenture, with mutual covenants to stand to the award. 2 Mod. 73.

It is usual in articles of co-partnership, to insert a provision, that all disputes between the partners shall be referred to arbitration. This has so far the effect of a submission, that one of the parties cannot sue another either at law or in equity, for any matter within the terms or meaning of the proviso, without having first had an actual reference, which has proved ineffectual, or a proposal by the plaintiff to refer, and a refusal by the defendant. See 2 Atk. 585 (569): 2 Brownl. c.

All the cases of awards reported in the books for a long series of years appear to have been made on submissions, by the act of the parties only; but when mercantile transactions and accounts came to be frequently the subject of discussion in the courts, it became a practice, in cases of that kind (as well as others alluded to above), to refer the matters, by consent of parties, under a rule of nist prius; which was afterwards made a rule of that court, out of which the record proceeded, and performance of the award was enforced by process of contempt. This practice does not appear to have begun before the reign of Charles II., for the reports of that period show, that it was not before the latter end of that reign, that the courts granted their interference without reluctance. Their utility, however, was at length so well understood, that the legislature resolved to place arbitrations entered into, where no action was pending, on the same footing. Accordingly by stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. it was enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for all traders and merchants, and others, desiring to end by arbitration, any controversy, suit or quarrel, for which there is no other remedy, but by personal action, or suit in equity, to agree that their submission of their suit to the award or umpirage of any person or persons, should be made a rule of any of his Majesty's courts of record: and to insert such their agreement in their submission, or the condition of the bond or promise whereby they oblige themselves respectively; which agreement being so made and inserted, may on producing an affidavit thereof, made by the witnesses thereunto, or any one of them, in the court of which the same is agreed to be made a rule, and on reading and filing the said affidavit in court, be entered of record in such court; and a rule shall thereupon be made by the said court, that the parties shall submit to, and finally be concluded by the arbitration or umpirage, which shall be made concerning them, by the arbitrators or umpire, pursuant to such submission; and in case of disobedience to such arbitrator or umpirage, the party neglecting or refusing shall be subject to all the penalties of contemning a rule who will incur the forfeiture if the parties do, of court."-On this statute, and awards made in consequence, see 1 Stra. 1.2: 2 Stra. 1178: 10 Mod. 332, 3: Barnes, 55. 8: 1 Salk. 72: Comyns, 114: 1 Ld. Raym. 664: 3 East,

> The above statute is merely declaratory of what the law was before its passing, where no cause was depending. 2 Burr. 701.

Under this statute a submission to arbitration may be made a rule of court in vacation. 5 B. & A. 217. The statute does not extend to criminal matters, as an indictment for an assault. 8 Term R. 520: 2 Dow & Ry. 265: and see Bac. Ab. Arbitrament (B.) (7th ed.) But see 9 East, 497: 1 Moo. 120.

The extent of the submission may be various, according to the pleasure of the parties; it may be of one particular matter only, or of many, or of every subject of litigation between them.

It is proper to fix a time, within which the arbitrators shall pronounce their award: but where the submission limits no time for the making of the award, that shall be understood to be within convenient time; and if in such a case the party request the arbitrators to make an award, and they do not, a revocation of the authority afterwards will be no breach of the submission. 2 Keb. 10. 20.

The submission being the voluntary agreement of the parties, the words of it must be so understood as to give a reasonable construction to their meaning, and to make their intention prevail: and where there is a repugnancy in the words of the submission, the latter part shall be rejected, and the former stand. Poph. 15, 16.

It has been said that as all authority is in its nature revocable, even though made irrevocable, therefore a submission to an award may be revoked by either of the parties; such at least was the determination under the old law as reported in the year-books, and ancient reporters; but now it may reasonably be supposed, that the courts would sustain an action on the case, for countermanding the authority of the arbitrator. A case is reported in two books, one being evidently nothing more than a loose note; 1 Sid. 281: the other report is at length, and the manner of the pleadings distinctly given; the breach being assigned in a discharge by the defendant of the arbitrators from making any award; and the judgment of the court without much hesitation in favour of the plaintiff. 2 Keb. 10.

If one of the parties revokes the submission or hinders the arbitrator from proceeding, this is a contempt, and an attachment will issue. Salk. 73. But this is only when the submission has been made a rule of court before the revocation; if it has not, there is no contempt; 7 East, 608: 1 Bing. 88: 1 Jac. & Walk. 511; but the party may bring his action. 5 East, 266: 5 Barn. & A. 507.

This applies only, however, to the case of an express revocation; not to that which mission to an award; but no one can who is of law from another act of the party. Thus, if a woman while sole, submit to arbitration, and marry before the making of the award, or before the expiration of the time for making it, the marriage operates as a revocation. W. Jones, 388: 3 Keb. 9. 745. See Charnley v. Winstanley, 5 East, 266: and 5 Barn. & A.

The court have no authority by 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. to make a parol submission to an award a rule of court. Ansell v. Evans, 7 T.

The court will not presume that the matters in difference submitted to arbitration, arose subsequent to the indenture of assignment and power of attorney from the principals to the plaintiff; but such matter may be pleaded by way of defence to the action. Ib. 517.

It is not necessary for the plaintiff, in setting the assignment to him from his principals (by virtue of which he was authorized to submit their demands to arbitration,) to make a profert of the same in his declaration.

R. 517.

The court will not make a submission to an award a rule of court, where part of the matter agreed to be referred has been made the subject of an indictment; the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. for regulating "controversies, suits, or quarrels," by arbitration, being confined to civil disputes. Watson v. M Cullum, ib. 520. Nor will they entertain a motion for setting aside an award founded upon an indictment at the assises (for not repairing a road,) though the question in dispute be of a civil nature. 2 Dow. & Ry. 265.

Where parties, by an indersement in general terms on the bonds of submission to arbitration, agree that the time for making the award shall be enlarged, such agreement virtually includes all the terms of the original submission to which it has reference; amongst others, that the submission for such enlarged time shall be made a rule of court, and consequently the party is liable to an attachment for non-performance of an award made within such enlarged time after the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. Evans v. Thomson, 5 East, 189: and see 2 Barn. & C. 179.

By the 3 and 4 W. 4. c. 42. § 39. a submission to arbitration by rule of court is not to be revocable without leave of the court or a judge.

By § 40. where any such reference is made to the court or a judge, the rule may command the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents.

§ 41. Empowers the arbitrators, under a rule of court ordering the witnesses to be examined on oath, to administer an oath.

must necessarily be implied by construction either under a natural or civil capacity of contracting. Therefore a married woman cannot be party to a submission, whatever may be the subject of dispute, whether arising before or after her marriage; but the husband may submit for himself and his wife. Str. 351.

On the principle that an infant cannot bind himself for any thing but necessaries, it is clear he cannot be party to a submission; whether the matter in dispute be an injury done to him, or an injury done by him to another; but a guardian may submit for an infant, and bind himself that he shall perform the award. See Comb. 318. Roberts v. Newbold, which established this principle, in contradiction to former determinations.

An executor or administrator may submit a matter in dispute between another and himself, in right of his testator and intestate; but it is at his own peril; for if the arbitrator do not give him the same measure of justice as he would be entitled to at law, he must account for the deficiency to those interested in the effects. See Dyer, 216. b. 217. a: Com. Dig. Admin. (l. i.) 3 Leon. 53: and Barry v. Rush, 1 Term Rep. 691: Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (C.)

So the assignees of a bankrupt may submit to arbitration any disputes between their bankrupt and others. See § 88. of the new bankrupt act, 6 G. 4. c. 16; and see tit. Bank-

Those only who are actually parties to the submission shall be bound by the award.-For the case of partners, see 2 Mod. 228 .- Of coparishioners, Mudy v. Osam, Lit, 30.

So, in general, a man is bound by an award, to which he submits for another. Alsop v. Senior, 2 Keb. 707. 718. And see Bacon v. Dubarry; the case of an attorney submitting for his principal without authority from him. 4 Ld. Raym. 246: see Kyd on Awards, p. 27: and Colwell v. Child, 1 Rep. Ch. 104: 1 Ca.

But if a man authorise another on his behalf to refer a dispute, the award is binding on the principal alone; Dyer, 216. b. 217; unless the agent binds himself for the performance of the principal. 1 Wils. 28. 58.

When there are several claimants on one side, and they all agree to submit to arbitration, and some only enter into a bond to perform the award, the award shall bind the Wood and al. v. Thompson and al. M. 24 Car. B. R.: Roll. Abr. tit. Arbitr. F. 11.

Where there are two on one side, though they will not be bound the one for the other, yet if the award be general, that they shall do one entire thing, both shall be bound to the performance of the whole. Cro. Car. 434.

If the husband and wife submit to arbitration any thing in right of the wife, the wife shall, after the death of the husband, be

Rep. 268, 9.

An award creates a duty which survives therefore, on the one hand, be compelled to the performance if made against their testator or intestate; and on the other may take advantage of it, if made in his favour. 2 Vent. 249: 1 Ld. Raym. 248.

And it is a general rule, that all those who would be bound by an award may take advantage of it.

Generally speaking, a submission of all matters between the parties, when there are more persons than one, either on one or both sides, is the same as a submission of all matters between the parties, any or either of them; Comyns, 328; and therefore on submission by A. & B. on the one side, and C. and D. on the other, the award may be of matters between A. and C. alone, or between A. and B. together, with C. alone, or vice versa; and money may be awarded to be paid accordingly. This rule, however, may be controlled by the words of the submission, in which it is in this case more particularly requisite to be very exact. See Kyd on Awards, 121: 8 Co. 98. a. Hardr. 599: 1 Vern. 259: Com. 547: Roll. Abr. tit. Arbitr.

Where there were two causes, one between A. and B., and the other between A. and C., and an order was made in the first of all matters in difference, and by a subsequent order C. was made a party to the reference, and all matters in difference between A., B., and C. were referred to the arbitrator, so as he make his award of, and concerning the premises on, &c., and the arbitrator made two awards, in one of which he awarded that A. was indebted to B., without noticing C., and in the other awarded that A. was indebted to C., without noticing B.: both awards were held bad, as not determining all matters in difference, according to the condition. Winter v. Munton, and another, 2 Moo. 725: and see 1 Brod. & Bing. 350.

III. The Subject of the Reference. Though the courts have at all times manifested a general disposition to give efficacy to awards, yet there are some cases in which they have refused them their protection, because the subjects on which they were made were not the proper objects of such reference.

The only motive which can influence a man to refer any subject of dispute to the decision of an arbitrary judge, is, to have an amicable and easy settlement of something which in its nature is uncertain. An award, therefore, is of no avail when made of debt on a bond for the payment of a sum certain, whether it be single, or with a condition to be void on the payment of a less sum; nor if made of debt for arrears of rent ascertained by a lease; nor of covenant to pay a certain sum same acts to be done, which the parties them-bound by the award. Lumly v. Hutton, 1 Roll. | of money; Blake's case, 6 Co. 43, 44; nor of debt on the arrears of an account, as formerly taken before auditors on an action of account; to executors of administrators; they shall 1 Lev. 292; nor of damages recovered by a judgment: Gouldsh. 91, 92; for in all these cases the demand is ascertained. But see Lumley v. Hutton, Roll. Abr. tit. Arbitr. B. 8. and Coxal v. Sharp, 1 Keb. 937; as it seems that when joined with other demands of an uncertain nature, those which are certain, may also be submitted; even in the case of a verdict and judgment.

But in general where the party complaining could recover by action only uncertain damages, the subject of complaint may be the object of a reference to arbitration; as any demand not ascertained by the agreement or contract of the parties, though the claimant demands a sum certain; as a claim of 5l. for different expenses in the service of the other party. Sower v. Bradfield, Cro. Eliz. 422. So an action of account may be submitted; for till the account be taken, the sum remains uncertain. Roll. Abr. tit. Arbitr.

It is said, and it appears justly, that all kinds of personal wrong, the compensation for which is always uncertain, depending on the verdict of a jury, may be submitted to arbitration; where the injury done to the individual is not considered, by the policy of the state, as merged in the public crime, which latter can never be the subject of arbitration.

In the case of deeds, when no certain duty accrues by the deed alone, but the demand arises from a wrong or default subsequent, together with the deed, as in the case of a bond to perform covenants, or covenant to repair a house, there the demand being for damages for a breach, may be submitted to award. Blake's case, 6 Co. 43, 44: Cro. Jac. 99. However, in all cases, where the demand arises on a deed, the submission ought also to be by deed; because a specialty cannot be answered but by a specialty. Lumley v. Hutton, before quoted. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament, (A.)

Much doubt and uncertainty seems anciently to have prevailed on a question, " How far a dispute concerning land could be referred to an arbitrator; and how far, on an actual reference, the parties were bound by his award." But it appears that the real difficulty was how to enforce an award made on a reference of a dispute concerning land; for whenever the submission was by bond, it was almost universally held, that the party who did not perform the award, forfeited the bond. Keilway, 43. 45.

The present rule of law therefore is that "Where the parties might, by their own act, have transferred real property, or exercised any act of ownership with respect to it, they may refer any dispute concerning it to the decision of a third person, who may order the selves might do by their own agreement." the power of the arbitrators ceases, and that Knight v. Burton, 6 Mod. 231: Trusloe v. Aseware. Cro. El. 233: Dy. 183. in marg.

As real property cannot be transferred by the parties themselves without deed, wherever that makes a part of the dispute, the submission as well as the award [and whatever act is by the award directed to be performed by the parties, as to real property,] must also be by deed. Though an award cannot convey lands, yet it will stop one party to the reference from disputing the title of the other party, in whose favour the arbitrator has awarded. Doe v. Rosser, 3 East, 15: and see 8 East, 38: 3 Camp. 444. And the property in a chattel will not pass by the mere force of an award, without the assent of the party. 15 East, 100.

IV. The Arbitrators and Umpire. Every one whom the law supposes free, and capable of judging, whatever may be his character for integrity or wisdom, may be an arbitrator or umpire; because he is appointed by the choice of the parties themselves, and it is their folly if they choose an improper person.

An infant cannot be an arbitrator nor a married woman; nor a man attainted of treason or felony. But an unmarried woman may be an arbitratrix. Duchess of Suffolk's case, 8 E. 4. 1: Br. 37.

It is a general rule of law, founded on the first principles of natural justice, that a man cannot take on himself to be judge in his own cause; but should he be nominated an arbitrator, by or with the consent of the opposite party, the objection is waived; and the award shall be valid. Matthew v. Allerton, Comb. 281: 4 Mod. 226: Hunter v. Benison, Hardr. 43.

The nomination of the umpire is either made by the parties themselves, at the time of their submission, or left to the discretion of the arbitrators. Where two arbitrators, (as is most frequently the case) have this power, the law provides that the choice shall be fair and impartial, and that it shall not even be left to chance, election being an act of the will and understanding. 2 Vern. 485.

On a rule nisi to set aside an award, made by an umpire and one of two arbitrators, it appeared that the umpire had been chosen by lot out of four persons, two of whom were nominated by each of the arbitrators.—Held that the appointment was bad, and that the appointment of the third person in such cases must be the act of the will and judgment of the two; must be matter of choice, and not of chance, unless the parties consent to or acquiesce in some other mode. Cassell's case, 9 B. & C. 624.

There is no part of the law relative to awards in which so much uncertainty and confusion appear in the reported cases, as on this respecting the unipire. The time when the power of the arbitrators ceases, and that of the umpire begins; the time when the umpire may be nominated; and the effect of his nomination; have each in its turn proved questions of sufficient magnitude to exercise and distract the genius of the lawyers. The time limited for the umpire to make his umpirage has sometimes been the same with that limited for the arbitrators to make their award. It is now, however, most usual, and certainly more correct, to prolong the time beyond that period.

1(* U

In this case of a prolongation of time, the authority of the arbitrators is determined, and that of the umpire immediately begins, on the expiration of the time specified to be allowed to the arbitrators.

The point on which, on all the forms of submission, the greatest difficulty has been felt, has been to decide whether any conduct of the arbitrators can authorise the umpire to make his umpirage before the expiration of the time limited for making their award.

On this head the following seems to be undeniably the clearest and most accurate opinion. If the arbitrators do in fact make an award within the time allowed to them, that shall be considered as the real award; if they make none, then the umpirage shall take place; and there is here no confusion as to the concurrence of authority with respect to the time. The umpire has no concurrence absolutely, but only conditionally, if the arbitrators make no award within their time. This applies equally to the case where the umpire is confined to the same time with the arbitrators, and to that where a farther time is given to him. Chase v. Dare, Sir T. Jones, 168: see also Godb. 241: 1 Lev. 174. 285: 1 Ld. Raym. 671: 12 Mod. 512: Lutw, 541. 4: Cro. Car. 263: 1 Mod. 274: Sir T. Raym. 205: 1 Salk. 71.

It is now finally determined that the arbitrators may nominate an umpire before they proceed to consider the subject referred to them; and that this is so far from putting an end to their authority, that it is the fairest way of choosing an umpire. 2 Term. Rep. 646. And it is in fact not unusual for the parties to make it a condition in the submission that the umpire shall be chosen by the arbitrators, before they do any other act. They may also, when a farther day is given to the umpire, and the choice left to them in general terms, choose him at any time after the expiration of their own time, provided it be before the time limited for him. 3 Keb. 387: Freem. 378: 2 Mod. 169: 15 E.R. 556: and see 9 Barn. & Cress. 407. And if the arbitrators disagree before the time of making the award expires, they may appoint an umpire immediately, and he may make his award before the arbitrators' time expires. 3 Maule & S. 559. And he need not state that the arbitrators have disagreed. 5 Maule & S. an umpire jointly, on a reference to them severally, is bad. 9 Price, 612.

From the opinion that the arbitrators having once elected an umpire had executed their authority, it has been thought to follow as a necessary consequence, that if they elected one who refused to undertake the business, they could not elect another. This opinion has been supported by two chief justices, but over-ruled (surely with propriety) by determinations of the court. 3 Lev. 263: 2 Vent. 113: Palm. 289: 2 Saund. 129: 1 Salk. 70: Ld. Raym. 222: 12 Mod. 120: 11 East. 367.

When the person to whom the parties have agreed to refer the matters in dispute between them has consented to undertake the office, he ought to appoint a time and place for examining the matter, and to give notice of such appointment to the parties or to their attorneys; if the submission be by rule of reference at nisi prius, the witnesses should be sworn at the bar of the court, or afterwards (if neglected) before a judge.

The parties must attend the arbitrators, according to the appointment, either in person or by attorney, with their witnesses and documents. The arbitrators may also, if they think proper, examine the parties themselves, and call for any other information.

Where a time is limited for making the award, it cannot be made after that time, unless it be prolonged. When the submission is by the mere act of the parties, that prolongation may be made by their mutual consent; otherwise a rule of court is necessary for the purpose. See Tidd, 827. (9th ed.)

The law has secured each of the parties against the voluntary procrastination of the other, by permitting the arbitrator, on due notice given, to proceed without his attend-Waller v. King. 9 Mod. 63: 2 Eq. Ab. 92: c. 3. Or the willing party may press his opponent by rule of the court to attend the arbitrator, who on failure may make this award without such attendance. Hetley v.

It has been formerly held that an umpire cannot proceed on the report of the arbitrators, but must hear the whole matter ancw; but there seems to be no good reason why the umpire, if he think proper, may not take those points on which the arbitrators agree to be as they report them. The nature of his duty is only to make a final determination on the whole subject of dispute, where the arbitrators cannot do it; and by adopting their opinion as far as they agree, and incorporating it with his own on the other points, he effectually makes that final determination. And in this manner umpires do usually act; and they are justified in so doing unless requested to re-examine the witnesses. 4 Term Rep. 589. See Tidd, 827. (9th ed.)

193. But an award made by arbitrators and | ceed according to the order of evidence which governs the courts of law. 1 McClel. & Y. 160. Where he is empowered to examine the parties to the suit on oath, he may in his discretion examine a party in support of his own case, or may waive the objection to a witness that he is intended and ought to have been made a party. 3 Barn. & C. 590: 5 Dow. & Ry. 301: 2 Taunt. 324: S. C. 8 Taunt. 694.

Though the words in the submission which regulate the appointment of an umpire be not perfectly correct; but might from the grammatical order seem to imply that the arbitrators and the umpire should all join together to make an award, yet an award made by the arbitrators without the participation of the umpire, will be considered as satisfying the terms of submission. Roll. Ab. tit. Arbitr. p. 6.-And on the other hand, an umpirage made by the umpire jointly with the arbitra-tors, is good; their approbation, shown by joining with him, being mere surplusage, does not render the instrument purporting to be his umpirage in any degree less the act of his judgment. Soulsby v. Hodson, 2 Blackst. 463: 4 Taunt. 232.

Unless it be expressly provided in the submission, that a less number than all the arbitrators named may make the award, the concurrence of all is necessary; and where such a proviso is made all must be present, unless those who do not attend had proper and sufficient notice, and are wilfully absent. Barnes.

As to the necessity imposed on the arbitrators or umpire of giving notice of their award, the following are the clearest determinations. If the award be made before the day limited in the submission, the parties shall not be bound by any thing awarded to be done, before that day, unless they have notice; but they must take notice at their peril of any thing ordered at the day. 8 Ed. 4.1: Br. 37: Keilway, 175; see Cro. El. 97: Cro. Car. 132, 3.

It has long been the practice to guard against the consequences of the want of notice, by inserting a proviso in the condition of the arbitration-bond, not only that the award shall be made, but that it shall be delivered to the parties by a certain day: and then the bond will not be forfeited by non-performance, unless the party not performing had notice; and the award ought to be delivered to all the persons who are parties on either side. Hungate's case, 5 Co. 103: Cro. El. 885: Mo.

The object of every reference is a final and certain determination of the controversies referred. A reservation of any point for the future decision of the arbitrator, or of a power to alter the award, is inconsistent with that object; and therefore it is established as a general rule that such a reservation is void; 3 B. & Adol. 295; but the reservation of a The arbitrator is in general bound to pro- mere ministerial act, as the measuring of land, the calculation of interest at a rate set which are the subjects of variance. 1 Ld. tled, &c. does not vitiate the award. 12 Mod. 139: 2 Ro. Rep. 189. 214, 215: Palm. 110. 146: Cro. Jac. 315: Hob. 218: Lutw. 550; Hardr. 43. So also where the question was as to the construction of an act of parliament, and the arbitrator made his award, but recommended that the parliament roll should be examined as to the wording of the act, the award was held final. 1 Maule & S. 105.

The submission to the decision of an individual arises from the confidence which the parties repose in his integrity and skill; and is merely personal to him; it is therefore inconsistent that the arbitrators or umpire should delegate any part of their authority to another; and such delegation is absolutely void. But it was settled in the case of Lingood v. Eade, 2 Atk. 501. (515.) that arbitrators, where they award the substance of things to be done, may refer it to another to settle the manner in which it shall be put in execution.

Since the introduction of references at nisi prius, there can be no question, but the arbitrator has a jurisdiction over the costs of the action, as well as over the subject of the action itself; unless some particular provision is made to the contrary by the form of the sub-mission. Instead of ascertaining the costs, the arbitrator may refer them to be taxed by the proper officer of the court, but to no one else. 2 Atk. 504. (519): 1 Salk. 75: 6 Mod. 195: Hardw. 181: Barnes, 56. 8: 1 Sid. 358: Str. 737. 1035: Com. 330. When it is agreed that costs shall abide the event, it means the legal event. See 3 Term Rep. 139. And also as to awarding the costs of the arbitration, 2 Term. Rep. 645. And the arbitrators may award damages to either party, though in point of law there was no cause of action. 2 Vent. 243. If the arbitrator takes no notice of the costs, but awards mutual releases, it shall be presumed to be meant that each party shall pay his own costs. See Kyd. 143.

V. The Award, or Umpirage .- Every award should be consistent with the terms of the submission; the whole authority of the arbitrators being derived from thence. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (E.) Therefore,

1. The award must not extend to any matter not comprehended in the submission; thus, if the submission be confined to a particular subject of dispute, while there are other things in controversy between the parties, an award which extends to any of these things is void as far as it respects them. 2 Mod. 309: see 13 Price, 533: 3 Taunt. 426: 1 Brod. & B. 80.

If two submit to the award of a third person all demands between them; without more; the word demands implies all matters between them concerning the lands of both parties Raym. 115: Keilw. 99.

If the submission be, "of all causes of action, suits, debts, reckonings, accounts, sums of money, claims and demands," an award, "to release all bonds, specialities, judgments, executions, and extents," is within the submission; for as all debts are submitted, of course a release may be awarded of the securities for them. 2 Saund. 190.

Where the submission is, "of all debts, trespasses, and injuries," an award "to release all actions, debts, duties, and demands," does not exceed the submission; the word injuries comprehending demands. 3 Bulst.

The rule, however, is not so strictly interpreted as to extend to every thing literally beyond the submission; if the award be of any thing depending on the principal, it is good. Roll. Arb. B. 2. C. 4, 5, 6.

Thus if the submission be of all trespasses, and the award be, "that one shall pay to the other 101., and that he shall enter into a bond for the sum," this is good, because it only renders the award more effectual. 96.

In like manner if it can reasonably be presumed that nothing is in reality awarded beyond the submission, it has, in general, been supported. 10 Co. 131: 2 Jenk. 264: Roll. Arb. 21: see 6 Mod. 232.

On the submission of a particular difference when there are other matters in controversy, though an award of a general release is void; yet the proof of such other disputes existing is thrown on the party objecting. 2 Mod. 309: 1 Sid. 154: vide Hob. 190. (See post, Div. 3. of this head.)

If in a similar case the arbitrators award "that all suits shall cease," this shall be confined to suits relating to the subject of the submission, and void only for the residue. Roll. Rep. 362: 2 Roll. Rep. 122: Cro. Jac. 663.

If the arbitrator go beyond the submission to direct the mode in which any of the matters ordered by the award is to be done, this may be rejected as a nullity, as forming no part of the award. 13 Price, 639: 2 Barn. & C. 170: 3 Barn. & Adol. 295. But where an arbitrator, to whom a cause was referred before issue, awarded a verdict and damages, it was held that awarding a verdict was an excess of authority, and as the award was only in one sentence, the direction could not be rejected. 1 McClel. & Younge, 200.

On a dispute between a parson and one of his parishioners, whether the tithes should be paid in kind or not; the arbitrator awarded that the parson should have 71. for the tithes due before the submission, and that the parishioner should pay 4l. annually for the future tithes. This was held to be a good award, because the submission comprehended a question concerning the future rights. Roll. Arb. D. 8. But an award made on the 23d of June, ordering so much rent to be paid, by which award itself appeared not to be due till the 24th, was held bad. 10 Mod. 204.

If partners refer all matters in difference between them, the arbitrators may dissolve the partnership. 1 Black. Rep. 475. But they cannot award that a part of the sum paid as a consideration for the partnership shall be refunded. 2 Bos. & Pull. 131; and see Dow. & Ry. 317. Where an arbitrator, to whom a cause was referred at nisi prius, found that the plaintiff was entitled to a way for carriages, which he at first claimed by his declaration, but afterwards abandoned, this was held an excess of his jurisdiction, and the award was set aside pro tanto. McClel. & Younge, 509.

If the reference be "of all matters in dispute in the cause between the parties," the power of the arbitrator is confined solely to the matters in dispute in that suit. If it be "of all matters in difference between the parties in the suit," his power is not confined to the subject of that particular cause, but extends to every matter in dispute between them. 2 Black. 1118: 2 Term Rep. 644, 5:

3 Term Rep. 626.

As an award of a thing out of the submission cannot be enforced by an action at law, so neither shall a man by such an award be precluded from claiming his right in equity.

Finch. Rep. 141.

2. The award should not extend to any one who is a stranger (that is, not a party) to the submission. Thus, if two submit to arbitration concerning the title to certain lands, and the arbitrators award that all controversies touching the lands shall cease; and that one of the parties, his wife and son, his heir apparent, by his procurement, shall make to the other such assurance of the land as the other shall require, this is void; because the wife and son are strangers to the submission. Roll. Arb. N. 9: and see Samon's case, 5 Rep. 77. b.

Lord Coke (10 Rep. 131. b.) says, that an award is void, which directs money to be paid by one of the parties to a third person not included in the submission; but this must be understood to hold good only when such payment can be of no benefit to the other party; for an award that one of the parties shall pay so much to the creditor of the other in discharge of a debt is unquestionably good. 1 Ld. Raym. 123: Roll. Arb. E. 6. F. 8. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (E.)

And in general a distinction is taken between the case of an act awarded to be done by a stranger, and that of an act awarded to be done to him, by a party to the submission: in the latter case the award is said to be good; and if the stranger will not accept the money a question concerning the future rights, awarded to be paid to him, the party's obliga-Roll. Arb. D. 8. But an award made on tion is saved. 3 Leon. 62.

So where a stranger is only an instrument to the performance of the award, no objection shall be allowed on that account: as if it be, that one of the parties shall surrender his copyhold into the hands of two tenants of the mansion who shall present the surrender; this award is good. Roll. Arbitr. E. 7, 8; 1 Keb. 569: and see Division 4, of this hand

If the persons comprehended in the ward were in contemplation of the submission, though they were not directly parties to it, yet the award is good. Lutw. 530. 571: 1 Mar. 78: Comyns, 183: Roll. Arb. B. 18.

An award shall not affect the rights of persons not parties to the submission. Finc.

180. 4: and see Id. 141.

3. The award ought not to be of part only of the things submitted. This, however, must be understood with a considerable degree of limitation; for though the words of the submission be more comprehensive than those of the award, yet if it do not appear that any thing else was in dispute between the parties, beside what is comprehended in the award, it will be good. 8 Co. 98: Roll. Arb. L. 5.

If a submission be "of all the premises or of any part of them," in this case the arbitrator may undoubtedly make an award of part only. Roll. Arb. L. 6.

Upon a reference of all actions, controversies, &c. and also of two distinct matters in difference, if the arbitrator omit to decide one of such distinct matters, that vitiates the whole award. 7 E. R. 81: and see 8 East, 13: 2 Mod. 723.

If an award be made of all matters except a bond, and of this it be awarded that it shall stand, the award is good; for it shall be presumed there was no cause to discharge the bond. Cro. Jac. 277. 400: Bridg. 91.

If arbitrators award for one thing, and say that they will not meddle with the rest, all is void; because they have not pursued their authority. Cro. El. 858: see Dy. 216, 217.

Where a submission is of certain matters specifically named, with a provisional clause "so that the award be made of and upon the premises," the arbitrator ought to make his award of all, otherwise it will be void. 8 Co. 98: Roll. Arb. L. 9.

But where the submission is general of all matters in difference between the parties; though there should happen to be many subjects of controversy between them, if only one be signified to the arbitrator, he may make his award of that: he is, in the language of Lord Coke, in the place of a judge, and his office is to determine according to what is alleged and proved. It is the business of the parties grieved, who knew their own particular grievances, to signify their causes of controversy to the arbitrator; for he is a stranger, and cannot know any thing of their dispute | Arb. E. 2. 3. F. 10: Bulst. 39: 1 Keb. 92: 1 but what is laid before him. 8 Co. 98. b: 1 Brownl. 63: 2 Brownl. 309; see 1 Barn. &

In the case of such a general submission, if an award concerning one thing only be made, it shall be presumed (till the contrary be shown by the party objecting) that nothing else was referred. Cro. Jac. 200. 355: 1 Burr. 274. et seq.: 8 E. R. 445: 1 Barn. & A. 106. But the arbitrators ought to decide on all matters laid before them, or they cannot do complete justice. And it is said that on a reference by rule of a court of equity, the award ought to comprehend all the matters referred. 1 C. C. 87. 186. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament (E.) (7th ed.)

It is, however, no valid objection to an award, that the arbitrator had notice of a certain demand, and that he made no award of that, if in other respects the award be good; as though the sum in question may not be mentioned in the award, the arbitrator may have shown his opinion that the demand was unfounded; as by ordering general releases,

&c. See 1 Saund. 32.

An award of one particular thing for the ending of an hundred matters in difference is sufficient, provided it concludes to them all.

1 Keb. 738: 1 Lev. 132, 3.

4. If an award be to do any thing which is against law, it is roid, and the parties are not bound to perform it. Roll. Arb. G.: 1 Sid. 12: 2 Vent. 243. So also is an award of a thing which is not physically or morally possible, or in the power of the party to perform; as that he shall deliver up a deed which is in the custody or power of a person, over whom he has no control. 12 Mod. 585: and see Roll. tit. Arbitr. And an award that the defendant shall be bound with sureties such as the plaintiff shall approve is void, for it may be impossible to force the approbation of the plaintiff. 3 Mod. 72. 23. But in this case the party should enter into a bond himself, and tender it to the plaintiff.

An award between a lessee and a neighhour, awarding an act to be done for the benefit of the latter, by the lessee, which would be waste on the estate of the lessor, is bad. 5 Taunt. 454; and see 1 Swant. R. 55.

Where an award is that one of the parties shall procure a stranger to do a thing, there is a distinction taken between the case where he has no power over the stranger to compel him, and where he has power, either by the common law or by bill in equity. In the former case the award is void, for so much as concerns the stranger. In the latter it is good. Roll. Arb. F. 1. 248. n. 11: March. 18: 1 Mod. 9 .- (See ante, Division 2.)

Neither must an award be to do a thing unreasonable; nor by the performance of which the party awarded to do the act may subject himself to an action from another. Roll. Ro. Rep. 6: Cro. Car. 226: 3 Lev. 153.

What shall or shall not be unreasonable, is, however, matter of construction in which the cases differ considerably. See Roll. Arb. B.

12: J. 4, 5: 2 Mod. 304.

An award must not be of a thing which is merely nugatory, without any advantage to the parties. Roll. Arb. J. 10-15. And if a man and a woman submit to arbitration, and it be awarded that they shall intermarry, this is said not to be binding (Id. ib.), for one reason among others, that it cannot be presumed to be advantageous to them. Mutual releases are advantageous, and therefore an award of them is good. Freem. 51.

5. The award must be certain and final. As the intention of the parties in submitting their disputes to arbitration is to have something ascertained which was uncertain before, it is a positive rule that the award ought to be so plainly expressed, that the parties may certainly know what it is they are ordered to do. 5 Co. 77. b. 78. a.

On the construction of certainty and uncertainty the cases are multifarious; and it may be observed, that they principally depend on such circumstances as are peculiar to each case, and very seldom form any general precedent. The rule, therefore, serves better to regulate the conduct of arbitrators than the numerous exceptions; as it is the interest of the party against whom the award is made to be ingenious in finding out objections, an award cannot be too particular or precise in laying down what is to be done by the parties, and the manner, time and place of their doing it. Though the two latter have been deemed immaterial (Stra. 905.) yet it is safest to specify them.

Awards are now so liberally construed, that trifling objections are not suffered to prevail against the manifest intent of the parties. See 1 Burr. 277: and post, Division 6. In favour of the equitable jurisdiction of the arbitrators, if that, to which the objection of uncertainty is made, can be ascertained either by the context of the award, or from the nature of, and circumstances attendant on the thing awarded, or by a manifest reference to something connected with it, the objection shall not prevail. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1076: 12 Mod. 585; Lutw. 545; Stra. 903. Where there is no date to the award, it shall be taken as dated from the day of the delivery, which may be ascertained by averment; and all other uncertainties may be helped by proper averments in pleading. 1 Ld. Raym. 246. 612 : Cro. Eliz. 676 : Sty. 28 : 2 Saund. 292.

As an award must be certain, so also must it be final; (at the time of making it: see 1 Sid. 59: Lutw. 51: Comb. 456.) in order to prevent any future litigation on the subject of the submission.

On this principle, an award that each party shall be non-suited in the action which he has brought against the other, is not good: because (amongst other reasons) a nonsuit does not bar from bringing a new action; but an award that a party shall discontinue his action, or enter a retraxit, is good. 2 Godb. 276: Roll. Arb. F. 7.

An award—that all suits shall cease—or, that a bill in Chancery shall be dismissed—or, that a party shall not commence or prosecute a suit—is final: for it shall be taken to mean, that the debt and action shall cease for ever; that alone being a substantial performance of the award. 6 Mod. 33. 232: 2 Ld. Raym. 961. 4: 1 Salk. 74, 75: Roll. Arb. O. 7: but see 2 Stra. 1024: 9 E. R. 497.

An award finding a debt due, but containing no order to pay it, cannot be enforced by attachment. 3 Bing. 634. An award that A. or B. shall do an act, is bad for uncertainty. 1 Younge & J. 16: and see Bac. Ab. Arbitrament (E.) An award that nothing was due to the plaintiff has been held final, as intending that the plaintiff had no right to recover of him in the action. 5 Barn. & C. 528: and see 6 Bing. 225.

Lastly, the award must be mutual; not giving an advantage to one party without an equivalent to the other.

The principal requisite, however, to form that mutuality, about which so much is said in all the cases usually classed under this rule, is nothing more than that the thing awarded to be done should be a final discharge and satisfaction of all debts and claims by the party in whose favour the award is made, against the other, for the matters submitted: and therefore the present rule amounts to nothing more than a different form of expression of that which requires that an award should be final. See Comb. 439: 1 Ld. Raym. 246: Cro. Eliz. 904: Comyns, 328.

6. The rules which at present govern the construction of awards are, that they shall be interpreted, as deeds, according to the intention of the arbitrators. That they shall not be taken strictly, but liberally, according to the intent of the parties submitting, and according to the power given to the arbitrators. 1 Burr. 277: 2 Atk. 504. (519)—That all actions mentioned in the award shall be construed to mean, all actions over which the arbitrators have power by the submission .--That if there be any contradiction in the words of an award, so that the one part cannot stand consistently with the other, the first part shall stand, and the latter be rejected; but that if the latter be only an explanation of the former, both parts shall stand. Palm. 108: 3 Bulst. 66, 7.—And that where the words of an award have any ambiguity in them, they are always to be construed in such a manner as to give effect to the award. 6 Mod. 35. A mistake in a matter of calculation that turns the balance to the other side shall be non-suited in the action which he has than that on which it ought to fall, will not brought against the other, is not good; be vitiate an award in toto. Ambl. 245.

Much unnecessary difficulty occurs in all the old reports on the construction that ought to be put on the award of a release; but it is clearly settled, that an award of release up to the time of making the award, is not altogether void; but that it shall be construed so as to support the award; and that for two reasons. 1st. That it shall be presumed that no difference has arisen since the time of the submission, unless it be specially shown that there has: 2d. That a release to the time of the submission is a good performance of an award, ordering a release to the time of the award; not because the meaning of the arbitrators is so, but because their meaning must be controlled so far as it is void by construction of law. 10 Mod. 201: 6 Mod. 33. 5: 2 Ld. Raym. 964, 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 116: see 12 Mod. 8. 116. 589: Godb. 164, 5: 2 Keb. 431: 1 Sid. 365.

Formerly, if one part of an award was void, the whole was considered so: now, however, it is the rule of the courts, in many cases, to enforce the performance of that which, had it stood by itself, would have been good, notwithstanding another part may be bad. 12 Mod. 534. But if that part of the award which is void, be so connected with the rest, as to affect the justice of the case between the parties, the award is void for the whole. Cro. Jac. 584. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament (F.) (7th ed.)

When from the tenor of the award, it appears that the arbitrator has intended that his award should be mutual, awarding something in favour of one of the parties as an equivalent for what he has awarded in favour of the other; if then that which is awarded on the one side be void, so that performance of it cannot be enforced, the award is void for the whole, because that mutuality, which the arbitrator intended, cannot be preserved. Yelv. 98: Brown 92: Roll. Arb. K. 15: Cro. Jac. 577,8.

If one entire act awarded to be done on one side, comprehend several things, for some of which it would be good, and for others not, the award is bad for the whole, because the act cannot be divided. Cro. Jac. 639.

When it appears clearly that both parties have the full effect of what was intended them by the arbitrator, though something be awarded which is void; yet the award shall stand for the rest. 1 Ld. Raym. 114: Lutw. 545; and see 12 Mod. 588.

An award ought regularly to be made in writing, signed and sealed by the arbitrators, and the execution properly witnessed: it may, however, be made by parol, if it is so expressly provided in the submission. An award, though under seal, is not a deed, unless delivered by the arbitrator as such. 4 East, 584.

7. It is not in all cases absolutely necessary that performance should be exactly according to the words of the award; if it be substantively and effectually the same, it is sufficient.

3 Bulst. 67. And if the party, in whose favour | be for the payment of money, or for the perdiffering in circumstances from the exact letter of the award, that is sufficient; for consensus tollit errorem. 3 Bulst. 67.

Where the concurrence and presence of both parties is not absolutely necessary to the performance, each ought to perform his part without request from the other. 1 Ld. Raym. 233, 234: and see Roll. Arb. Z. 6.—If an award order that the defendant shall re-assign to the plaintiff certain mortgaged premises, it will be a breach if he do not re-assign without request. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

If the award be to pay at, on, or before a particular day, payment before the day is equivalent to payment on the day. 3 Keb. 675, 676.

A considerable number of years having elapsed since the making of the award, is no objection to the parties being called upon to perform it. Finch, Rep. 384. Nor can the statute of limitations (28 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 3.) be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 64.

On an award, that one party shall enter into a security for money (note, bond, &c.), the giving the security is a performance of the award: and on non-payment, the person to whom it is given can only proceed against the other on that security, and not on the submission or arbitration-bond. Bendl. 15: Stra. 903. 1082.

An award that the defendant shall pay to the plaintiff such a sum of money, unless within twenty-one days (which was after the time limited for making the award) the de-fendant shall exonerate himself by affidavit from certain payments and receipts, in which case he was only to pay a less sum, is illegal and void, because uncertain and inconclusive. 7 Term Rep. 73.

If an award be made on an improper stamp, and no application be made to enforce it, the court will not set it aside. Preston v. Eastwood, 7 Term Rep. 95.

The court will not set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrator was mistaken in law, unless the principles of law on which he decided appear on the face of the award. Chitt. 674: see also 1 D. & R. 366.

Two several tenants of a farm agreed with the succeeding tenant to refer certain matters in difference respecting the farm to arbitration, and jointly and severally promised to perform the award; the arbitrator awarded each of the two to pay a certain sum to the third; held that they were jointly responsible for the sum awarded to be paid by each. Mansell v. Burredge, 7 Term Rep. 352.

VI. The Remedy to compel Performance, on an Award or Umpirage properly made.-The remedy to compel performance of an award is various, according to the various forms of the submission.

the award is made, accept of a performance formance of a collateral act. 1 Ld. Raym. 122; and see ante, Division I.

Where the award is either verbal, or in writing, for the payment of money, and made on a submission, either by parol or by deed, the action on the award may be an action of debt: it may also be an action of assumpsit: and in all other cases on a parol submission, an assumpsit is the only species of action that can be maintained. 1 Leon. 72: Cro. Jac. 354.

In all actions on the award, it must necessarily be shown, in direct unequivocal terms, that the parties submitted, before the award can be properly introduced. 2 Stra. 923. The submission too must be so stated as to correspond with the award, and to support it. 2 Lev. 235; 2 Show. 61.

When the action is on a mutual assumpsit, to pay a certain sum on request, if the defendant should not stand to the award, an actual request to pay that sum, before the action brought, must be positively stated. 1 Saund. 33: 2 Keb. 126.

When the submission is by bond, if the award be for payment of money, an action of debt on the award lies, as well as an action on the bond; but the latter is the action most usually brought; in this the order of pleading commonly observed is, that the plaintiff declares on the bond, as in ordinary cases of action on a bond; the defendant then prays over of the condition, which being set forth, he pleads that the arbitrators, or the umpire, made no award; then the plaintiff replies, not barely alleging that they did, but setting forth the award at large, and assigning the breach by the defendant: (as to which see post, and Winch. 121: Yelv. 24. 78. 153: 1 Ld. Raym. 114. 123: 2 Vent. 221: 3 Lev. 293.) and on that the whole question arises as on an original declaration .- The defendant then either rejoins that they made "no such award;" (Jenk. 116: Cro. Jac. 200: Palm. 511.) on which the plaintiff takes issue-or he demurs, and the plaintiff joins in a demurrer. Vide Stra. 923 : Freem. 410. 415 : 1 Sid. 370: 3 Burr. 1729, 1730 : 5 E. 4. 108 : Brooke pl. 33 : Cro. Eliz. 838.

Every thing necessary to show that the award was made according to the terms of the submission, must be stated by the plaintiff. Lutw. 536: 2 Ld. Raym. 989. 1076. Where also, by the terms of the award, performance on the part of the plaintiff is a condition precedent to that on the part of the defendant; there the plaintiff must show that he has done every thing necessary to entitle him to call on the opposite party.—But tender by the plain tiff, and refusal by the defendant, will be sufficient, unless the thing to be done by the plaintiff can be done without the concurrence of the other. Hurdr. 43, 44.

A material variance between the real award, Though the submission be verbal, an action and that set forth in the pleadings, will be famay be maintained on the award, whether it tal to the plaintiff; and if on the trial the jury a special verdict may be taken for the opinion of the court. 1 Salk. 72:1 Ld. Raym. 715: S. C. 1 Burr. 278.

In an action on the award, the defendant may plead "that he did not submit;" but in an action on the bond such a plea is not good.

1 Sid, 290; 2 Stra. 923.

More exactness is required in setting forth a written than a verbal award—in the former nothing must be alleged by inducement. 2 Vent. 242. The breach must also be assigned with such precision, as to show that the award was made of the thing in which the breach was alleged. 1 Roll. Rep. 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bulst. 93. And in an action on the assumpsit to perform the award, the plaintiff may assign several breaches. Jenk. 264; and see Yelv. 35. But in an action on the arbitration bond, where several things are ordered to be done by the defendants, it is not necessary to assign breaches of every matter, because the breach of any one is a forfeiture of the penalty of the bond; and when the plaintiff has once recovered, then he can never maintain another action on the same bond, to recover the penalty again on a second breach. 2 Wils. 276.9; and vide Id. 293. S. P.

If the defendant set forth the award, and allege the performance generally, and then on a breach being assigned in the replication, he rejoin, and show a special performance, this will be a departure. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

It has several times happened that the defendant, by setting forth an award partially, has imposed considerable difficulty on the plaintiff how to answer him. See 1 Keb. 568: 1 Saund. 326: 3 Lev. 165: Lutw. 525. In this case, if the plaintiff demand over of the award, and have it set forth at full length, assigning a breach in the same manner as if the defendant had pleaded no award, he will be secure against any objection from the manner of pleading. Lutw. 451: and see Godb. 255: 1 Roll. Rep. 6.

If, from the default of the defendant, no award has been made within the time limited, the plaintiff may, to the plea of no award, reply that default of the defendant. See 8 Co. 81.—On a submission by bond, providing that the award shall be made within a limited time, though that time is enlarged by mutual consent, and the award made within the enlarged time, an action cannot be maintained on the bond to recover the penalty for non-performance. 3 Term Rep. 529. n.—And as to such enlargment of time, see 2 Term. Rep. 643, 644: 3 Term Rep. 601.

On the practice obtaining, of references at Nisi Prius, performance of the award was consequently enforced by means of an attachment, and the following is the present course of proceeding to obtain that remedy.-The award must be tendered to the party bound to perform it, and on his refusal to accept it, affidavit must be made of the due execution doubt whether the variance is material or not, | of the award, and of such tender and refusal; and on that, application made to the court to make the order of Nisi Prius a rule of court. A copy of this rule must be personally served on the party; and if he still refuse to accept the award, an affidavit must be made of such service and refusal: on which the court will grant an attachment of course. 1 Crompt. Pract. 264. When the award is accepted, but the money, being demanded, is not paid, an affidavit must be made of such refusal, and of the due execution of the award. 2 Black. Rep. 990, 991.—Where there is any dispute as to the proper performance of an award, it is discretionary in the court to grant or refuse an attachment. 1 Stra. 675: 1 Burr. 268.

If an award finds a debt, but contains no order for payment of it, an attachment will not be granted. 3 Bing. 634. If one of the parties revoke the submission, the court will grant an attachment, provided that the submission has been made a rule of court before the revocation. 7 East, 608: Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (H.) Where there appeared to be objections to the award which were pleadable to any action brought upon it, though not sufficient to set it aside, the court refused an attachment. 2 Bing. 199: 9 Moo. 38: and see Bac. Ab. ubi supra.

When an award is not for the payment of money, but for the performance of any collateral act, it may sometimes be enforced by a bill in equity, on which the court will decree a specific performance. See I Atk. 74. (62): 1 Eq. Ab. 51: 1 C. R. 46: 3 C. R. 20: 2 Vern. 24: 3 P. Wms. 187. 189, 190. But though a court of equity may assist a plaintiff to procure the execution of an award, it will not compel a defendant to discover a breach by which he may charge himself with the penalty of a submission-bond. Bishop v. Bishop, 1 C. R.

The performance of an award is compelled in equity, on the ground that the award only ascertains the terms of a previous agreement between the parties; and although the court will not decree the execution of illegal acts directed by the award, yet if the acts are legal, the court will not inquire into their reasonableness, since it considers the determination of the arbitrator conclusive, as the judge chosen by the parties. 1 Swanst. 43: 17

Upon an application for an attachment for non-performance of an award, the parties may object to any illegality apparent on the award, though the time for applying to set aside the award is expired. Pedley v. Goddard, 7 Term Rep. 73. But the court will not set aside an award for any defect after the time limited by the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15.

If an arbitrator, under a reference between A. and B., administrator, award that B. shall pay a certain sum, as the amount of A.'s demand, B. cannot afterwards object that he had no assets, but may be attached for non- | termarriage, performed her part of the cove-Worthington v. An agreement to enlarge the time for making an award must contain a consent that it shall be made a rule of court, otherwise no attachment will be granted for not performing an award made under it. Jenkins

v. Law, 8 Term Rep. 87.

To covenant in a deed (made for the performance of several matters,) the defendant cannot plead that, in the deed, there is a covenant that in case any difference should arise between the parties respecting any part of the agreement, it should be settled by three arbitrators, to be chosen, &c., and that he offered to refer the matter in dispute, &c., but the plaintiff refused, &c. Thompson v. Charnock, 8 Term Rep. 139.

A. and B. in 1797, assigned to the plaintiff all debts due to them, and gave him a power of attorney to receive and compound for the same: under which the plaintiff, in 1799, submitted to arbitration the matters in difference then subsisting between his principals and the defendants; and the plaintiff and defendants promised to each other to perform the award. The arbitrators having awarded a sum to be paid to the plaintiff as such attorney, he may maintain an action for it in his own name. Banfill v. Leigh, 8 Term Rep. 571.

Applications to set aside awards, though for objections appearing on the face of them, must be made within the time limited by the 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. Lowndes v. Lowndes,

1 East, 276.

Where a verdict is taken, pro forma, at the trial for a certain sum, subject to the award of an arbitrator, the sum afterwards awarded is to be taken as if it had been originally found by the jury; and the plaintiff is entitled to enter up judgment for the amount, without first applying to the court for leave so to Lee v. Lingard, 1 East, 401.

If an arbitrator profess to decide upon the law, and he mistakes it, the court will set aside the award, although the arbitrator's reasons do not appear upon the face of the award, but only upon another paper delivered therewith. So it seems it would be if such reasons appeared in any other authentic manner to the court. Kent v. Eistob and al., 3 East, 18.

But where the law is not clear and settled, the court will not set aside the award on an objection to the arbitrator's law. 3 Atk. 494: and see 3 Barn. & A. 237: 2 Barn. & A. 691: and see Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (K.) (7th ed.)

A. declared in covenant against B. and her husband, for that B., before her intermarriage, covenanted with A., by deed, to leave certain accounts in difference between them to arbitration, and to abide and perform the award, provided it were made during their lives; and A. protesting that B. had not, before her in- court of equity will not entertain a bill to renant, averred that, after the making the indenture, and the intermarriage of the defendant, the arbitrator awarded B. to pay a certain sum, and then alleged a breach for non-payment of such sum. After verdict on non est factum pleaded; held that, upon this declaration, it must be taken that B. intermarried after the submission, and before the award made; in which case, although the plaintiff could not recover upon the breach assigned for non-payment of the sum awarded, because the marriage was a countermand to the authority of the arbitrator; yet as, by the marriage itself, B. had by her own act put it out of her power to perform the award, the covenant to abide the award was broken, and therefore the judgment could not be arrested on the ground that the marriage was a revocation of the arbitrator's authority, and that so the plaintiff could not recover as for a breach of non-performance of the award. Charnley v. Winstanley and Ux., 5 East, 266.

Where a verdict is taken for a certain sum, subject to the award of an arbitrator, to whom matters in difference are referred by a rule of Nisi Prius, he cannot award a greater sum than that for which the verdict was taken; and if he do, no assumpsit by implication will arise to pay even to the extent of the verdict so taken. Bonner v. Charlton, 5 East, VII. Of the means of procuring Relief against it, when improperly made.-Relief may be obtained against an award, made contrary to the prescribed rules of law, when the award is put in suit. But when the submission is by the mere act of the parties, the defendant is not permitted to impeach the conduct of the arbitrators at law; so as to make it a defence to an action on the award or submission-bond. See 1 Saund. 237: 2 Wils. 149. In such case the only relief is in equity. 2 Vezey, 315. But a court of equity will not interfere to set aside an award, where the submission is voluntary (or by order of Nisi Prius, 1 C. C. 140: 1 Vern. 157.), except for corruption or improper conduct in the arbitrators; or where the award appears on the face of it to be contrary to the rules of equity: as, to the prejudice of an infant, &c. 1 C. C. 276. 279, 280: 3 Atk. 529. (496): 2 Eq. Ab. 63, 64: 3 C. R. 49: Amb.

In bills to have an award set aside for corruption or partiality, it is usual to make the arbitrators defendants; together with the party in whose favour the award is made. Finch Rep. 141: 3 Ath. 644. 397. The arbitrators may plead the award in bar; but they must show themselves impartial, or the court will make them pay costs. 2 Atk. 396. (412.)

ed that relief on application; or the time for Vez. 316, 317: See Bunb. 265.

By the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 15. it is enacted, that "any arbitration or umpirage, procured by corruption or undue means, shall be void; and be accordingly set aside by any court of law or equity, so as complaint be made to the court, where the rule for submission is made, before the last day of the next term after such arbitration made and published to the parties." See 1 Stra. 301: 2 Burr. 701: Barnes, 55. 57.

Although the statute, in terms, confines the objection to the corruption or undue practices of the arbitrator, and also limits the time of making those objections to the last day of the term following the publication of the award, the court have construed this clause liberally. They will listen to all such objections as might be taken to an award made under a rule of court at common law: and although no application to set aside an award under the statute can be made after the time so limited, yet on motion to enforce it by attachment made at any time, the court will hear the same objection in answer to that application, and will use them as reasons, if wellfounded, to influence their decision in withholding the attachment, as they would have done on application to set aside the award.

It seems that a court of equity may relieve, on manifest grounds, after the time required by the act for complaint at law, though no such complaint is made at all in the common law courts. Bunb. 265: 1 Barn. K. B. 75. 152.

Ever since the above statute, it is competent to either party before the submission is made a rule of court, to revoke by deed his submission, and notify the same to the arbitrators before the authority is executed. 7 E. R. 608; 5 Taunt. 452.

Where the submission is by reference at Nisi Prius, there is no time limited for making an application to set aside an award for any cause. 2 Atk. 155. (162.): Str. 301: 2 Burr. 701: 8 E. R. 466. But in such case the motion to set aside an award must be made within the time allowed to move for a new trial, unless a sufficient reason be shown for the delay. 6 Barn. & C. 629. When the submission is according to the statute, no application can be made to have the award set aside till the submission be actually made a rule of court, which may be either before or after making the award. 1 Stra. 301: 2 Vez. 317: 2 Str. 1178: 3 P. Wms. 362.

The most frequent subject of complaint against an award, arises from some imputed misconduct of the arbitrators, and when the complaint is made out, it is generally successful: as if one of the arbitrators unjustly ex-lieve against an award for corruption or par- | clude the rest from the award; or hold private tiality, unless the court of law has not afford- | meetings with one of the parties; 2 Vern. 515; or appoint an umpire by lot; Id. 485; complaining at law, under the statute, is or manifest any other undue partiality; Id. elapsed. 2 Atk. 155. (162.) 396. (412.): 2 101. 251: 3 P. Wms. 262: 2 Vez. 216. 18: 1 Vez. 317. See Bac. Ab. Arbitrament. (K.)

> If it appear that the arbitrators went on a plain mistake, either as to the law, or in a point of fact, that is an error appearing on the face of the award, and sufficient to set it aside. 2 Vern. 705. As to mistakes, see Barn. & Adol. 234. So if the arbitrators appear to have an interest in the subject of reference. 2 Vern. 251. So also where any circumstance is suppressed or concealed from either of the arbitrators, and the arbitrator declares that had he known the circumstance, he would have made a different award. 1 Atk. 77. (64.)

> Where the submission is under the statute, or by reference at Nisi Prius, the court will on some occasions send back the award to be re-considered, on suggestion that the arbitrator had not sufficient materials before him, and perhaps too to rectify any trifling or apparent mistake; but such application must be made in the former case within the time prescribed by the statute. 2 Term Rep. 781.

> Where a rule to show cause is obtained in King's Bench to set aside an award, the objections intended to be insisted upon must be stated in the rule to show cause. Reg. Gen. K. B. E. T. 2 G. 4: 4 B. & A. 539. And the same in the Exchequer. 11 Price, 57.

> A motion for setting aside an award must be made before the last day of the next term after such award is published; otherwise it is too late, and an attachment for non-performance may issue. Cowp. 23. And the court will not hear such a motion on the last day of term. 1 Tidd's Prac. 503.

> The court will not grant a second rule to set aside an award, when a rule for that purpose has been already discharged. 2 Chitt.

> Applications to set aside awards must be made within the time limited by the statute, although the objection appears on the face of the award. 2 Term Rep. 781: 1 East, 276.

> VIII. The Effect in precluding the Parties from suing on the original Cause of Action or Subject of Reference.-An award may be pleaded in bar to every action brought for a cause or complaint which had been previously referred to the arbitrators, on which the award was made. See 4 Term Rep. 146.

> The award thus pleaded must have all the qualities necessary to constitute a good award; and must be such, if it be pleaded without performance, that the plaintiff may have a remedy to compel performance: but if performance be alleged. as it may be (see 1 Ro. Rep. 7, 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bulst. 93: Roll. Arbitr. (F. 2): Al. 86: 3 Leon. 62.) even a void award may frequently be a good bar. ing, and ready to be delivered to the parties in tain, and cannot be ascertained by averment, cannot be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 292: 2 Keb. 736.

The cases which have determined an award not to be pleadable in bar, where it does not create a new duty, seem irreconcileable to the present state of the law on the subject-particularly as they allow that an action may be maintained on the submission, whether that is by bond or otherwise. 1 Ld. Raym. 248: 12 Mod. 130: Comb. 440: 1 Salk. 69: Lutw.

An award, however, which does not extend to the whole of the thing demanded, is not a good plea to an action on the demand. Al. 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 612: see Lutw. 51. And in order to make an award a good plca, it must appear that both parties were equally bound by it.

Where the plaintiff lays several counts in his declaration, and the award, from the terms of it, can only be a bar to one of them; if in reality they are all for the same cause, the best way of pleading seems to be, to plead the award to that count to which it is answerable in terms; and the general issue to the rest. Kyd. 245.

There were anciently some distinctions in the manner of pleading an award, with respect to the necessity of alleging performance of the thing awarded, which are not now essential; for since it has been held that an action will lie on the mere submission, it is in no case necessary for the defendant, in pleading an award in bar of an action, to allege performance of the thing awarded, unless where the award is void, and consequently the plaintiff could not enforce it. 1 Ld. Raym. 122

Where the lessor of the plaintiff and the defendant in ejectment had before referred their right to the land to an arbitrator, who had awarded in favour of the lessor, the award excludes the defendant from disputing the lessor's title in an action of ejectment. Morris and al., v. Prosser, 3 East, 15.

Form of an Award, on a Submission.

To all people to whom this present writing indented of Award shall come, greeting. Whereas there are several accounts depending, and divers controversies and disputes have lately arisen between A. B. of, &c., Gent., and C. D. of, &c. all which controversies and disputes are chiefly touching and concerning, &c. And whereas, for the putting an end to the said differences and disputes, they the said A. B. and C. D., by their several bonds or obligations bearing date, &c. are become bound each to the other of them in the penal sum of, &c. to stand to and abide the award and final determination of us E. F., G.

An award, however, which is in itself uncer- difference on or before, &c. next, as by the said obligations, and the condition thereof may appear. Now know ye, That we the said arbitrators whose names are hereunto subscribed, and seals affixed, taking upon us the burthen of the said award, and having fully examined and duly considered the proofs and allegations of both the said parties, do, for the settling amity and friendship between them, make and publish this our award, by and between the said parties, in manner following, that is to say, First, We do award and order, that all actions, suits, quarrels, and controversies whatsoever had, moved, arisen or depending between the said parties in law or equity, for any manner of cause whatsoever, touching the said, &c. to the day of the date hereof, shall cease and be no farther prosecuted, and that each of the said parties shall pay and bear his own costs and charges, in anywise relating to or concerning the said premises. And we do also award and order that the said A. B. shall pay, or cause to be paid to the said C. D. the sum of, &c. within the space of, &c. And also at his own costs and charges do, &c. And we do award and order that, &c. And lastly, we do award and order that the said A. B. and C. D., on payment of the money above-mentioned, shall in due form of law execute each to the other of them general releases, sufficient for the releasing by each to the other of them, his executors and administrators, of all actions, suits, arrests, quarrels, controversies and demands whatsoever touching or concerning the premises aforesaid, or any matter or thing thereunto relating, from the beginning of the world until the day of, &c. last. In witness, bacheleir, viz. tyro, a learner. In the universities there are bachelors of arts, &c., which is the first degree taken by students, before they come to greater dignity. And those that are called bachelors of the companies of London, are such of each company as are springing towards the estate of those that are employed in council, but as yet are inferiors; for every of the twelve companies consists of a master, two wardens, the livery (which are assistants in matters of council, or such as the assistants are chosen out of,) and the bachelors, in other companies called the yeomanry. The word bachelor is also used, and signifies the same with knight bachelor, a simple knight, and not knight banneret, or knight of the Bath. The name of bachelor was also applied to that species of esquire, ten of whom were retained by each knight banneret on his creation. Anno 28 Ed. 3. a petition was recorded in the Tower, beginning thus: A nostre Seigneur le Roy monstrent votre simple bachelor, Johan de Bures, &c. Bachelor was anciently attributed to the admiral of England, if he were under the degree of a baron. In Pat. 8 R. 2. we read of a baccalaureus regis. Touching the farther etymology of this word, see Spelman.

BACHELERIA. The commonalty or yeomanry, as distinguished from the baronage.

The term bachelor also denotes in law a man who has never been married; and as such, taxes have at times been levied, or the taxes laid on others increased, if paid by bachelors: as in the case of the duty on servants, under stat. 25 G. 3. c. 43.

BACKBERINDE, Sax.] Bearing upon the back, or about a man. Bracton useth it for a sign or circumstance of theft apparent, which the civilians call furtum manifestum. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 32. Mamw. 2 part, Forest Laws. BACK-BOND. A term in Scotch law, meaning a deed which in conjunction with an absolute disposition constitutes a trust. It expresses the nature of the right actually had by the person to whom the disposition is made. It is equivalent to the English deed of declaration of trust.

BACO. A bacon hog, used in old charters.

BACTILE. A candlestick properly so call. ed, when formerly made ex baculo, of wood, for him, before certain persons for that pur-

BADGER, from the Fr. baggage, a bundle, and thence is derived bagagier, a carrier of goods. One that buys corn or victuals in one place, and carries them to another to sell and make profit by them: and such a one was exempted in the stat. 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 14. from the punishment of an ingrosser within that statute. But by 5 Eliz. c. 12. badgers are to be licensed by the justices of peace in the sessions; whose licenses will be in force for one year, and no longer: and the persons to whom granted must enter into a recognisance that they will not by colour of their licenses forestal, or do any thing contrary to the statutes made against forestallers, ingrossers, and regrators. If any person shall act as a badger without license, he is to forfeit 51., one moiety to the king, and the other to the prosecutor, leviable by warrant from justices of peace, &c. Vide 13 El. c. 25. § 20.

BAJARDOUR, Lat. bajulator.] A bearer of any weight or burthen. Petr. Bles. Contin.

Hist. Croyland, p. 120. BAIL, baillum, from the Fr. bailler, which comes of the Greek Badden, and signifies to deliver into hands.] Is used in our common law for the freeing or setting at liberty of one arrested or imprisoned upon any action, either civil or criminal, or surety taken for his appearance at a day and place certain. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 8. The reason why it is called bail is because, by this means, the party restrained is delivered into the hands of those that bind themselves for his forthcoming, in order to a safe keeping or protection from prison: and the end of bail is to satisfy the condemnation and costs, or render the defendant to prison.

Bail and mainprize are often used promiscuously in our law books, as signifying one and the same thing, and agree in this notion, that they save a man from imprisonment in the common gaol; his friends undertaking BAIL, I. 155 pose authorized, that he shall appear at a must put in bail for both; but if the husband certain day, and answer whatever shall be objected to him in a legal way. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 29: 4 Inst. 180. The chief difference is, that a man's mainpernors are barely his sureties, and cannot imprison him themselves to secure his appearance, as his bail may, who are looked upon as his gaolers, to whose custody he is committed, and therefore may take him upon a Sunday, and confine until the next day, and then render him. 6 Mod. 231: Ld. Raym. 706: 12 Mod. 275.

Special bail are two or more persons who undertake generally, or in a sum certain that if the defendant be convicted, he shall satisfy the plaintiff, or render himself to the custody of the marshal; generally there are but two persons who become bail for a defendant.

Where the defendant has been arrested or discharged out of custody, upon giving a bail bond to the sheriff, he must, at the return of the writ, to discharge such bond, appear thereto, namely, by putting in special bail, or, as it is termed, bail above, so called, in contradistinction to the sheriff's bail, or bail below; nor can he render himself in discharge of such bond without first putting in bail above. 5 Burr. 2683.

By rule M. 1654, no attorney shall be bail for a defendant in any action, nor his clerk. Cowp. 228. By rules of H. T. 1832, if a practising attorney, or his clerk, be put in as bail, except for the purpose of rendering, the plaintiff may treat the bail as a nullity. Vide Doug. Rep. 466. that an attorney may be admitted as bail in a criminal case.

No sheriff's officer, bailiff, or other persons concerned in the execution of process, shall be permitted to be bail in any action or suit depending in K. B. nor persons outlawed after judgment. R. M. 14 G. 2. The keeper of the Poultry Compter was rejected. Doug. 466.

I. OF BAIL IN CIVIL CASES. As to the form and requisites of affidavits to hold to bail, see tit. Affidavit, Arrest.] In actions of battery, trespass, slander, &c., though the plaintiff is likely to recover large damages, special bail is not to be had, unless by order of court, and the process is marked for special bail: nor is it required in actions of account, or of covenant, except it be to pay money; nor against heirs, executors, &c. for the debt of the testator, unless they have wasted the testator's goods. 1 Danv. Ab. 681: Bac. Ab. Bail in Civil Causes (B.): Tidd. Prac. 171. (9th ed.): 9 East, 325.

By 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 71. no person shall be held to bail where the cause of action does not originally amount to 201. over and above all costs, charges, and expenses, so that spccial or common bail is no longer discretionary in the court, but is governed by the arrest. See Tidd's Prac. 239. (9th ed.)

1 Barn. & A. 165.

In all actions brought in B. R. upon any penal law, the defendant is to put in but common bail. Yelv. 53; see Bac. Ab. Bail (B.) In actions where damages are uncertain, bail is to be at the discretion of the court; on a dangerous assault and battery, upon affidavit of special damages, a judge's hand may be procured for allowance of an ac etiam in the writ: and in action of scandalum magnatum, the court, on motion, ordered special bail. Raym. 74. When bail is taken by the chief justice, or other judge, on a habeas corpus, the bail taken in the inferior court is dismissed, though the last bail be not filed presently, nor till the next term. Yelv. 120, 121. Yet it has been held, where a cause is removed out of an inferior court by habeas corpus, if the bail below offer themselves to be bail above, they shall be taken, not being excepted against below, unless the cause comes out of London. For the sufficiency of the bail there is at the peril of the clerk, and he is responsible to the plaintiff; so that the plaintiff had not the liberty of excepting against them, and the clerk is not responsible for their deficiency in the court above, though he was in London, 1 Salk. 97.

In London, it is said, special bail is to be given in action of account, &c. But on removal by habeus corpus into B. R. that court will accept common bail. 2 Keb. 404.

Bail in Error.—There is not only bail to appear, &c., on writs of error; but also in audita querela a recognizance of bail must be acknowledged; and upon a writ of attaint, to prosecute, &c. Jenk. Cent. 129.

By the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. no execution shall be delayed by any writ of error or supersedeas thereupon, unless bail shall be given in double the sum adjudged, to prosecute the writ of error with effect; and also to satisfy the debt, damages, and costs adjudged, &c. This statute, which applied only to judgment on bonds and specialties, is now extended to all judgments in personal actions by 6 G. 4. c. 96. The statutes only apply to writs of error brought by defendants. 5 East, 545: 10 East, 2. As to bail in error, see Tidd. 1149. 1153. (9th ed.)

are chargeable, but not if remanded in another term. Cro. Jac. 363. One taken on a writ of execution is not bailable by law; except an audita querela be brought; but where a writ of error is brought and allowed, if the defendant be not in execution, there shall not be an execution awarded against him at the request of the bail, though he be present in court. 1 Nels. Ab. 331. The bail ought not to join with the principal, nor the principal with the bail, in a writ of error to reverse the judgment against either. Cro. Jac. 384.

On capias ad satisfaciendum against the defendant returned non est inventus, scire facias is to issue against the bail, or an action may be brought. Where a defendant renders his body in discharge of the bail, the plaintiff is, by the rules of the court, to make his choice of proceeding in execution whether he will charge body, goods, or lands. 183. And if the principal, after judgment, renders not himself in discharge of his bail, it is at the election of the plaintiff to take out execution either against him, or proceed against his bail; but if he takes the bail in execution, though he hath not full satisfaction, he shall never after take the principal; and if the principal be taken, he may not after meddle with the bail.

Where two are bail, although one be in execution, the plaintiff may take the other. Cro. Jac. 320; 2 Bulst. 68. If a principal render himself, and there is none to require his commitment, the court is ex officio to commit him; and if the plaintiff refuse him, he shall be discharged, and an entry made of it upon the record. Moor, Cas. 1249: 1 Leon. 59: see Hob. 210.

There must be an exoneretur entered, to discharge the bail. If the defendant dies before a capias ad satisfac. against him returned and filed, the bail will be discharged. Lill. 177.

C. c. 15. § 72. From the cases cited there (viz. the Hon. Alex. Murray's, 1 Wils. 229: John Wilkes's, 2 Wils. 158: Entick v. Carrington, 11 St. Tr. 317: Brass Crosby's, 3 Wils. 188: 2 Blackst. 775.) it appears that the courts in Westminster Hall have been positively of opinion, "that they have no power to decide on the privileges of parlia-ment; that the rights of the House of Commons are paramount to the jurisdiction of those courts; that the commons are the exclusive arbiters of their own peculiar privileges; that their power of commitment is inherent in the very nature of their constitution; and finally, that their adjudication is tantamount to a conviction, and their commitment equal to an execution; and that no court can discharge a prisoner committed in exccution by another court."

A defendant convicted of a misdemeanour, brought up for judgment and remanded, cannot be bailed without the consent of the pro-

And when the House of Lords adjudge that any matter is a breach of privilege, their adjudication on the party accused is a conviction, and no court can bail him. 8 E. R. 314.

However, a person committed for a contempt, by order of either house of parliament, may be discharged by B. R. after a dissolution or prorogation, which determine all orders of parliament; also it is said on an impeachment, when the parliament is not sitting, and the party has been long in prison, B. R. may bail him. The court of B. R. hath bailed persons committed to the Fleet Prison by the Lord Chancellor, when the crime of commitment was not mentioned, or only in general terms, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 76.

And B. R. having the control of all inferior courts, may at their discretion bail any person unjustly committed by any of those courts. In admitting a person to bail in the court of B. R. for felony, &c. a several recognizance is entered into to the king in a certain sum from each of the bail, that the prisoner shall appear at a certain day, &c. And also that the bail shall be liable for the default of such appearance, body for body. And it is at the discretion of justices of the peace, in admitting any person to bail for felony, to take the recognizance in a certain sum, or body for body; but where a person is bailed by any court, &c. for a crime of an inferior nature, the recognizance ought to be only in a certain sum of money, and not body for body. 2 Hawk. c. 15. § 83. And the bail are to be bound in double the sum of the criminal. Where persons are bound body for body, if the offender doth not appear, whereby the recognizance is forfeited, the bail are not liable to such punishment to which the principal would be adjudged if found guilty, but only to be fined, &c. Wood's Inst. 618. If bail suspect the prisoner will fly, they may carry him before a justice to find new sureties; or to be committed in their discharge. 1 Rep. 99.

Though a warrant of commitment for felony be informal, yet if the corpus delicti appear in the depositions returned to the court, they will not bail but remand the prisoner. 3 E. R. 157.

The courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, in term time, and the Chancery in the term or vacation, may bail persons by the habeas corpus act. See tit. Habeas Cor-

To refuse bail when any one is bailable on the one hand; or on the other to admit any to bail who ought not by law to be admitted, or to take slender bail, is punishable by fine, &c. 2 Inst. 291: H. P. C. 97.

No person shall be bailed for felony by less than two; and it is said not to be usual for the King's Bench to bail a man on a habeas corpus, on a commitment for treason or felony, without four sureties; the sum in which the sureties are to be bound ought to be never less than 40l. for a capital crime; but it may be higher in discretion, on consideration of the ability and quality of the prisoner, and the nature of the offence; and the sureties may be examined on oath concerning their sufficiency by him that takes the bail; and if a person be bailed by insufficient sureties, he may be required either by him who took the bail, or by any other who hath power to bail him, to find better sureties, and on his refusal may be committed; for insufficient sureties are as none. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 4: H. P. C. 97.

But justices must take care, that under pretence of demanding sufficient surety, they do not make so excessive a demand as in effect amounts to a denial of bail; for this is looked upon as a great grievance, and is complained of as such by 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. (the bill of rights) by which it is declared that excessive bail ought not to be required. 2 Hawk. P. C.

If where a felony is committed one is brought before a justice on suspicion, the person suspected is to be bailed, or committed to prison; but if there is no felony done, he may be discharged. H. P. C. 98.106.

Persons committed for treason or felony, and not indicted the next term, are to be bailed. 31

BAILIFF, ballivus.] From the French word bayliff, that is, præfectus provinciæ, and as the name, so the office itself was answerable to that of France, where there were eight parliaments, which were high courts from whence there lay no appeal, and within the precincts of the several parts of that kingdom which belonged to each parliament there were several provinces to which justice was administered by certain officers called bailiffs: and in England we have several counties in which justice hath been, and still is, in small suits, administered to the inhabitants by the officer whom we now call sheriff or viscount; (one of which names descends from the Saxons, the other from the Normans:) and though the sheriff is not called bailiff, yet it is probable that was one of his names also, because the county is often called balliva: as in the return of a writ, where the person is not arrested, the sheriff saith, Infra-nominatus A. B. non est inventus in balliva mea, &c. Kitch. Ret. Brev. fol. 285. And in the statute of Magna Charta, c. 28. and 14 Ed. 3. c. 9. the word bailiff seems to comprise as well sheriffs as bailiffs of hun-

Bailies in Scotland are magistrates of burghs, possessed of certain jurisdictions, having the same power within their territory as sheriffs in the county.—The term is also there, suing a writ of non omittas capias in the first applied to any officer or person named by a instance, without a previous capias and return

As England is divided into counties, so every county is divided into hundreds; within which in ancient times the people had justice administered to them by the several officers of every hundred, which were the bailiffs. And it appears by Bracton (lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 34.) that bailiffs of hundreds might anciently hold plea of appeal and approvers: but since that time the hundred courts, except certain franchises, are swallowed in the county-courts; and now the bailiff's name and office is grown into contempt, they being generally officers to serve writs, &c. within their liberties; though, in other respects, the name is still in good esteem; for the chief magistrates in divers towns are called bailiffs: and sometimes the persons to whom the king's castles are committed are termed builiffs, as the bailiff of Dover Castle, &c.

Of the ordinary bailiffs there are several sorts, viz. bailiffs of liberties; sheriffs' bailiffs; bailiffs of husbandry, &c.

Bailiffs of liberties are those bailiffs who are appointed by every lord within his liberty, to execute process and do such offices therein, as the bailiff errant doth at large in the county; but bailiffs errant or itinerant, to go up and down the county to serve process, are out of use.

Bailifs of liberties or franchises, are to be sworn to take distresses, truly impanel jurors, make returns by indenture between them and sheriffs, &c., and shall be punished for malicious distresses by fine and treble damages, by ancient statutes. Vide 12 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 5: 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 5: 2 Ed. 3. c. 4: 5 Ed. 3. c. 4: 11 H. 7. c. 15: 27 H. 8. c.

24: 3 G. 1. c. 15. § 10.

The bailiff of a liberty may make an inquisition and extent upon an elegit. The sheriff returned on a writ of elegit, that the party had not any lands but within the liberty of St. Edmund's Bury, and that J. S., bailiff there, had the execution and return of all writs, and that he inquired and returned an extent by inquisition, and the bailiff delivered the moiety of the lands extended to the plaintiff, who, by virtue thereof, entered, &c. This was held a good re-Cro. Car. 319. These bailiffs of liberties cannot arrest a man without a warrant from the sheriff of the county: and yet the sheriff may not enter the liberty himself, at the suit of a subject (unless it be on a quo minus, or capias utlagatum), without clause in his writ, Non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, &c. If the sheriff, &c. enters the liberty without such power, the lord of the liberty may have an action against him, though the execution of the writ may stand good. 1 Vent. 406: 2 Inst. 453. But it was decided after full argument, that an action on the case cannot be maintained by the bailiff of a franchise for issuing a writ of non omittas capias in the first instance, without a previous capias and return by the sheriff, since the usage of the court has legalised the practice. Carratt v. Smallpage, 9 East, 330. A writ of fieri facias directed in the first instance to the bailiff of the Isle of Ely is erroneous and void, and the bailiff serving under it is a trespasser. Grant v. Bagge, 3 East, 128: and see 14 East, 289: 1 Brod. & B. 12. And Wood, Baron, held that the killing the officer making such an arrest was not murder, since the officer was a trespasser. Rex v. Mead, 2 Stark. Ca. 205: and see 3 Barn & A. 502.

Sheriffs' bailiffs are such who are servants to sheriffs of counties, to execute writs, warrants, &c. Formerly bailiffs of hundreds were the officers to execute writs; but now it is done by special bailiffs, put in with them by the sheriff. A bailiff of a liberty is an officer which the court takes notice of; though a sheriff's bailiff is not an officer of the court, but only the sheriff himself. Pasch. 23 Car. 1 B. R. The arrest of the sheriff's bailiff is the arrest of the sheriff; and if any rescous be made of any person arrested, it shall be adjudged done to the sheriff; also if the bailiff permit a prisoner to escape, action may be brought against the sheriff. Co. Lit. 61. 168. Sheriffs are answerable for misdemeanors of their bailiffs; and are to have remedy over against them. 2 Inst. 19. The latter are therefore usually bound in an obligation for the due execution of their offices, and thence are called bound bailiffs; which the common people have corrupted to a more humble appellation.

There are thirty-six serjeants at mace in London, who may be termed bailiffs, and they each give security to the sheriffs.

By stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 9. sheriffs shall appoint such bailiffs, for whom they will answer; and by stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4: no sheriff's bailiff shall be attorney in the king's court, R. M. 1654.

Bailiffs of lords of manors are those that collect their rents, and levy their fines and amercements: but such a bailiff cannot distrain for an amercement without a special warrant from the lord or his steward. Cro. Eliz. 698. He cannot give license to commit a trespass, as to cut down trees, &c., though he may license one to go over land, being a trespass to the possession only, the profits whereof are at his disposal. Cro. Jac. 337. 377. A bailiff may by himself, or by command of another, take cattle damage-feasant upon the land. 1 Danv. Ab. 685. Yet amends cannot be tendered to the bailiff, for he may not accept of amends, nor deliver the distress when once taken. 5 Rep. 76. These bailiffs may do any thing for the benefit of their masters, and it shall stand good till the master disagrees; but they can do nothing to the prejudice of their masters. Lit. Rep. 70. Bailiffs of courts-baron summon those Bailiffs of husbandry are belonging to private men of good estates, and have the disposal of the under-servants, every man to his labour; they also fell trees, repair houses, hedges, &c., and collect the profits of the land for their lord and master, for which they render account yearly, &c.

Besides these, there are also bailiffs of the forest, of which see Manwood, part 1, p.

An appointment of a Bailiff of a Manor.

Know all men by these presents, That I, W. B. of, &c. Esq. lord of the manor of D. in the county of G., Have made, ordained, deputed, and appointed, and by these presents do make, ordain, depute, and appoint J. G. of, &c. my bailiff, for me, and in my name, and to my use, to collect and gather, and to ask, require, demand, and receive of all and every of my tenants, that have held or enjoyed, or now do, or hereafter shall hold or enjoy, any messuages, lands or tenements, from, by, or under me, within my said manor of D., all rents, and arrears of rent, heriots, and other profits, that now are, or hereafter shall become payable, due, owing, or belonging to me within the said manor; and, in default of payment thereof, to distrain for the same from time to time, and such distress or distresses to impound, detain, and keep, until payment be made of the said rents and profits, and the arrears thereof. And I do also farther empower and authorize the said J. G. to take care of and inspect into all and every my messuages, lands, and woods within the said manor, and to take an account of all defects, decays, wastes, spoils, trespasses, or other misdemeanors, committed or permitted within my said manor, or in any messuages, lands, or woods there: and from time to time, to give me a just and true account in writing thereof; and farther to act and do all other things that to the office of a bailiff of the said manor belongs and appertains, during my will and pleasure. In Witness, &c.

BAILIS, are letters to raise fire and sword. Scotch Dict.

BAILIWICK, balliva.] Is not only taken for the county, but signifies generally that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff, with such powers within his precinct as an under-sheriff exerciseth under the sheriff of the county; such as the bailiff of Westminster, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 12: Wood's Inst. 206.

BAILMENT, from bailler, Fr. to deliver.] " A delivery of goods in trust, upon a contract expressed or implied that the trust shall be courts, and execute the process thereof; they | faithfully executed on the part of the bailee;" [the person to whom they are delivered,] 2 Comm. 451, which see; to which Sir W. Jones adds, "and the goods re-delivered as soon as the time or use, for which they are bailed, shall have clapsed or be performed." Law of Bailments, p. 117.

It is to be known that there are six sorts of bailments which lay a care and obligation on the party to whom goods are bailed: and which, consequently, subject him to an action, if he misbehave in the trust reposed in

1. A bare and naked bailment, to keep for the use of the bailor, which is called depositum: and such bailee is not chargeable for a common neglect; but it must be a gross one to make him liable. 2 Str. 1099.

2. A delivery of goods which are useful to keep, and they are to be returned again in specie, which is called accommodatum, which is a lending gratis; and in such case the borrower is strictly bound to keep them: for if he be guilty of the least neglect, he shall be answerable, but he shall not be charged where there is no default in him. See post. 3. A delivery of goods for hire, which is called locatio, or conductio; and the hirer is to take all imaginable care, and restore them at the time; which care, if he so use, he shall

4. A delivery by way of pledge, which is called vadium; and in such goods the pawnee has a special property; and if the goods will be the worse for using, the pawnee must not use them; otherwise he may use them at his peril: as jewels pawned to a lady, if she keep them in a bag, and they are stolen, she shall not be charged: but if she go with them to a play, and they are stolen, she shall be answerable. So if the pawnee be at a charge in keeping them, he may use them for his reasonable charge: and if, notwithstanding all his diligence, he lose the pledge, yet he shall recover the debt. But if he lose it after the money tendered, he shall be chargeable, for he is a wrong-doer: after money paid (and tender and refusal is the same) it ceases to be a pledge, and therefore the pawnor may either bring an action of assumpsit, and declare that the defendant promised to return the goods upon request: or trover, the property being vested in him by the tender.

5. A delivery of goods to be carried for a reward, of which enough is said under title Carrier. It may here be added, that the plaintiff ought to prove the defendant used to carry goods, and that the goods were delivered to him or his servant to be carried. And if a price be alleged in the declaration, it ought to be proved the usual price for such a stage; and if the price be proved, there need no proof, the defendant being a common carrier: but there need not be a proof of a price certain.

6. A delivery of goods to do some act about soever, takes of his own property. See post, them, as to carry without a reward, which is called by Bracton, mandatum, in English, an acting by commission; and though he be to have nothing for his pains, yet if there were any neglect in him, he will be answerable; for his having undertaken a trust is a sufficient consideration; but if the goods be misused by a third person, in the way, without any neglect of his, he would not be liable, being to have no reward.

The above is taken from Lord Chief Justice Holt's opinion, in the case of Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. as abridged, Bull. N. P. 72. See also Sir. W. Jones's Essay on the Law of Bailment, p. 35: Com. Rep. 133. with Mr. Rose's notes; and on this subject, 2 Inst. 39; 4 Rep. 83; 1 Roll. Ab. 338; 1 Inst. 89. b : Doct. & St. 122 : Bac. Ab. Bailment.

(ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

Having mentioned Sir W. Jones's Essay on the Law of Bailment, we cannot help recommending it to the attention of the rational student; and for the use of such, extracting the following analysis, which will in general be found to be consonant with the determinations in the books, and convey much know-ledge in a short compass. Sir W. Jones differs in a few points from Lord Holt and Lord Coke, and his reasons are deserving of much attention.

"I. DEFINITIONS .-- 1. Bailment, as before at the beginning of this article .- 2. Deposit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor without recompense .- 3. Mandate is a bailment of goods, without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them .- 4. Lending for use is a bailment of a thing for a certain time, to be used by the borrower without paying for it. -5. Pledging is a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt be discharged.-6. Letting to hire is (1) a bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation in money; or (2) a letting out of work and labour to be done, or care and attention to be bestowed by the bailee on the goods bailed, and that for a pecuniary recompense; or (3) of care and pains in carrying the things delivered from one place to another, for a stipulated or implied reward.-Innominate bailments are those where the compensation for the use of a thing, or for labour and attention, is not pecuniary; but either (1) the reciprocal use or the gift of some other thing; or (2) work and pains reciprocally undertaken; or (3) the use or gift of another thing in consideration of care and labour; and conversely .- 8. Ordinary neglect is the omission of that care, which every man of common prudence, and capable of governing a family, takes of his own concerns.-9. Gress neglect, is the want of that care which every man of common sense, how inattentive Vol. I.—22

II. 8 .- 10. Slight neglect is the omission of that diligence which very circumspect and thoughtful persons use in securing their own goods and chattels .- 11. A naked contract is a contract made without consideration or recompense.

"II. THE RULES which may be considered as axioms flowing from natural reason, good morals, and sound policy are these :- 1. A bailee who derives no benefit from his undertaking, is responsible only for gross neglect. 2. A bailee who alone receives benefit from the bailment, is responsible for slight neglect. -3. When the bailment is beneficial to both parties, the bailee must answer for ordinary neglect.—4. A special agreement of any bailee to answer for more or less, is in general valid .- 5. All bailees are answerable for actual fraud, even though the contrary be stipulated .- 6. No bailee shall be charged for a loss by inevitable accident or irresistible force, except by special agreement.-7. Robbery by force is considered as irresistible; but a loss by private stealth is presumptive evidence of ordinary neglect .- 8. Gross negleet is a violation of good faith. -9. No action lies to compel performance of a naked contract.-10. A reparation may be obtained by suit for every damage occasioned by an injury .-- 11. The negligence of a servant acting by his master's express or implied order, is the negligence of the master.

"III. From these rules the following Pro-POSITIONS are evidently deducible;-1. A depositary is responsible only for gross neglect: or in other words for a violation of good faith. -2. A depositary whose character is known to his depositor, shall not answer for mere neglect, if he take no better care of his own goods, and they also be spoiled or destroyed.

3. A mandatary to carry is responsible only for gross neglect, or a breach of good faith.-4. A mandatary to perform a work is bound to use a degree of diligence adequate to the peformance of it.-5. A man cannot be compelled by action to perform his promise of engaging in a deposit or mandate; but-6. A reparation may be obtained by suit for damage occasioned by the non-performance of a promise to become a depositary, or a mandatary.-7. A borrower for use is responsible for slight negligence.—8. A pawnee is answerable for ordinary neglect .- 9. The hirer of a thing is answerable for ordinary neglect.-10. A workman for hire must answer for ordinary neglect of the goods bailed. and must apply a degree of skill equal to his undertaking.-11. A letter to hire of his care and attention, is responsible for ordinary negligence.-12. A carrier for hire by land or by water, is answerable for ordinary neglect.

"IV. Exceptions to the above rules and and officiously engages to keep or to carry the goods of another, though without reward, must answer for slight neglect .- 2. If a man through strong persuasion and with reluctance undertake the execution of a mandate, no more can be required of him than a fair exertion of his ability.—3. All bailees become responsible for losses by casualty or violence, after their refusal to return the things bailed on a lawful demand .-- 4. A borrower and a hirer are answerable on all events, if they keep the things borrowed or hired after the stipulated time, or use them differently from their agreement .- 5. A depositary and a pawnee are answerable in all events if they use the things deposited or pawned. But it rather seems that if the thing bailed be an animal requiring exercise, as a horse, or setting dog, there would be an implied authority from the bailor for moderate use. See Bac. Ab. Bailment (A.) (7th ed.)-6. An innkeeper is chargeable for the goods of his guest within his inn, if the guest be robbed by the servants or inmates of the keeper .- 7. A common carrier by land or by water, must indemnify the owner of the goods carried, if he be robbed of them.

"V. It is no exception, but a Corollary from the rules, that every bailee is responsible for a loss by accident or force, however inevitable or irresistible; if it be occasioned by that degree of negligence for which the nature of his contract makes him generally answerable."

The following cases may serve to illustrate

A man leaves a chest locked up with another to be kept, and doth not make known to him what is therein; if the chest and goods in it are stolen, the person who receives them shall not be charged for the same, for he was not trusted with them. See Bac. Ab. Bailment (A.) (7th ed.): and see 4 Barn. & A. 42.; 5 Barn. & A. 348. And what is said as to stealing is to be understood of all other inevitable accidents; but it is necessary for a man that receives goods to be kept, to receive them in a special manner, viz. to be kept as lity with what is borrowed. If I deliver 100l. to A. to buy cattle, and he bestows 50l. of it in cattle, and I bring an action of debt for all, I shall be barred in that action for the money bestowed and charges, &c., but for the rest I shall recover. Hob.

If one deliver his goods to another person, to deliver over to a stranger, the deliverer may countermand his power, and require the goods again; and if the bailee refuse to deliver them, he may have an action of account for them. Co. Lit. 286.

If A. delivers goods to B., to be delivered over to C., C. hath the property, and C. hath the action against B., for B. undertakes for the safe delivery to C., and hath no property or interest but in order to that purpose. 1 Roll. Abr. 606: see 1 Bulst. 68, 69. where it is said that, in case of conversion to his own use, the bailee shall be answerable to both.

But if the bailment were not on valuable consideration, the delivery is countermandable; and in that case, if A. the bailor brings trover, he reduces the property again in himself, for the action amounts to a countermand; but if the delivery was on a valuable consideration, then A. cannot have trover, because the property is altered; and in trover the property must be proved in the plaintiff. 1 Bulst. 68: see 1 Leon. 30: see Bos. & Pull. 582: 8 Term R. 330: 2 Camp. 639; Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (A.)

And where a man delivers goods to another, to be re-delivered to the deliverer at such a day, and before that day the bailee doth sell the goods in market overt; the bailor may at the day seize and take his goods, for the property is not altered. Godb. 160.

If A. borrows a horse to ride to Dover, and he rides out of his way, and the owner of the horse meets him, he cannot take the horse from him; for A. has a special property in the horse till the journey is determined; and being in lawful possession of the horse, the owner cannot violently seize and take it away; for the continuance of all property is to be taken from the form of the original bargain, which, in this case, was limited till the appointed journey was finished. Yelv. 172. But the owner may have an action on the case against the bailee for exceeding the purposes of the loan; for so far it is a secret and fallacious abuse of his property; but no general action of trespass, because it is not an open and violent invasion of it. 1 Roll. Rep. 128.

As to borrowing a thing perishable, as corn, wine, or money, or the like, a man must, from the nature of the thing, have an absolute property in them; otherwise it could not supply the uses for which it was lent; and therefore he is obliged to return something of the same sort, the same in quantity and qua-

Gerrard de la War is recorded to have be used to any other end or purpose than that for which it was borrowed, the party may have his action on the case for it, though the thing be never the worse; and if what is borrowed be lost, although it be not by any negligence of the borrower, as if he be robbed of it; see Bac. Ab. Bailment (B.) (7th ed.); or where the thing is impaired or destroyed by his neglect, admitting that he put it to no more service than that for which borrowed, he must make it good: so where one borrows a horse, and puts him in an old rotten house ready to fall, which falls on and kills him, the borrower must answer for the horse. But if such goods borrowed perish by the act of God (or rather, as Sir Wm. Jones says it ought to be termed, by inevitable accident) in the right use of them; as where the borrower puts the horse, &c. in a strong house, and it falls and kills him, or it dies by disease, or by default of the owner, the borrower shall not be charged. 1 Inst. 89: 29 Ass. 28: 2 H. 7. 11.

If one delivers a ring to another to keep, and he breaks and converts the same to his own use; or if he deliver my sheep to another to be kept, and he suffers them to be drowned by his negligence; or if the bailee of a horse, or goods, &c. kill or spoil them, in these cases action will lie. 5 Rep. 13: 15 Ed. 4. 20, b: 12 Ed. 4. 13.

If a man deliver goods to another, the bailee shall have a general action of trespass against a stranger, because he is answerable over to the bailor; for a man ought not to be charged with an injury to another, without being able to retire to the original cause of that injury, and in amends there to do himself right. 13 Co. 69: 14 H. 4. 28: 25 H. 7. 14. BAN; or bans, from the Brit. ban. i. e. clamor.] A proclamation or public notice; any public summons, or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is a word ordinary among the feudists; and for its various significations, see Spelman, in v. Bannum. The word bans, in its common acceptation, is used for the publishing matrimonial contracts, which is done in the church before marriage; to the end that if any man can speak against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred, pre-contract, or for other just cause, they may take their exceptions in time, before the marriage is consummated; and in the canon law, Banne sunt proclamationes sponsi et sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri solitæ. But there may be a faculty or licence for the marriage, and then this ceremony is omitted. See tit. Mar-

BANE, from the Sax. bana, a murderer.] Signifies destruction or overthrow: as, I will be the bane of such a man, is a common saying; so when a person receives a mortal injury by any thing, we say it was his bane. and he who is the cause of another man's death, is said to be le bane, i. e. malefactor.

BANERET, banerettus, miles vexillarius.} Sir Thomas Smith, in his Repub. Angl. cap. 18. says, is a knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it, as it were, a banner, and accounted so honourable that they are allowed to display their arms in the king's army, as barons do, and may bear arms with supporters. See Camden and Spelman, from whom it appears banerets are the degree between barons and knights. Spel. in v. Banerettus. It is said that they were anciently called by summons to parliament: and that they are next to barons in dignity appears by the stats. 5 R. 2. st. 2. cap. 4. and 14. R. 2. c. 11. William de la Pole was created baneret by King Edward the Third by letters patent, was 5, 6 W. & M. c. 20; their charter has Anno Regni sui 13. And those banerets who are created sub vexiliis regiis, in exercitu regali, in aperto bello, et ipso rege personali-ter præsente, explicatis, take place of all baronets; as we may learn by the letters patent for creation of baronets. 4 Inst. 6. Some maintain that knights banerets ought not to be made in a civil war; but Henry VII. made divers banerets upon the Cornish commotion in the year 1495. See Selden's Titles of Honours, f. 799.

BANISHMENT, Fr. banissement; Exilium abjuratio.] Is a forsaking or quitting the realm; and a kind of civil death inflicted on an offender: there are two kinds of it, one voluntary and upon oath, called abjuration, and the other upon compulsion for some offence. Staundf. Pl. Cr. f. 117. See tits. Abjuration; Transportation.

Such a power to banish an offender was given by the stat. 60 G. 3. c. 8. § 4. upon conviction of printing or publishing a blasphemous or seditious libel. But this was repealed by stat. 1 W. 4. c. 73.

BANK. Lat. bancus, Fr. banque. In our common law is usually taken for a seat or bench of judgment: as Bank le Roy, the King's Bench, Bank le Common Pleas, the Bench of Common Pleas, or the Common Bench; called also in Latin, Bancus Regis, and Bancus Communium Placitorum. Cromp. Just. 67. 91. Jus Bucci, or the privilege of the bench, was anciently allowed only to the king's judges, qui summum administrant justitiam; for interior courts were not allowed that privilege.

There are in each of the terms, stated days, called days in bank, dies in banco, that is, days of appearance in the court of Common Pleas. They are generally at the distance of about a week from each other, and regulated by some festival of the church. On some one of these days in bank all original writs must be made returnable: and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term. See tit. Day.

A Bank, in common acceptation, signifies a place where a great sum of money is deposited, returned by exchange, or otherwise disposed of to profit.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND is managed by a governor and directors, established by parliament, with funds for maintaining thereof, appropriated to such persons as were subscribers; and the capital stock, which is enlarged by divers statutes, is exempted from taxes, accounted a personal estate assignable over, not subject to forfeiture; and the Company make dividends of the profits, half-yearly, &c. The funds are redeemable by the parliament, on paying the money borrowed; and the Company of the Bank is to continue a corporation, and enjoy annuities till redeemed, &c.

The first act for incorporating this Bank been continued by a series of subsequent acts, the last being 39, 40 G. 3. c. 28. by which it was extended or renewed until the expiration of twelve months' notice, to be given after the 1st August, 1833, and until payment, by the public, to the Bank of the demands therein mentioned.

During the continuance of the Bank, no body politick, &c. other than the Company shall borrow any sums on bills payable at demand; and forging the common seal of the Bank, and forging and altering Bank-notes, or tendering such forged notes in payment, demanding to have them exchanged for money, &c., and forging the names of cashiers of the Bank, are all capital felonies.

By stat. 59 G. 3. c. 49. the restrictions on payments in cash under the foregoing acts, were farther continued to the 1st of May, 1823: but with provisions that the Bank should pay in standard gold ingots of 60 oz. each, if demanded, at the following rates, viz. From 1st of Feb. 1820, to 1st of Oct. 1820, at 4l. 1s. per oz. From thence till 1st May, 1821, at 3l. 19s. 6d.; and from thence till 1st May, 1823, at 3l. 17s. 101-2d. per oz. being the Mint price. The Bank were allowed to pay in cash at any time after 1st May, 1822. the same act the Bank was required, until the end of the period of restriction, to deliver to the Privy Council weekly accounts of the average amount of Bank-notes in circulation.

This plan of payment in ingots was adopted on very detailed and interesting reports from both Houses of Parliament; and it was supposed the plan would gradually regulate the prices of gold: which, however, fell from 4l. 1s. to 3l. 17s. 10 1-2d. the Mint price, before the 1st Feb. 1820.

Similar regulations were made as to payments by the Bank of Ireland, by 59 G. 3. c.

By stat. 59 G. 3. c. 76. to establish farther regulations respecting advances by the Bank of England for the public service, it is enacted, that the Bank shall not make any advances to government, without the express and distinct authority of Parliament. That all applications for such advances shall be made in writing, by the First Lord of the Treasury or Chancellor of the Exchequer, and that copies of all such applications, and the answers of the Bank thereto, shall be yearly laid before Parliament. Advances to supply the deficiences of the Consolidated Fund, according to stats. 57 G. 3. c. 48. and 59 G. 3. c. 19. are excepted; as also the actual purchase of Exchequer Bills, &c. by the Bank, but of which accounts are also to be laid before parlia-transfers of stock in any other name than that warrants, or making false entries in the bank books, are made guilty of felony without clergy.—Persons making out false dividend warrants transportable for seven years. 35 G. 3. c. 66.

Any officers or servants of the Company, embezzling any Bank notes, &c. wherewith they are entrusted, being duly convicted, shall suffer death as felons.

By act 1 W. 4. c. 66. (the general forgery act) any person who shall forge or alter, or shall offer either to dispose of or put off. knowing the same to be forged or altered, any note or bill of exchange of the Bank of England, commonly called a bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bank note, bank note of exchange, or bank post bill, with intent to defraud any person whatsoever, shall be guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as a felon. This act repeals all former acts relating to such forgeries.

36 G. 3. c. 90. § 1. When trustees, in whose name stock stands in the bank, shall be out of the kingdom, &c. or become bankrupts, the courts may order such stock to be transferred, or the dividends paid, &c. And see 52 G. 3. c. 32. 158. and tit. Trustees.

By 37 G. 3. c. 28. notes issued by the bank for sums under 5l. were declared valid.

By 37 G. 3. c. 28. afterwards continued and amended by several acts, the Bank of England was restrained from making payments in cash: and if the amount of any debt were tendered in bank notes, or bank notes and cash, the party tendering could not be arrested.- Like provisions were made as to the Bank of Ireland by several acts.]

The act renewing its charter is noticed under England, Bank of.

BANK OF SCOTLAND. This bank was erected by an act of the Scots parliament, in 1695, with a capital of 1,200,000l. Scots (100,000l. sterling.)-By British acts, 14 G. 3. c. 32: 24 G. 3. c. 12: 32 G. 3. c. 25: 34 G. 3. c. 19: and 44 G. 3. c. 23. (local and personal) this capital has been increased to the amount, in the whole, of 1,500,000l. sterling.

BANK OF IRELAND. This was established by an act of the Irish parliament, 21 and 22 G. 3. c. 16. amended and the charter continued by 31 G. 3. c. 22: 37 G. 3. c. 50: and 48 G. 3. c. 103: 3 G. 4. c. 26.—Payments in cash by this Bank were restrained during the war, in the same manner as by the Bank of England. By 42 G. 3. c. 87. this bank was enabled to purchase the parliament house in Dublin, rendered useless by the Union. By stat. 6 G. 4. c. 5. courts of equity in Ireland are empowered to direct or restrain transfers of stock in the Bank of Ireland, in suits between parties, without making the Bank a party. See tit. Ireland.

BANK-CREDITS. Credits peculiar to Scotch banking, by which, on proper security given to the bank, a person receives liberty to draw to a certain extent agreed on, and for which, with the interest on the sum drawn, previous security is given. See the act 33 of the owner, or forging transfers or dividend | G. 3. c. 74. § 12. for securing such credits by granting securities on lands of the debtor.

BANKERS. The monied goldsmiths first got the name of bankers in the reign of King Charles the Second; but bankers now are those private persons in whose hands money is deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it. See the preceding title and title Forgery.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 49. &c. (and in Ireland by 9 G. 4. c. 55. § 42. &c.) any banker (merchant, broker, attorney, or agent), who being entrusted with money, or security for money, with written directions for the application thereof, shall convert the same to his own use; or who, being entrusted with any security, or power of attorney, for safe custody, without authority to sell, &c., shall sell, negociate, or apply such security to his own use (in violation of good faith and contrary to the purpose specified), shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by transportation for seven or fourteen years, or fine and imprisonment. Not to affect trustees, or mortgagees, nor bankers, &c. receiving money due on securities, or disposing of securities in which they have a lien. Several acts are in force for regulating copartnerships of bankers in Ircland, the most material being 6 G. 4. c. 42. as amended by 1 W. 4. c. 32.

BANKRUPT. A trader who secretes himself, or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Comm. 285. 471. The word itself is derived from bancus or banque, the table or counter of a tradesman; (Dufresne, i. 969.) and ruptus, broken, denoting thereby one whose shop or place of trade is broken or gone.-It is observable that the title of the first English statute concerning this offence, stat. 34 H. 8. c. 4. "against such persons as do make bankrupt," is a literal translation of the French idiom qui font banque route. 2 Comm. 472. n.

The bankrupt law has, from the time of Henry VIII., been a system of positive statute regulations, the earliest act being 34, 35 H. 8. c. 4, and the latest general act the 6 G. 4. c. 16. in which last the provisions of all former acts are now consolidated. This act extends only to English traders, and not to Scotland or Ireland, except in a few specified instances so far as relates to the property of English traders becoming bankrupt. effect of this act, and of the legal decisions upon it and the former acts, may be learned by consulting Mr. Deacon's valuable Treatise on the Bankrupt Law, and Mr. Eden's (now Lord Henly) Practical Treatise on the Bank-rupt Law. Mr. Eden was entrusted by Lord Chancellor Eldon with the preparation of the act itself, and the distinguishing features of the law are stated by himself in the introduction to the treatise, from which the following extracts have been made.

In the course of the two sessions of par-public was called to the state of the bankrupt law, by the proceedings of a committee of the House of Commons.

The recommendation of the committee of the House of Commons to consolidate the whole body of the bankrupt statutes had been most unaccountably neglected, although this branch of statute law peculiarly suggested itself for consolidation. It had been scattered through the statute book in various different acts (the discordant produce of nearly two centuries and a half), many of them containing mere repetitions of each other, or repetitions with small variations, some repealing parts of others, and almost all presenting striking specimens of obscurity, prolixity, and redundance. By the sanction and patronage of the learned and venerable Lord Eldon, the arrangement and consolidation of this most difficult and intricate branch of the law was at last effected. In the session of 1823 a consolidation bill was first introduced into parliament; and in the session of 1824 it was considerably amended and passed. Stat. 5. G. 4. c. 98. But it had been provided that it was not to come into operation till the 1st of May, 1825; and as many most important and valuable amendments had been made in the interim, it was thought expedient in the next session to replace it by a new act (6 G. 4. c. 16.), to take effect from 1st day of September, 1825. This act now contains the existing bankrupt law.

The first considerable alteration consists in collecting and extending the descriptions of traders. The construction put upon the former acts excluded many persons who upon every sound principle ought to have been included within them. In this new act, besides a specific enumeration of the several classes of persons, the general words of description have been so enlarged as to comprehend every one who ought, upon sound principles, to be liable to the inconveniences, or entitled to the immunities of the bankrupt law.

The act has introduced several new acts of bankruptcy, which, owing to the narrow notion of bankruptey being a crime, and the consequence deduced from it, that it could not be committed abroad, were not formerly ranked as such. Such are the remaining abroad with the intent to defeat creditors, where the original departure from the realm was not with such intent; executing a fraudulent deed abroad; fraudulent executions; fraudulent surrenders of copyhold; fraudulent gifts, deliveries, or transfers of goods and chattels. The requisite period for lying in prison, in order to constitute an act of bankruptcy, is reduced to twenty-one days; and several alterations of minor importance have been introduced into the provisions as to acts of bankruptcy.

liament in 1817 and 1818, the attention of the I finds himself in insolvent circumstances ought to be able publicly to declare it, and to take steps to secure the distribution of his estate among his creditors, is adopted in this act; a measure intended to check the litigation caused by concerted commissions, and to give a fair opportunity for that species of equitable arrangement which no provisions, however severe, could entirely prevent. On the other hand, the doctrine that the conveyance of all a trader's property to trustees in trust for his creditors, is an act of bankruptcy, has been thus far limited:-that if certain formalities to insure publicity are complied with, a commission cannot be sued out upon it after six months. By this means, this cheap and beneficial mode of distributing an insolvent estate is put within the reach of creditors, while the evil of secrecy (in general so just an objection to trust deeds) is effectually provided against.

> Great expence and inconvenience having arisen from the petitioning creditor's debt being, after a lapse of time, discovered to be insufficient, two provisions are introduced to counteract this evil. 1st. A commission is declared valid notwithstanding an act of bankruptcy previous to the petitioning creditor's debt; and 2ndly. In case it be afterwards found insufficient to support the commission, the lord chancellor is empowered, on the petition of creditors (whose debts are of sufficient amount to support a commission) to direct it to be proceeded in. A creditor is also allowed to petition, although his debt has not become actually payable.

The Messenger of bankrupts is effectually indemnified against the expence of actions brought to try the validity of the commission; and the commissioners receive the same protection which justices of the peace are allowed in actions brought against them.

The Proof of various debts which were not before proveable is by this act permitted; as, for instance, contingent debts, costs, interest on promissory notes, by sureties for annuities, and peculiar indulgences are given to clerks, servants, and apprentices. As the bankrupt is stripped of all his property, it is but justice that every person who is substantially a creditor should be permitted to obtain a share of it; and that, on the other hand, the bankrupt should receive an effectual and co-extensive discharge. The commissioners have also the power of expunging proofs, thereby saving the great expence heretofore incurred by the necessity of a petition in every case.

The relation to the act of bankruptcy (that is, the principle that the bankrupt's estate vests in the assignees, retrospectively from the act of bankruptey,) has been greatly curtailed in its extent and operation. All payments whatever, either by or to the bankrupt, without notice of an act of bankruptcy, are protected down to the date of the commission; The important principle, that a trader who and upon the principle that there should be a period when purchasers are not to be molest- All debts are allowed to carry interest in the ed, and litigation should cease, it is provided event of a surplus according to certain priorthat purchasers for valuable consideration, even with notice of an act of bankruptcy, shall not be impeached unless a commission issue within twelve months after such act of bankruptcy. The subject matter of the notice which is to affect the party dealing with the bankrupt, and which varied in almost every former act, is now made uniform; being notice only of an act of bankruptcy, not merely of insolvency or of stopping payments; and the presumption that the issuing of a commission (a fact known only to a few clerks) is notice of an act of bankruptcy to all the world, is abolished; the only constructive notice now being the circumstance of a commission having appeared so long a time in the Gazette, that the party to be affected by it might have seen it.

In order still more to check the immense expence attending litigation, it is provided that, in all cases where the assignees sue for a debt, for which the bankrupt himself might have sued had he been solvent, the deposition shall be conclusive evidence of the requisites to support a commission; and in other cases, that unless the party chooses to contest the commission at the hazard of paying costs if he fail, no proof shall be required at the trial of the debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy. In the former case provisions of indemnity are given to debtors from whom the assignees have recovered, or who bona fide pay to the assignees debts due to the bankrupt's estate, in the event of the commission being afterwards superseded. A great number of other alterations, minute in appearance, but important in effect, have been introduced in order to embrace or exclude cases which the old law had improperly omitted or included. A few of the more striking are the following:-Auxiliary commissions are allowed to be issued for the examination of witnesses, as well as for the proof of debts; a more effective mode of taxation of bills under the commission is provided; the power of summoning and examining the various persons over whom jurisdiction is given to the commissioners, is more clearly and effectually defined. Important alterations are made in the following points: -The expences of witnesses; the warrant of commitment, proceedings upon habeas corpus, or actions for false imprisonment; proof under joint and separate commissions; the choice, the duties, and the liabilities of assignees; liens for rent, or under executions; in the mode of taking the account in case of set-off; in the audit and proceedings upon dividends; in the enlargement and adjournment of the bankrupt's examination; as to his maintenance and allowance; as to the legal objections to the certificate, and as to reities; and under a second commission, future effects are vested in the assignees, unless 15s. in the pound be paid; and, finally, an important provision has been adopted from the Scotch Sequestration Act, termed the composition contract, by which, if a composition, or security for a composition, be offered, which is approved by two meetings of creditors, and by a majority of nine-tenths in value of the creditors at each of such meetings, the lord chancellor is directed to supersede the commission.

The act concludes with a provision, that it shall be construed beneficially for creditors, and that nothing therein contained shall alter the former practice in bankruptcy, except where any such alteration is expressly declared; and that it shall extend to aliens, denizens, and women, as well to make them subject thereto, as to entitle them to all the benefits given thereby; and that all powers by the act given to, and all duties directed to be performed by, the lord chancellor, shall and may be exercised and performed by a lord keeper, or by lords commissioners of the great seal. And all powers, &c. of commissioners or assignees may be executed by the major part of them, or by one assignee where only one shall have been chosen. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 136.

The new Bankrupt Court .- Such were the principal alterations in the bankrupt law effected by the consolidation act, 6 G. 4. c. 16. A most material innovation on the established mode of administering that law has been since effected by the new act, 1 and 2 W. 4. By this act, which it is convenient to state before we briefly digest the bankrupt law under its principal heads, the seventy commissioners of bankrupt are in effect abolished, and their functions and authority transferred to six barristers, commissioners of the Court of Bankruptey (with salaries of 1,500l. per ann.) The authority and jurisdiction of the lord chancellor and the vice chancellor sitting in bankruptcy are in effect done away, and vested in a new court composed of one chief judge and three puisne judges, the first having a salary of 3,000*l*. per ann., and the three last of 2,000*l*. This court is called "the Court of Bankruptcy," and is, together with every judge and commissioner thereof, constituted a court of record, with all the rights and incidents of such a court. The judges, or any three of them, form a court of review, and have superintendance and control in all matters of bankruptcy, and jurisdiction to hear and determine all such matters as are now usually brought by petition or otherwise, before the lord chancellor, and also to hear and determine all such other matters, as by the rules and regulations of the court shall be assigned to the said court of review. Such quiring that a new promise to pay a debt matters are to be brought on by petition, mobarred by the certificate shall be in writing. tion, or special case with an appeal to the lord on the refusal or admission of evidence. The court may direct issues of fact to be tried by a jury before one of the judges thereof, or before a judge of assise. Any one or more of the commissioners may perform all the duties now performed by commissioners of bankrupt, as if authorised by a separate commission under the great seal, except that no single commissioner can commit any bankrupt or other person otherwise than to the custody of the officer of the court, to be brought before the Court of Review, or a subdivision court of three commissioners within three days after such commitment. Attornies and solicitors of the superior courts at Westminster may be admitted to practise in the Court of Bankruptcy, and may appear and plead in any proceedings without counsel (except proceedings before the Court of Review, and on the trial of issues by jury;) and all acts in force, as to attornies and solicitors, shall extend to attornies practising in the new court. The judges of the Court of Review, with the consent of the chancellor, are to make rules for regulating the practice of the court. 12th section in effect abolishes commissions of bankrupt, and in all cases where the lord chancellor had power to issue a commission of bankrupt, it enables the chancellor, the master of the rolls, the vice chancellor, and each of the masters of the Court of Chancery, acting under the appointment of the lord chancellor, to issue his fiat in lieu of a commission, authorizing the creditor to prosecute his complaint in the Court of Bankruptcy or elsewhere, before such persons as the lord chancellor, &c. shall appoint, who shall have the same authority as if appointed by virtue of a commission. The fiats are to be filed and recorded in the court. The chancellor may annul such fiat, which shall have the same effect as the supersedeas of a commission of bankruptcy. All the powers given to the six commissioners may be exercised by the judges of the Court of Review. An important change is made as to the bankrupt's assignees. Thirty persons, being merchants, brokers, or accountants, are to be chosen by the chancellor to act as official assignces in all bankrupteics prosecuted in the Court of Bankruptcy, one of which official assignces shall. in all cases, be an assignce of each bankrupt's estate together with the assignees chosen by the creditors; and till the other assignees are chosen, the official assignce may act as sole assignee. The provisional and other assignments of the bankrupt's estate are, by the act, abolished, and the real and personal estate of the bankrupt is to vest in the assignees without any assignment or conveyance-a provision which will save some expence. court is to have a seal for the sealing of documents, &c. There is an appeal from the com- quoted are distinguished by the abbreviation missioners to the Court of Review, and from am. when they contain extensive and importthe Court of Review to the chancellor, in ant amendments of the former law, and by

Debts may, by this act, be proved by affidavit subject to such orders, touching the personal attendance of the creditor, as the Court of Review, with the consent of the lord chancellor, may direct. By § 37. the lord chancellor may direct an appeal from himself to the House of Lords, and the Court of Review may, on application by the parties, direct an appeal at once to the House of Lords instead of to the lord chancellor. The judges and commissioners of the court may take evidence vica voce or on affidavits, as they may direct, or as the lord chancellor may prescribe. By § 42. no commission shall be superseded or fiat annulled by reason of its being concerted between the petitioning creditor, his solicitor or agent, and the bankrupt. This is an important alteration, which will prevent much litigation. On every fiat 10l. is to be paid to the lord chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, to be paid into the Bank of England, "to the Secretary of bankrupts' account," and the official assignee of cach estate is to pay 20l. to the like account; out of this fund the salaries of the judges, commissioners, and officers of the court, are to be defrayed. The official assignee of every estate is also to pay 10l. to the credit of the accountant-general, to an account to be called "the secretary of bankrupts' compensation account," and also 11. for certain sittings of the court or commissioners mentioned in § 55. and a certain per centage on the sums divided in dividends. This fund is to be applied for compensating the patentees "for the execution of the laws and statutes concerning bankrupts," Mr. Thurlow and Mr. Scott, and also such of the old commissioners of bankrupt as the Lords of the Treasury shall think entitled to compensation, and also certain officers of the Court of Chancery. No judge, commissioner, registrar, &c. of the court, shall be eligible to sit in parliament.

The provisions of the stats. 6 G. 4. c. 16. & 1 W. 4. c. 56. (with notes of such decided cases as tend to explain their principle) may be arranged under the following heads:-

The sections of the stat. 6 G. 4. c. 16. as the word new, where they have been introduced for the first time by that act. The sections not so distinguished are copied from former acts (which are referred to) without alteration, or with such only as it did not appear necessary to notice. These distinctions are marked out in the title Bankrupt, prepared by Mr. Dodd, in the 7th edition of Bacon's Abridgment, and also in the Appendix to Eden's Bankrupt Law.

It would far exceed the limits of this Dictionary to accompany this outline of the new consolidated bankrupt law, with references to many of the cases determined before the act 6 G. 4. c. 16. They will be found arranged and digested in Bacon's Abridgment, tit. Bankrupt, edited by Mr. Dodd, and in Mr. Eden's Practical Treatise, and in Mr. Deacon's work on Bankruptcy already referred to.

I. Who may be made Bankrupt as a Trader. -All bankers, brokers, persons using the trade or profession of a scrivener, receiving other men's monies or estates into their trust, or custody, persons insuring [the classes in italics are new in this act] ships or their freight, or other matters against perils of the sea, warehousemen, wharfingers, packers, builders, carpenters, shipwrights, victuallers, keepers of inns, taverns, hotels, or coffee-houses, dyers, printers, bleachers, fullers, calenderers, cattle or sheep salesmen, and all persons using trade of merchandize by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, commission, consignment, or otherwise, by gross or by retail, and all persons, who, either by themselves, or as agents, or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and let. ting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, shall be deemed traders liable to become bankrupt. Provided that no farm. er, grazier, common labourer, or workman for hire, receiver-general of the taxes, or member of or subscriber, to any incorporated commercial, or trading companies established by charter or act of parliament, shall be deemed as such a trader, liable, by virtue of this act, to become bankrupt. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 2. Am.

Buying and selling government stock, or other public stocks or securities, does not render a man liable to be made a bankrupt, because they are held not "goods or commodities." Colt v. Netterville, 2 P. Wms. 308. Nor will the buying and selling land, or any interest therein, make a man liable to be a bankrupt, for the same reason. See Port v.

Turton, 2 Wils. 169.

As to the "workmanship of goods and commodities," it may be remarked, that purchasing the raw material, and manufacturing it into a vendible article for the purpose of sale, and with a view to profit, was always holden to be a buying and selling within the former statutes, although part of the gain was to be derived from bodily labour; Cooke, 48, 49. 56; by which it would appear, that all a view to profit, are within the foregoing clause, whether they purchase the raw material or have it from their own land, &c. (as a brick-maker, alum-maker, eider-maker, who were not within the former statutes) without purchase. If a man buy milk merely to sell it again, with a view to profit, he is liable to be a bankrupt; but if he sells the milk only which he procures from his own cows, even though he occasionally sell the cows when they are unfit for that purpose, he is not. Carter v. Dean, 1 Swansi, 64. So if a man buy timber (even standing timber) to sell again with the view of profit, he is subject to the bankrupt laws. Holroyd v. Gwynne, 2 Taunt. 178: and see 9 Barn. & C. 577. But if he sell only that which he cuts down upon his own land he is not. In such case it is a question for jury whether there is an intention to deal generally. 3 Stark. Ca.

As to the exception that no farmer, grazier, common labourer, or workman for hire, receiver-general of the taxes, or member of any company, shall be liable to this statute, it is to be observed, that by one of the repealed statutes, 5 G. 2. c. 20. § 40. no farmer, grazier, drover of cattle, or receiver-general of taxes, was to be deemed a bankrupt. But still if a farmer exercised a trade distinct and separate from his business as a farmer; if, for instance, he purchased horses, not for the purposes of his farm, but as a horse-dealer, merely to sell again with a view to profit, (Bartholomew v. Sherwood, 1 T. R. 573: Wright v. Bird, 1 Price, 20: Exparte Gibbs, 2 Rose, 38.) or purchased large quantities of potatoes, not to be used upon his farm, but merely to sell again at a profit; (Mayo v. Archer, 1 Str. 513.) in these and similar cases he would be liable to be made bankrupt, notwithstanding this statute. But if he purchased them as a farmer, to be used about his farm, even although he sell them again, (Cooke, 67.) or having too much he sell the surplus, (Cooke, 69. 73.) or if he occasionally buy and sell hay and corn, &c. with a view to make a profit, but without making them the means of livelihood, he would be within this exception. The question in all such cases is, whether the buying and selling is with a view of making a profit as a trader, or whether it is merely ancillary to the profitable occupation of the farm. See Bac. A.b tit. Bankrupt (A.) (ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

It is observable that drovers, although excepted by former statutes, are not mentioned in this, unless they are meant to be included in the words "cattle or sheep salesmen;" but they seem to be made subject to be made bankrupts under the clause as to buying and selling. As to the denomination of a "drover," see Mills v. Hughes, Willes, 588: Bolton v. Sowerby, 11 East, 274.

As to the members or subscribers of certain specified incorporated companies, various statutes have provided that they should not be | London Gazette within eight days after such liable to the bankrupt laws. Vide stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. (as to the origin of which see Bac. Ab. tit. Bankrupt, vol. i. p. 526. 7th ed.); as to members of East India or Guinea Companies, stat. 9 and 10 W. 3: 8 and 9 W. 3: and 8 G. 1. as to stockholders in the Bank of England.

II. By what Acts of his own a Trader may become a Bankrupt.—The following are specifically stated as the acts by which any person declared by the act to be a trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy: viz. if such trader, 1. shall depart this realm; 2. or being out of this realm, shall remain abroad; 3. or shall depart from his dwelling-house; 4. or otherwise absent himself; 5. or begin to keep his house; 6. or suffer himself to be arrested for any debt not due; 7. or yield himself to prison; 8. or suffer himself to be outlawed; 9. or suffer himself to be arrested, or his goods, monies, or chattels to be attached, sequestered, or taken in execution; 10. or make or cause to be made, either within this realm or elsewhere, any fraudulent grant or conveyance of any of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels; 11. or make or cause to be made any fraudulent surrender of any of his copyhold lands, or tenements; 12. or make or cause to be made any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer of any of his goods or chattels. These acts must be all done with an intent to delay or defeat creditors. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 3. Am. 13. If any such trader, having been arrested or committed to prison for debt, or on any attachment for non-payment of money, or upon any detention for debt, shall be in prison for twenty-one days; or having been arrested or committed to prison for any other cause, shall lie in prison for twenty-one days after any detainer for debt lodged against him and not discharged; 14. or if any such trader, having been arrested, committed, or detained for debt, shall escape out of prison or custody, every such trader shall be deemed to have thereby committed an act of bankruptcy, from the time of such arrest, commitment, or detention. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 5. Am. 15. If any such trader shall file, in the office of the lord chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, a declaration in writing, signed by such trader, and attested by an attorney or solicitor, that he is insolvent, and unable to meet his engagement, the said secretary of bankrupts or his deputy shall sign a memorandum that such declaration hath been filed, which memorandum shall be authority for the printer of the London Gazette to insert an advertisement of such declaration therein; and every such declaration shall, after such advertisement, be an act of bankruptcy, committed by such trader at the time when such declaration was filed: but no commission shall issue thereupon, unless it be sued out within two calender months next after the insertion of such advertisement, nor unless such declaration was filed; and no docket shall be struck upon such act of bankruptcy before the expiration of four days next after insertion of such advertisement, in case such commission is to be executed in London; or before the expiration of eight days next after such insertion, in case such commission is to be executed in the country; and the Gazette containing such advertisement shall be evidence to be received of such declaration having been filed. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 6. New.

No commission under which the adjudication shall be grounded, on the filing of such declaration as an act of bankruptcy, shall be deemed invalid by reason of such declaration having been concerted or agreed upon between the bankrupt and any creditor or other person. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 7. New; and see ante, the general provision doing away with the objection of concert, in the Bankrupt Court act. 16. If any such trader, liable by virtue of this act to become bankrupt, shall, after a docket struck against him, pay to the person or persons who struck the same, or any of them, money, or give or deliver to any such person any satisfaction or security for his debt, or any part thereof, whereby such person may receive more in the pound in respect of his debt than the other creditors, such payment, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security, shall be an act of bankruptcy; and if any commission shall have issued upon the docket so struck, the lord chancellor may either declare such commission to be valid, and direct the same to be proceeded in, or may or-der it to be superseded and a new commission may issue, and such commission may be supported either by proof of such last mentioned or of any other act of bankruptcy; and every person so receiving such money, gift, delivery, satisfaction, or security, shall forfeit his whole debt, and also repay or deliver up such money, gift, satisfaction, or security, or the full value thereof, to such person as the commissioners acting under such original commission, or any new commission, shall appoint for the benefit of the creditors of such bankrupt. 16. § 8. Am.

A material difference between this and a similar clause in a former act (5 G. 2. c. 30. § 24.) is, that the former only had in view private bargains; but under this act, it appears to be immaterial whether the money, satisfaction, or security, be given to the petitioning creditor or not.

Being out of the realm, remaining abroad. This act of bankruptcy is first introduced in 6 G. 4. c. 16.

Suffering outlawry.—The outlawry must be in England or Wales, and an outlawry in a county palatine will be sufficient. Com. Dig. Bankrupt: Radworth v. Bludworth, 1 Leo. 13.

Procuring himself to be arrested, or his goods, monies, or chattels, to be taken in execution .- A similar clause was in 1 Jac. 1. c. advertisement shall have been inserted in the 15. § 2; but the words "taken in execution" were omitted, and the above words were introduced into 6 G. 4. c. 16. as it was holden that a fraudulent judgment and execution thereon, were not within the meaning of that act. Harman v. Spottiswoode, Cooke, 118: Clabankrupt before the time so advertised, or vey v. Haley, Cowp. 427.

Where any trader shall execute any conveyance or assignment by deed to a trustee or trustees of all his estate and effects for the benefit of all the creditors of such trader, the execution of such deed shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy, unless a commission issue against such trader within six calendar months from the execution thereof by such trader: provided that such deed shall be executed by every such trustee within fifteen days after the execution thereof by the said trader, and that the execution by every such trader and by every such trustee be attested by an attorney or solicitor; and that notice be given within two months after the execution thereof by such trader, in case such trader reside in London or within forty miles thereof, in the London Gazette, and also in two London daily newspapers; and in case such trader does not reside within forty miles of London, then in the London Gazette, and also in one London daily newspaper, and one provincial newspaper published near to such trader's residence; and such notice shall contain the date and execution of such deed, and the name and place of abode respectively of every such trustee and of such attorney or solicitor. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 4. New.

Making any fraudulent surrender of copyholds.—This was formerly holden not to be an act of bankruptcy, because as it was said, it could not be done with intent to delay creditors, inasmuch as creditors could not have execution of copyhold lands.

Making any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer of his goods or chattels.—This includes mere manual delivery or transfer, as well as conveyances by deed or otherwise, the former of which was not provided for by the repealed statutes. In other respects, this clause requires the same construction as the tenth act of bankruptcy.

Petition under the Insolvent Act.—By the insolvent act, 7 G. 4. c. 57. § 13. the filing of a petitition of every person in actual custody who shall be subject to the laws concerning bankrupts, and who shall apply by petition to the court (constituted by that act) to be discharged from custody, shall be accounted and adjudged an act of bankruptey, from the time of filing such petition; and any commission issuing against such person, and under which he shall be declared bankrupt before the time appointed by the said court, and advertised in the London Gazette, for hearing the matters of such petition, or at any time within two calendar months from the time of filing such petition, shall have effect to avoid any conveyance or assignment of the estate been made in pursuance of the provisions of this insolvent act; provided that the filing of such petition shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy, unless such person be so declared bankrupt before the time so advertised, or within such two calendar months; but every such conveyance and assignment shall be valid, notwithstanding any commission of bankrupt under which such person shall be declared bankrupt after the time so advertised, and after the expiration of such two calendar months as aforesaid.

As to members of Parliament being bankrupts.—If any trader having privilege of parliament shall commit any of the acts of bankruptcy specified, a commission of bankruptcy may issue against him, and the commissioners, and all other persons acting under such commission, may proceed thereon in like manner as against other bankrupts, but such person shall not be subject to be arrested or imprisoned during the time of such privilege, except in cases of felony. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 9.

(As 4 G. 3. c. 33. § 4.)

If any creditor of any such trader, having privilege of parliament to such amount as is requisite to support a commission, shall file an affidavit in any court of record at Westminster, that such debt is justly due to him, and that such debtor is such trader as aforesaid, and shall sue out of the same court a summons or any original bill and summons (now a writ of summons under the act for uniformity of process, 2 W. 4. c. 39.) against such trader, and serve him with a copy of such summons, if such trader shall not within one calendar month after personal service of such summons, pay, secure, or compound for such debt or debts, to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as any of the judges of the court out of which such summons issue shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in such action, together with such costs as shall be given in the same; and within one calendar month next after personal service of such summons, cause an appearance to be entered to such action in the proper court in which the same shall have been brought; every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, from the time of the service of such summons; and any creditor of such trader, to such amount as aforesaid, may sue out a commission against him, and proceed thereon in like manner as against other bankrupts. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 10. (As 4 G. 3. c. 33. § 1: 45 G. 3. c. 124. § 1. except that the period of payment is reduced from two calendar months to one.)

vertised in the London Gazette, for hearing the matters of such petition, or at any time mounced in any cause depending in any court of equity, or any order made in any matter of bankruptcy (or lunacy) against any trader any conveyance or assignment of the estate and effects of such person which shall have trader shall disobey the same, having been depart withal, and with all his money, fees, duly served upon him, the persons entitled to receive such such sum under such decree or order, or interested in enforcing the payment thereof pursuant to such decree or order, may apply to the court, by which the same shall have been pronounced, to fix a peremptory day for the payment of such money, which shall accordingly be fixed by an order for that purpose; and if such trader, being personally served with such last-mentioned order eight days before the day therein appointed for payment of such money, shall neglect to pay the same, he shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, from the time of the service thereof, and any such creditor or creditors may sue out a commission against him, and proceed thereon in like manner as against other bankrupts. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 11. (As 45 G. 3. c. 124. § 7.) stat. 52 G. 3. c. 114. (which is not repealed by 6 G. 4. c. 16.) in case a commission of bankrupt against a member of parliament be not superseded, or all debts satisfied within twelve months, the seat of the member shall become actually void: and after the bankruptcy, he is incapable of sitting and voting till such supersedeas or satisfaction. See tit. Parliament.

Where a trader committed an act of bankruptcy in March 1825, on which a commission might have issued on the statutes then in force, and on the 1st May those statutes were repealed; and on the 2d May the repealing act was repealed, and the former acts thereby revived, and in July a commission issued: it was held to be supported by the act of bankruptcy in March. 10 Barn. & C. 39: and see 9 Barn. & C. 750.

III. Proceedings on and Effect of a Fiat (formerly a Commission) of Bankruptcy.—As to issuing the Fiat, Proceedings thereon, and the Power of the Commissioners.

It is necessary to state here the provisions of the 6 G. 4. c. 16. as to the petitioning creditor's debt, and the bond, since they remain in force. As to the issuing of a fiat under the new act, see post.

The lord chancellor shall have power upon petition made to him in writing, against any trader having committed an act of bankruptcy, by any creditor of such trader, by commission under the great seal, to appoint such persons as to him shall seem fit, who shall, by virtue of this act, and of such commission, have full power and authority to take such order and direction with the body of such bankrupt, as thereinafter mentioned, as also with all his lands, tenements, hereditaments, both within this realm and abroad, as well copyhold, or customaryhold, as freehold, which he shall have in his own right before he became bankrupt; as also with all such interest, in any such lands, tenements, and he- tificate thereof, 20s. and no more. 6 G. 4. c. reditaments, as such bankrupt may lawfully 16. § 14. offices, annuities, goods, chattels, wares, merchandize, and debts, wheresoever they may be found and known, and to make sale thereof in manner thereinafter mentioned, or otherwise order the same for satisfaction and payment of the creditors of the said bankrupt. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 12. (As 13 Eliz. c. 7. § 2.) The petitioning creditor shall, before any commission be granted, make an affidavit in writing before any master ordinary or extraordinary in Chancery, (which shall be filed with the proper officer,) of the truth of his debt, and shall likewise give bond to lord chancellor, in the penalty of 200l. to be conditioned for proving his debt, as well before the commissioners as upon any trial at law. in case the due issuing forth of the commission be contested; and also for proving the party to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of taking out such commission, and to proceed on such commission; but if such debt shall not be really due, or if after such commission taken out it be not proved that the party had committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of the issuing of the commission, and it shall also appear that such commission was taken out fraudulently, or maliciously, the lord chancellor shall and may, upon petition of the party against whom the commission was so taken out, examine into the same, and order satisfaction to be made to him for the damages by him sustained; and for the better recovery thereof, may assign such bond or bonds to the party so petitioning, who may sue for the same in his own name. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 13. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 3.)

The petitioning creditor, or creditors, shall at his, or their own costs, sue forth and prosecute the commission until the choice of assignees; and the commissioners shall at the meeting for such choice, ascertain such costs, and by writing under their hands, direct the assignees to reimburse such petitioning creditor or creditors such costs out of the first money that shall be got in under the com-mission; and all bills of fees or disburse-ments of any solicitor or attorney, employed under any commission for business done after the choice of assignees, shall be settled by the commissioners, except that so much of such bills as contain any charge respecting any action at law, or suit in equity, shall be settled by the proper officer of the court in which such business shall have been transacted, and the sum so settled shall be paid by the assignees to such solicitor or attorney; provided that any creditor who shall have proved to the amount of 201. or upwards, if he be dissatisfied with such settlement by the commissioners, may have any such costs and bills settled by a master in Chancery, who shall receive for such settlement, and the cer-

No commission shall be issued, unless the the persons so appointed shall have the like single debt of one creditor, or of two or more persons being partners, petitioning for the same, shall amount to 100l. or upwards; or unless the debt of two creditors, so petitioning, shall amount to 150l. or upwards; or unless the debt of three or more creditors, so petitioning, shall amount to 2001. or upwards. And every person who has given credit to any trader, upon valuable consideration for any sum payable at a certain time, which time shall not have arrived when such trader committed an act of bankruptcy, may so petition, or join in petitioning [whether he shall have any security, in writing or otherwise, for such sum or not.] 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 15. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 23. the words in italics added.) If after adjudication, the debt or debts of the petitioning creditor or creditors, or any of them, be found insufficient to support a commission, the lord chancellor (upon the application of any other creditor having proved any debt or debts sufficient to support a commission, incurred not anterior to the debt or debts of the petitioning creditor,) may order the said commission to be proceeded in, and it shall by such order be deemed valid. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 19. New. No commission shall be deemed invalid by reason of acts of bankruptcy prior to debts of petitioning creditors, or any of them, provided there be a sufficient act of bankruptcy subsequent to such debts. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 19. New. Lord chancellor may issue an auxiliary commission for proof debts under 201., and for examination of witnesses, and for other purposes; and commissioners shall possess the same powers to compel attendance of witnesses, &c. as commissioners in original commissions. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 20. New.

The flat of bankruptcy.—The new Bankrupt Court act abolishes commissions of bankrupt, and substitutes a fiat; but as the petitioning creditor's debt and the bond are still unaffected, the preceding provisions are in force. The 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 56. § 12. enacts that in every case where the lord chancellor, by any former act, had power to issue a commission of bankrupt, it shall be lawful for him, and also for the master of the rolls, the vice-chancellor, and each of the masters in Chancery, acting under the appointment of the lord chancellor for that purpose, on petition made to the lord chancellor against any trader having committed any act of bankruptcy, by any creditor of such trader, and upon his filing such affidavit and giving such bond as by law required, to issue his flat under his hand, in lieu of such commission; thereby authorizing such creditor to prosecute his said complaint in the Court of Bankruptcy, or elsewhere, before such proper persons as the lord chancellor, or the master of the rolls, vice-chancellor, or one of the masters in Chancery, acting as aforesaid by such fiat, may power and authority as if they were appointed by a commission under the great seal. By & 13. any such fiat shall be filed and entered of record in the said court (see post), and it shall be lawful for any one of the commissioners of the court to proceed thereon in all respects as commissioners acting in the execution of a commission of bankrupt, save as the proceeding may be altered by that act. By § 14. the judges who go the circuits may be directed by the chancellor to return to him so many names as he shall think fit of barristers, solicitors, and attornies, practising in the counties; and on such persons being approved by the chancellor, the fiats not directed to the Court of Bankruptcy shall be directed to some one or more of such persons in rotation, to act as commissioners, according to the districts for which such persons shall be returned, and to no other person. Provided that the lord chancellor may remove any person from the lists to be returned for such cause as shall to him seem fit. By § 16. all laws and statutes, rules and orders, relating to bankrupts, or commissions of bankrupt, or to proceedings under commissions, or to the subject-matter of such proceedings, shall extend as far as applicable to fiats issued under the acts, and to all proceedings under the same, and to all the subject-matters of such proceedings, and to all persons concerned therein or affected thereby, as if every such fiat were a commission of bankrupt.

The commissioners shall receive and be paid the fee of 20s. each commissioner for every meeting, and the like sum for every deed of conveyance executed by them, and for the signature of the bankrupt's certificate; and where any commission shall be executed in the country, every commissioner, being a barrister at law, shall receive a farther fee of 20s. for each meeting; and in case the usual place of residence of such commissioner, being a barrister, is distant seven miles or upwards from the place where such meetings are holden, and he shall travel such distance to any such meeting, he may receive a farther sum of 20s. for every such meeting; and every such commissioner, who shall receive from the creditors, or out of the estate of the bankrupt, any farther sum than as aforesaid, or who shall eat or drink at the charge of the creditors, or out of the estate of the bankrupt, or order any such expence to be incurred, shall be disabled for ever from acting in such or any other commission. 6 G. 4.c. 16. § 22. Am.

Barristers, being commissioners under any commission to be executed in the country, entitled to summonses and fees, in priority to any other commissioners named in the commission. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 23. New.

The above clause is not applicable to the commissioners of the new Bankrupt Court, who we have seen are paid a fixed salary, but think fit to nominate and appoint; and that it seems to apply to country commissioners.

oath, may, by writing under their hands, summon before them any person whom they shall believe capable of giving any information concerning the trading of, or any act or acts of bankruptcy committed by, the person against whom the commission is issued; and also to require any person so summoned to produce any books, papers, deeds, and writings, and other documents in the custody, possession, or power of such person, which may appear to the said commissioners to be necessary to establish such trading, or act or acts of bankruptcy. And commissioners may examine any such person upon oath, by word of mouth, or by interrogatories in writing, concerning the trade of, or any act or acts of bankruptcy committed by, the person against whom the commission shall have issued; and every such person so summoned shall incur such danger and penalty for not coming before the commissioners, or for refusing to sign or subscribe his examination, or for refusing to produce, or for not producing, any such book, paper, deed, writing, or document, as is thereby provided as to persons summoned after the adjudication of bankruptcy. [And the commissioners, upon proof made before them of the petitioning creditors' debt or debts, and of the trading, and act or acts of bankruptcy of the person or persons against whom such commission is issued, shall thereupon adjudge such person or persons bankrupt.] 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 24. (As 3 G. 4. c. 81. § 8. with the addition in brackets.) The commissioners, after they have so adjudged, shall forthwith cause notice of such adjudication to be given in the London Gazette, and shall thereby appoint three public meetings for the bankrupt to surrender and conform; the last of which meetings shall be on the fortysecond day limited for such surrender. § 25. But by the Bankrupt Court act (§ 20.) it shall be lawful for any commissioner, who shall make any adjudication of bankruptcy, to appoint two or more public meetings, instead of the three meetings directed by the act, for the bankrupt to surrender and conform; the last meeting to be on the forty-second day after the publication of his bankruptcy in the Gazette; and the choice of assignees shall take place on the first of such two meetings.

By § 27-32. of the act, extensive powers are given to all messengers, under the commissioners of bankrupt, for breaking open doors and seizing the goods of the bankrupt, in any part of the United Kingdom, and for protecting such messengers in case of any action against them for such proceedings.

When the commission is opened, the commissioners are first to receive proof of the person's being a trader, and having committed of mouth, or interrogatories in writing, touchsome act of bankruptcy. And it shall be ing all matters relating either to his trade, lawful for commissioners (after having taken | dealings, or estate, or which may tend to disthe oath prescribed; see the new Bankrupt close any secret grant, conveyance, or con-

The commissioners, after having taken Court act for the oaths of the judges and commissioners, § 8. 15.) by writing under their hands, to summon any person to give information, or to produce books, papers, deeds, or writings which may appear necessary to them to establish the trading, or any act of bankruptcy, and then to declare him a bankrupt, if proved so; and give notice in the Gazette, and shall appoint three public meetings for the bankrupt to surrender and confirm. See ante. And a notice in writing of his having been declared a bankrupt, must be left for the bankrupt at his usual place of abode, or served upon him personally, in case

At the second meeting, or any adjournment thereof, assignees shall be chosen, and all creditors who have proved debts to the amount of 10l. and upwards, shall be entitled to vote in such choice, or any person duly authorized by letter of attorney. But commissioners have power to reject any person to them seeming unfit, and a new choice shall be made. § 61. Am. The bankrupt must surrender himself to the commissioners by 3 o'clock on the forty-second day after notice as aforesaid, § 112. (unless time enlarged by lord chancellor as often as he may think fit, which order must be made six days before the day on which the bankrupt was to surrender himself, § 113), which surrender voluntarily (or involuntarily, § 115) protects him from all arrests during the forty-two days, and during such farther time as shall be by the commissioners (§ 118. New) allowed him for finishing his examination (provided he is not in custody at time of surrender, concerning which there are special directions given, § 119.) must then and thenceforth submit himself to be examined. But if he will not conform to the directions of the statute, or in default of surrender or conformity, every such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and be liable to be transported for life, or for such term, not less than seven years, as the court before which he shall be convicted shall adjudge; or shall be liable to be imprisoned only, or imprisoned and kept to hard labour in any common gaol, penitentiary house, or house of correction, for any term not exceeding seven years. § 112. Commissioners, by writing under their hands, may summon any bankrupt before them, whether he shall have obtained his certificate or not; and in case he shall not come at the time appointed (having no lawful impediment,) the commissioners may authorize any persons to arrest the bankrupt, and bring him before them; and upon the appearance of such bankrupt, or if bankrupt be present at any meeting of commissioners, they may examine bankrupt on oath, either by word cealment of his lands, tenements, goods, | may appoint any person to attend such bankmoney, or debts, and to reduce his answers into writing, which examination so reduced into writing he shall sign and subscribe. And if such bankrupt shall refuse to answer any questions put to him by commissioners, or shall not fully answer to satisfaction of commissioners, or shall refuse to sign his examination reduced into writing (not having any lawful objection allowed by commissioners), commissioners may, by warrant under their hands and seals, commit him to such prison as they shall think fit, there to remain without bail, until he shall submit himself to the commissioners to be sworn, and full answers to make to their satisfaction to such questions as shall be put to him, and sign and subscribe such examination. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 36. (As 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. § 7, 8: 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. § 7: 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 16.) But no single commissioner, under the new act, (§ 7.) can commit any bankrupt, or other person, otherwise than to the care of a messenger or officer of the court, to be brought before a subdivision court, or the Court of Review, within three days after such commitment.

Commissioners may summon wife of any bankrupt to examine her, for the finding out and discovery of the estate, goods, and chat-tels of bankrupt, concealed, kept, or disposed of by such wife, in her own person, or by her own act, or by any other person; and she shall incur such danger or penalty for not coming before commissioners, or for refusing to be sworn, &c., as is provided against other persons. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 37. (As 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. § 5, 6.) If a gaoler, to whose custody any bankrupt, or other person, shall be committed, as aforesaid, shall suffer such bankrupt, or other person, to escape, every such gaoler shall forfeit 500l. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 38. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 18.) It shall be lawful for commissioners, at time appointed for last examination of bankrupt, or any enlargement or adjournment thereof, to adjourn such examination sine die, and he shall be free from arrest or imprisonment for such time, not exceeding three calendar months, as they shall, by indorsement upon such summons as aforesaid, appoint, with penalty of 500l. upon any officer detaining such bankrupt, after having been shown such summons. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 118. New. Whenever any bankrupt is in prison, or in custody, under any process, attachment, execution, commitment, or sentence, the commissioners may by warrant under their hands, directed to the person in whose custody such bankrupt is confined, · cause such bankrupt to be brought before them, at any meeting, either public or private. And if any such bankrupt is desirous to surrender, he shall be brought up, and the expence thereof shall be paid out of his estate, and such person shall be indemnified by the warrant of the commissioners for bringing up such bankrupt. Provided that the assignees nor unless the bankrupt make oath in writ-rupt, from time to time, and to produce to him his books, papers, and writings, in order to prepare an abstract of his accounts, and a statement to show the particulars of his estate and effects previous to his final examination and discovery thereof; a copy of which abstract and statement the said bankrupt shall deliver to them ten days at least before his last examination. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 119. Am. Any person wilfully concealing any real or personal estate of bankrupt, and who shall not, within forty-two days after the issuing of the commission, discover such estate to one or more of the commissioners or assignees, shall forfeit 100l. and double the value of the estate so concealed. And any person who shall, after the time allowed to the bankrupt to surrender, voluntarily discover to one or more of the commissioners or assignees any part of such bankrupt's estate, not before come to the knowledge of the assignees, shall be allowed five per centum thereupon, and such farther reward as the major part, in in value, of the creditors present, at any meeting called for that purpose, shall think fit; to be paid out of the estate recovered on such discovery. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 120. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 20, 21.)

As to the bankrupt's certificate.- Every bankrupt, who shall have duly surrendered. and in all things conformed himself to the laws in force concerning bankrupts at the time of issuing the commission against him, shall be discharged from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands made payable under the commission, in case he shall obtain a certificate of such conformity so signed and allowed, and subject to such provisions as after directed; but no such certificate shall release or discharge any person who was partner with such bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, or who was then jointly bound, or had made any joint contract with such bankrupt. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 121. Am. Such certificate shall be signed by four-fifths in number and value of the creditors of the bankrupt, who shall have proved debts under the commission to the amount of 201. or upwards; or (after six calendar months from the last examination of the bankrupt,) then either by three-fifths in number and value of such creditors, or by nine-tenths in number of such creditors, who shall thereby testify their consent to the bank. And no such certificate rupt's discharge. shall be such discharge unless the commissioners shall, in writing, under their hands and seals, certify to the lord chancellor that such bankrupt has made a full discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed as aforesaid, and that there does not appear any reason to doubt the truth or fulness of such discovery; and also that the creditors have signed in manner hereby directed; obtained without fraud; nor unless such certificate and consent shall after such oath be allowed by the lord chancellor, against which allowance any of the creditors of the bank-rupt may be heard before the lord chancellor. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 122. Am. The commissioners shall not sign any certificate unless they shall have proof by affidavit, in writing, of the signature of the creditors thereto, or of any person thereto authorized by any creditor, and of the authority by which such person shall have so signed the same. And if any creditor reside abroad, the authority of such creditor shall be attested by a notary public, British minister, or consul; and every such affidavit, authority, and attestation, shall be laid before the lord chancellor with the certificate, previous to the allowance thereof. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 124. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 10., and 24 G. 2. c. 57. § 10.) Any contract or security made or given by any bankrupt, or other person, unto or in trust for any creditor, or for securing the payment of any money due by such bankrupt at his bankruptcy, as a consideration, or with intent to persuade such creditor to consent to or sign such certificate, shall be void, and the money thereby secured, or agreed to be paid, shall not be recoverable, and the party sued on such contract or security may plead the general issue. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 125. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 11.)

And commissioners are directed to charge every such assignee in his accounts accordingly. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 104. Am. If any assignee indebted to the estate of which he is such assignee, in respect of money so retained or employed by him as aforesaid, become bankrupt; if he obtain his certificate, it shall only have the effect of freeing his person from arrest and imprisonment, but his future effects (his tools of trade, necessary household goods, and the necessary wearing apparel of himself, his wife and children excepted) shall remain liable for so much of his debts, to the estate of which he was assignee, as shall not be paid by dividends under his commission, together with lawful interest for the whole debt. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 105. (As 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 6.) The commissioner shall at the meeting appointed for the last examination of the bankrupt, appoint a public meeting (not sooner than four calendar months from the issuing of the commission, nor later than six calendar months from the last examination of the bankrupt,) whereof they shall give 21 days' notice in the London Gazette, to audit the accounts of the assignees. And the assignees at such meeting shall deliver upon oath a true statement in writing of all monies received by them respectively, and when and on what account and how the same have been employed. And the commissioners shall examine such statements, and compare the receipts with the payments, and ascertain what balances have been from time to time in the hands of such assignees respectively, and shall inquire whether any sum appearing to be in their hands ought to be retained. Assignces may be examined on oath touching such accounts, and may retain all money expended in suing out and prosecuting the commission, and all other just allowances. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 106. New.

All public meetings under commissions of bankrupt in London and all places within the bills of mortality, as well those fixed by the commissioners, as also all meetings of creditors under commissions, which are held in pursuance of public advertisements, shall be holden within the building called The Court of Commissioners of Bankrupt in Basinghallstreet, London, unless otherwise specially directed in writing by the major part of the commissioners. 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 115. § 3. 17.

The commissioners have power to order or who shall interrupt them in the exercise of their duty, and to have such persons taken before any alderman or magistrate acting in the commission of the peace, to be dealt with according to law; and the warrant of commissioners shall be an indemnity to the messenger. 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 115. § 21. Any commissioners who shall receive from the creditors, or out of the estate of the bankrupt. any farther sum than their stated fees (set forth), or who shall eat or drink at the charge of the creditors, or out of the estate of the bankrupt, or order any such expence to be made, shall be disabled for ever from acting in such or any other commission. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 22. As to actions against commissioners, &c .-No writ shall be sued out against, nor copy of any process served on, any commissioner, for any thing done by him as such commis-sioner, unless notice in writing of such in-tended writ or process shall have been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode, by the attorney or agent of the party intending to suc or cause the same to be sued out or served, at least one calendar month before the suing out or serving the same; and such notice shall set forth the cause of action which such party has, or claims to have, against such commissioner; and on the back of such notice shall be endorsed the name of such attorney or agent, together with the place of his abode, who shall receive no more than 20s. for preparing and serving such notice. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 41. New. No such plaintiff shall recover any verdict against such commissioner in any case where the action shall be grounded on any act of the desendant as commissioner, unless it be proved upon the trial of the said action that such notice was given; but in default thereof such commissioner shall recover a verdict and costs; and no evidence shall be permitted to be given by the plaintiff on the trial of any cause of action except such as is contained in the said notice. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 42. New. Every commissioner may at any time within one calendar month after such notice, tender amends to the party complaining, or to his agent or attorney; and if the same is not excepted, may plead such tender in bar to any action brought against him grounded on such writ or process, together with the plea of ' Not Guilty,' and any other plea with leave of the court; and if upon issue joined thereon, the jury shall find the amends so tendered to have been sufficient, they shall give a verdict for the defendant; and if the plaintiff shall become nonsuit or shall discontinue his action, or if judgment shall be given for such defendant upon demurrer, such commissioner shall be entitled to the like costs as he would have been entitled to in case he had pleaded the general issue only: and if upon issue so joined, the jury shall find and direct the messenger to take into custody that no amends were tendered, or that the defendant on such other plea or pleas, they shall give a verdict for the plaintiff, and such damages as they shall think proper, which he shall recover together with costs of suit; provided that if any commissioner shall neglect to tender any amends, or shall have tendered insufficient amends before the action brought, he may, by leave of the court where such action shall depend, at any time before issue joined, pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit; whereupon such proceedings shall be had in court as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 43. New. The commissioners of the Bankrupt Court are expressly made judges of record (§ 1.), and therefore are not liable to actions for acts done within the scope of their jurisdiction. 7 Barn. & C. 394. But the country commissioners are not within this provision, and are therefore only protected by the above provisions. Every action brought against any person, for any thing done in pursuance of this act, shall be commenced within three calendar months next after the fact committed; and the defendant in such action may plead the general issue, &c. and be entitled to double costs in case of a verdict. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 44. New. In any action by or against any assignee, or in any action against any commissioner, or person acting under the warrant of the commissioners, for any thing done as such commissioner or under such warrant, no proof shall be required at the trial of the petitioning creditor's debt, or of the trading, or act or acts of bankruptcy respectively, unless the other party in such action shall, if defendant at or before pleading, and if plaintiff before issue joined, give notice in writing, that he intends to dispute some and which of such matters; and in case such notice shall have been given, if the matter so disputed shall be proved, or admitted, the judge may, if he thinks fit, grant a certificate of such proof or admission, and such assignee, &c. shall be entitled to the costs of such notice, &c. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 90. If any person be committed by the commissioners for refusing to answer, or not fully answering any questions, they shall in their warrant of commitment specify every such question. Provided, if any person committed shall bring any habeas corpus, and there shall appear on the return any such insufficiency in the form of the warrant by reason whereof said official assignces shall in all cases be an same were not sufficient, and also against the he might be discharged, the judge before whom such party shall be brought shall commit such person to the same prison, there to remain until he shall conform, unless it shall be shown by the party committed that he has fully answered all lawful questions put to him by the commissioners; or (if such person was committed for refusing to be sworn, or for not signing his examination), unless it shall appear that he had a sufficient reason for the same. And the judge shall, if required by the party committed, look at the whole of the examination, and if it shall appear from the whole examination that the answers of the party are satisfactory, such judge shall order the party so committed to be discharged. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 39. Am. In every action in respect of such commitment brought by any bankrupt or other person committed, the court may inspect and consider the whole examination if thereto required by the defendant; and if upon such inspection and consideration it shall appear to the court or judge that the party was lawfully committed, the defendants in such action shall have the same benefit therefrom as if the whole of such examination had been stated in the warrant of commitment. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 40. New. We have before seen that by the Bankrupt Court act a single commissioner of that court can only commit the bankrupt or other person to the custody of the officer to be brought before the Subdivision Court or before the Court of Review.

> IV. The Effect of the Fiat (formerly the Commission) on the Property of the Bankrupt. -The Bankrupt Court act has materially altered the mode in which the estate and effects of the bankrupt are to become vested in the assignees. The bargain and sale, and assignments, from the commissioners to the assignees, are done away; and by § 25. when any person hath been adjudged a bankrupt, all his personal estate which by law may be assigned by the commissioner, shall become vested in the assignees by virtue of their appointment, as fully as if assigned by deed to the assignees; and on the death or removal of any assignees the personal estate shall vest in the newly appointed assignce, either alone or jointly with the existing assignces, as the case may require. Sect. 26. makes a similar provision as to the real estate of the bankrupt, whether in the United Kingdom or in the plantations or colonies. The following clause introduces the important alteration appointing official assignees:

> "That a number of persons, not exceeding thirty, being merchants, brokers, or accountants, or persons who are or have been engaged in trade in the cities of London or Westminster, or the parts adjacent, shall be chosen by the lord chancellor to act as official assignees in all bankruptcies prosecuted in the said Court of Bankruptcy; one of which assignce of each bankrupt's estate and effects, together with the assignee or assignees to be chosen by the creditors; such official assignee to give such security, to be subject to such rules, to be selected for such estate, and to act in such manner as the said chief and other judges, with the consent of the lord chancellor, shall from time to time direct; and all the personal estate and effects, and the rents and profits of the real estate, and the proceeds of sale of all the estates and effects real and personal, of the bankrupt, shall in every case be possessed and received by such official assignee alone, save where it shall be otherwise directed by the said Court of Bankruptcy, or any judge or commissioner thereof; and all stock in the public funds or of any public company, and all monies, Exchequer bills, India bonds, or other public securities, and all bills, notes, and other negociable instruments, shall be forthwith transferred, delivered, and paid by such official assignee into the Bank of England, to the credit of the accountant-general of the high Court of Chancery, to be subject to such order, rule, and regulation, for the keeping the account of the said monies and other effects, and for the payment and delivery in, investment, and payment and delivery out of the same, as the lord chancellor or the said Court of Review, or any judge of the said court of Bankruptcy, if authorised so to do by any general order of the same court, shall direct; and if any such assignee shall neglect to make such transfer, delivery, or payment, every such assignee shall be liable to be charged in the same manner as by the said recited act is provided in cases of neglect by assignees to invest money in the purchase of Exchequer bills, when directed so to do. Provided always, that until assignces chosen by the creditors of each bankrupt, such official assignee so to be appointed to act with the assignees to be chosen by the creditors shall be enabled to act, and shall be deemed to be, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, a sole assignee of each bankrupt's estate and effects. 1 & 2 W. 4. c. 56. § 22.

"Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to authorise any such official assignee to interfere with the assignees chosen by the creditors in the appointment of a solicitor or attorney, or in directing the time and manner of effecting any sale of the bank.

We shall now shortly state the leading principles as to the operation of the fiat (or commission) on property of the bankrupt.

A mere possibility of right will pass to the assignees; for instance, where property is devised to a person for life, remainder to such of his children as shall be living at the time of his death; and one of the children in the life time of the father becomes bankrupt, and obtains his certificate, and then the father dies; the bankrupt's share of the property will ment. Higden v. Williamson, 3 P. Wms. 132. But a possibility that lands will come to the bankrupt by descent, if they do not actually descend to him before he obtains his certificate, will not pass to his assignces. Moth v. Frome, Amb. 394: Carleton v. Leighton.

Incorporeal hereditaments which may be legally sold are included in the assignment; and all powers vested in any bankrupt which he might legally execute for his own benefit (except the right of nomination to any vacant ecclesiastical benefice) may be executed by the assignees for the benefit of the creditors, in such manner as the bankrupt might have executed the same. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 77. (As 3 G. 4. c. 81. § 3.) A policy effected by the bankrupt on his own life is a possibility of benefit to which the assignees are entitled. 1 Camp. 487. And assignees are entitled to recover money lost at play by the bankrupt before his bankruptcy. 1 Barn. & C. 444.

The commissioners shall by deed indented and enrolled make sale for the benefit of the creditors of any lands, tenements, and hereditaments, situate either in England or Ireland, whereof the bankrupt is seised of any estatetail, in possession, reversion, or remainder, and whereof no reversion or remainder is in the crown; and every such deed shall be good against the bankrupt and his issue, and against all persons claiming under him after he became bankrupt, and against all persons whom the said bankrupt by fine, common recovery, or any other means, might cut off or bar. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 65. (As 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. § 12.) But now by the Bankrupt Court act, 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 56. § 26. all the real estate of the bankrupt vests in the assignees by virtue of their appointment.

If any bankrupt shall have any government stock, funds, or annuities, or any of the stock of any public company, either in England, Scotland, or Ireland, standing in his name in his own right, it shall be lawful for the commissioners by writing under their hands to order all persons (whose act or consent is thereto necessary) to transfer the same into the name of the assignees, and to pay all dividends upon the same to such assignees. And all such persons whose act or consent is so necessary are indemnified for all things done or permitted pursuant to such order. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 80. (As 36 G. 3. c. 90. § 2, 3. with the addition printed in italics.)

Goods and chattels in bankrupt's possession, order, or disposition pass to the assignees by the assignment. If any bankrupt at the time he becomes bankrupt, shall, by the consent and permission of the true owner thereof, have in his possession, order, or disposition any goods or chattels whereof he was reputed owner, or whereof he had taken upon him the sale, alteration, or disposition, as owner, the commissioners shall have power to sell and have passed to his assignces under the assign- dispose of the same for the benefit of the 16. § 72. (As in 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. § 11.) Provided, that this shall not invalidate or affect any transfer or assignment of any ship or vessel, or any share thereof made as a security for any debt or debts, either by way of mortgage or assignment duly registered according to the act (6 G. 4. c. 110.) for the registering of vessels. 6 G. 4 c. 16. § 72. New.

It would be impossible in this Dictionary to give even a summary of the numerous cases decided on this clause. For which see Bac. Ab. Bankrupt (G.) (ed. by Gwillim and Dodd;) Mr. Deacon's work on Bankruptcy; Roscoe on Evidence, p. 437. Some of the ostensible partner becomes bankrupt. 2 Barn. leading principles on the subject may be how- & C. 389. 406. ever stated. All personal goods and chattels are within the statute, as ships and utensils of trade, unless such utensils are let, and there is a usage of trade for the utensils to be let: so stock bills of exchange, policies of insurance, shares in a public company, and in a newspaper, have been held to be within the statute. See the cases Roscoe on Evidence, p. 438.

In order to bring the case within the statute the assignees should, in general, give some evidence beyond that of mere possession. Where the bankrupt has once been the owner of the property in question, the more fact of possession may, it is said, raise a presumption that he continues in possession as reputed owner; but where the bankrupt has never been the real owner, possession may not of itself show him to be reputed owner, and it would then be necessary for the assignees to establish that fact by other evidence. Lingard v. Messiter, 1 B. & C. 308. Where it appears in evidence that, in some instances, articles used in collicries belong to the tenants, and that in others they do not; that, though in some cases the landlord, in demising collieries, permits the lessee, on certain conditions, to have the use of the fixtures and other things during the demise, yet, that in other instances they belong absolutely to the lessee; then if the possession of such things is consistent with the fact of a person being absolute owner, the mere possession of such things ought not to raise an inference on the mind of any cautious person acquainted with the usage that the person in possession is the owner. Per Abbot, C. J., Storer v. Hunter, 3 B. & C. 376: see Thackthwaite v. Cock, 3 Taunt. 487. post. In order to prove the bankrupt reputed owner, evidence of reputation is admissible. Oliver v. v. Eggington, 1 Term Rep. 370.

The relation to the act of bankruptcy.—All conveyances by, and all contracts and other dealings by and with any bankrupt, bona fide made, and entered into more than two calendar months before the date and issuing of the commission (see 1 Moo. & Malk. Ca. 137. 140.) against him, and all executions and attachments against the lands and tenements, or goods and chattels, of such bankrupt, bona fide executed or levied more than two calendar months before the issuing of such commission, shall be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed, provided the person so dealing with such bankrupt, or at whose suit or on whose account such execution or attachment shall have issued, had not at the time of such conveyance, contract, dealing, or transaction, or at the time of executing or levying such execution or attachment, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed. Provided also (which is a new provision of this act), that where a commission has been superseded, if any other commission shall issue against any person comprised in the first commission, within two calendar months next after it shall have been superseded, no such conveyance, &c. shall be valid, unless made, entered into, executed, or levied, more than two calendar months before the issuing the first commission. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 81. Am.

All payments, really and bona fide made by any bankrupt, or by an person on his behalf, before the date and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt, to any creditor of such bankrupt (such payment not being a fraudulent preference to such creditor), shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy, by such bankrupt committed, and all payments really and bona fide made to any bankrupt before the date and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt, shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed; and such creditor shall not be liable to refund the same to the assignees of the bankrupt, provided the person so dealing with bankrupt had not at the time of such payment by or to such bankrupt, notice of any act of bankruptcy committed. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 82. Am.

The issuing of a commission shall be deemed notice of a prior act of bankruptcy (if an act of bankruptcy had been actually committed before the issuing of the commission) in cases where the adjudication of the person or persons against whom such commission has issued, shall have been notified in the Gazette. and the persons to be affected by such notice may reasonably be presumed to have seen the

No title to any real or personal estate sold under any commission or any order in bankruptcy shall be impeached by the bankrupt, or any person claiming under him, in respect of any defect in the suing out of the commission, or in any of the proceedings under the same, unless the bankrupt shall have commenced proceedings to supersede, and duly prosecuted the same, within twelve calendar months from the issuing thereof. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 87. V. Practical Directions as to incidental Proceedings, the Effect of Bankruptcy on all Parties concerned, and Miscellaneous Matters. -Reference to arbitration .- Assignees, with consent of major part in value of creditors who shall have proved under the commission, present at any meeting whereof twenty-one days notice shall have been given in the Gazette, was valid under the 82d sect. 9 Barn. & C. may compound with any debtor to the bank-rupt's estate, and take any reasonable part of | rupt, and on his finding security for costs (if the debt in discharge of the whole, or may give time and take security for the payment of such debt, or may submit any dispute between such assignees and any persons concerning any matter relating to such bankrupt's estate, to the determination of arbitrators, to be chosen by the assignces and by the major part in value of such creditors, and the party with whom they shall have such dispute, and the award of such arbitrators shall be binding on all the creditors; and the assignees are indemnified for what they shall do accordingly, and no suit in equity shall be commenced by the assignces without such consent. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 88. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 34, 35.) Provided that if one-third in value, or upwards, of such creditors, shall not attend at any such meeting (whereof such notice shall have been given), the assignces shall have power, with the consent of the commissioners, testified in writing under their hands, to do any such matters. 6 G. 4.c. 16. § 88. New Addition.

By the Bankrupt Court act, § 43. if any assignees refer matters to arbitration, the agreement of reference may be made a rule of the Court of Bankruptcy, and all the same remedies and liabilities shall accrue thereon as accrue on a reference made a rule of any court of record. A general reference to arbitration by assignees, without any protest, is an admission of assets. 2 Rose Ca. 50.

Bankrupt's disputing the commission.—If the bankrupt shall not (if he was within the United Kingdom at the issuing of the commission), within two calendar months after the adjudication, or (if he was out of the United Kingdom) within twelve calendar months after the adjudication, have given notice of his intention to dispute the commission, and have proceeded therein, with due diligence, the depositions taken before the commissioners, at the time of or previous to the adjudication of the petitioning creditor's debt, and of the trading and acts of bankruptcy, shall be conclusive evidence of the matters therein respectively contained in all actions at law or suits in equity, brought by the assignees for any debt or demand for which the bankrupt might have sustained any suit. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 92.

The Bankrupt Court act introduces a most important provision as to the bankrupt's disputing the adjudication of bankruptcy. By § 17. if any trader adjudged bankrupt shall be minded to dispute such adjudication, and shall present a petition praying the reversal thereof to the Court of Review within two months from the adjudication, if such trader is residing in the United Kingdom, -or within three calendar months, if residing in any other part of Europe, -or within one year, if residing elsewhere, -or within such other time as the court shall allow (not exceeding one year), such court shall hear and decide mission) appoint a public meeting (whereof the court think fit), shall direct an issue to try any matter of fact affecting the bankruptcy, by a jury, before the chief or other judge of the court; and if the verdict is not set aside within one month after trial, or if the adjudication shall not be set aside by the court, such verdict or adjudication shall, as against the bankrupt, and also against the petitioning creditor, and any assignee of the bankrupt, and all persons claiming under the assignee, and all persons indebted to the bankrupt's estate, be conclusive evidence that the party was or was not a bankrupt at the date of the adjudication, any other act, debt, or trading, than the act, debt, or trading proved at the trial notwithstanding. Provided that an appeal shall be to the lord chancellor from the decision of the Court of Review, upon matter of law or equity, or on the refusal or admission of evidence.

If assignees commence action or suit before the time allowed for disputing the commission shall have elapsed, the defendant, after notice given to the assignee, shall be entitled to pay the same or any part thereof into court, and all proceedings shall be stayed; and after the time has elapsed, the assignees shall have the same paid to them out of the court. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 93. New.

If the commission should be afterwards superseded, all persons from whom assignees shall have recovered are discharged from all demands which may be made in respect of the same by the persons against whom commission issued; and all persons who, without suit, shall bona fide deliver up possession of any real or personal estate, are discharged in like manner; provided such notice to try the validity of the commission had not been given, and been proceeded with within the time and manner aforesaid. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 94. New.

In any action (of suit in equity) by or against any assignee, or in any action against any commissioner, or person acting under the warrant of the commissioners, for any thing done as such commissioner, no proof shall be required at the trial of the petitioning creditor's debt, or of the trading or acts of bankruptcy, unless notice be given that those matters are to be disputed; and if notice given and matter proved, the judge before whom cause is tried may (if he thinks fit) grant a certificate thereof; and the assignee, commissioner, or other person, shall be entitled to costs of notice, which, if commissioner, &c. obtain a verdict, shall be added to costs; and if the other party obtain a verdict, shall be deducted from the costs they would otherwise be entitled to receive. 6 G. 4. c.

16. § 90. Am. 91. (As 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 11.)

The dividend.—The commissioners shall (not sooner than four nor later than twelve calendar months from the issuing the comon the petition, or at the option of the bank- they shall give twenty-one days' notice in the Gazette), to make a dividend of the bankrupt's, before the bankruptev." See Wymer v. Kemestate, at which meeting all creditors who have not proved their debts shall be entitled to prove the same; and commissioners at such meeting shall order such part of the nett produce of the bankrupt's estate in the hands of the assignees as they shall think fit to be forthwith divided amongst such creditors as have proved debts under the commission, in proportion to their respective debts, and shall make an order for a dividend in writing under their hands, and shall cause one part of such order to be filed among the proceedings under the commission, and shall deliver another part thereof to the assignees, which order shall contain an account of the time and place of making such order, of the amount of the debts proved, of the money remaining in the hands of the assignees to be divided, of how much in the pound is then ordered to be paid to every creditor, and of the money allowed by the commissioners to be retained by the assignees, with their reasons for allowing the same to be retained; and the assignees, in pursuance of such order (and without any deed of distribution made for that purpose), shall forthwith make such dividend, and shall take receipts in a book to be kept for that purpose from each creditor for the dividend received, and such order and receipt shall be a discharge to the assignee for so much as he shall pay pursuant'to such order; and no dividend shall be declared, unless the accounts shall have been first audited. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 107. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 33.)

The audit mentioned in the preceding sections to be appointed by the commissioners at the last examination of the bankrupt, not sooner than four months from the issuing of the commission, nor later than six months from the last examination; at which meeting the assignees shall deliver a statement upon oath of money received by them, and how employed. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 106. New.

Creditors having security for their debts shall not receive more than the other creditors, except in respect of any execution or extent, served and levied by seizure upon, or any mortgage or lien upon any part of the property of bankrupt, before the bankruptcy. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 108. Am. And no such creditor who shall sue out execution on any judgment by default, confession, or nil dicit, shall avail himself of such execution to the prejudice of other fair creditors, but shall be paid only rateably with other creditors. In Bac. Ab. Bankrupt (E.) (7th ed.) Mr. Dodd observes, in a note, "The last clause is very obscure; but the construction put upon it is, that a creditor suing out execution on judgment obtained by verdict, is entitled to retain the goods, provided the seizure took place before the act of bankruptcy; but that a creditor suing execution on a judgment by default, &c., will not be entitled to retain the goods unble, 6 Barn. & Cres. 479: Morland v. Pellatt, 8 Barn. & Cres. 722: Notley v. Buck, 8 Barn. & Cres. 169: and in re Washbourn, Id. 444. As the operation of this clause had the effect of checking the settling of actions by giving cognovits, the 1 W. 4. c. 7. § 7. has provided a remedy, and has placed judgments on cognovit in adverse suits on the same footing as judgments after verdict, with respect to bankruptev.

If bankrupt's estate shall not have been wholly divided upon the first dividend, commissioners shall, within eighteen calendar months after the issuing the commission, appoint a public meeting (whereof twenty-one days' notice shall be given in the Gazette), to make a second dividend of bankrupt's estate, when all creditors who have not proved their debts may prove the same. And commissioners at such meeting shall order the balance to be forthwith divided amongst such of the creditors as shall have proved their debts. And such second dividend shall be final, unless any action at law or suit in equity be depending, or any part of the estate be standing out not sold or disposed of, or unless some other estate or effects of the bankrupt shall afterwards come to the assignees, in which case they shall, as soon as may be, convert such estate and effects into money; and, within two calendar months after the same shall be so converted, divide the same in manner aforesaid. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 109. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 37.) Assignees shall file in the bankrupt's office an account of all unclaimed dividends in their hands, or be charged with 5 per cent. interest thereon; and under order of lord chancellor, the amount of such unclaimed dividends shall be invested, and, after three years, divided among the other creditors. G. 4. c. 16. § 110. New.

No action shall be brought against the assignees by any creditor who shall have proved under the commission; but if the assignees shall refuse to pay any such dividend, the lord chancellor may, on petition, order payment thereof, with interest for the time that it shall have been withheld, and the costs of the application. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 111. (As 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 12.)

If a trader, after a docket struck against him, give to the creditor who struck it any money, security, or other satisfaction for his less the sale as well as the seizure is complete | debt, or any part thereof, whereby such person may receive more in the pound in respect of his debts than other creditors, such payment, &c. shall be an act of bankruptcy; and the lord chancellor in such a case may either declare the commission issued upon the docket struck to be valid, and direct the same to be proceeded in, or may order it to be superseded, and a new commission may thereupon issue. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 8. Am.

The court, however, refused to supersede the commission upon this ground upon the petition of the bankrupt. Exparte Kirk, 15 Ves. 464. If at any meeting of creditors, after the bankrupt shall have passed his last examination (whereof and of the purport whereof twenty-one days' notice shall have been given in the London Gazette), if the bankrupt or his friends shall make an offer of composition, and security for such composition, which nine-tenths in number and value of the creditors assembled at such meeting shall agree to accept, another meeting for the purpose of deciding upon such offer shall be appointed, whereof such notice as aforesaid shall be given; and if, at such second meeting, nine-tenths in number and value of the creditors then present shall also agree to accept such offer, the lord chancellor shall, upon such acceptance being testified by them in writing, superscde the said commission. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 133. New.

And in deciding upon such order any creditor whose debt is below 201. shall not be reckoned in number, but the debt due to such creditor shall be computed in value; and any creditor to the amount of 50l. and upwards, residing out of England, shall be personally served with a copy of the notice of the meeting to decide upon such offer as aforesaid, and of the purpose for which the same is called, so long before such meeting as that he may have time to vote thereat, and such creditor shall be entitled to vote by letter of attorney, executed and attested in manner required for such creditor's voting in the choice of assignees. And if any creditor shall agree to accept any gratuity or higher composition, for assenting to such offer, he shall forfeit the debt due to him, together with such gratuity or composition, and the bankrupt shall (if thereto required) make oath before the commissioners that there has been no such transaction between him (or any person with his privity), and any of the creditors, and that he has not used any undue means or influence with any of them to attain such consent as aforesaid. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 134. New.

Creditor not both to sue and prove.—No creditor who has brought any action, or instituted any suit against any bankrupt in respect of a demand prior to the bankruptcy, or which might have been proved under the commission, shall prove a debt under the commission, or have any claim entered upon the proceedings without relinquishing such action or suit; and in case such bankrupt shall be in prison creditor, he shall not prove or claim as aforesaid without giving a sufficient authority in writing for the discharge of such bankrupt; and the proving or claiming a debt under a commission by any creditor shall be deemed an election by such creditor to take the benefit of such commission with respect to the debt so proved or claimed; provided that such creditor shall not be liable to the payment to such bankrupt, or his assignees, of the costs of such action or suit so relinquished by him; and that where any such creditor shall have brought any action or suit against any such bankrupt, jointly with any other person or persons, his relinquishing such action or suit against the bankrupt shall not affect any action or suit against such other person or persons. Provided also, that any creditor who shall have so elected to prove or claim, if the commission be afterwards superseded, may proceed in any action as if he had not so elected; and in bailable actions shall be at liberty to arrest the defendant de novo, if he has not put in bail below, or perfected bail above; or, if he has put in or perfected such bail, to have recourse against such bail by requiring the bail below to put in and perfect bail above within the first eight days in term, after notice in the London Gazette of the superseding such commission, and by suing the bail upon the recognizance if the condition thereof is broken. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 59. This section is founded on 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 8. with the addition of the last clause relating to any proceedings if commission should be afterwards superseded.

The proving under a separate commission against one of two partners, or obligors, &c., does not prevent the creditor from suing the other, but he will not be allowed to sue both; Bradley v. Millar, 1 Rose, 273; at least unless he gives an indemnity to the bankrupt against the costs and other consequences of the action. Exparte Read, 1 Rose 460: 1 Ves. & Beams, 346. And proof cannot be retracted in order that the creditor may avail himself of securities which turn out more available than he at first imagined. The proof under the commission is only an election to take the benefit of the commission as to that particular debt, and such proof does not preclude the creditor from bringing an action or suit for a distinct debt: but the former part of the section prohibiting a creditor who has brought an action, or instituted a suit, from proving a debt, or having any claim entered on such commission, without relinquishing such action or suit, applies to prevent a creditor from proving any distinct demand

Whenever it shall appear to the assignces, or to two or more creditors, who have each proved debts to the amount of 201. or upwards, that any debt proved under the commission is not justly due in whole or in part, such assignees or creditors may make representation thereof to the commissioners. And commissioners may summon and examine any person who shall have so proved, together with any person whose evidence may appear to the commissioners to be material, either in support of, or opposition to, such debt; and if commissioners, upon evidence given on both sides, or (if the person who shall have so proved, as aforesaid, shall not attend to be examined, having been first duly summoned, or notice having been left at his last place of abode), upon the evidence adduced by such assignces or creditors, as aforesaid, shall be of opinion that such debt is not due, either wholly or in part, the commissioners shall be at liberty to expunge the same either wholly or in part from the proceedings. Provided that such assignees or creditors, requiring such investigation, shall, before it is instituted, sign an undertaking, to be filed with the proceedings, to pay such costs as the commissioners shall adjudge to the creditor, who has proved such debt, such costs to be recovered by peti-Provided also, that such assignees or creditors may apply in the first instance by petition to the lord chancellor, or either party may petition against the determination of the commissioners. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 60. Mutual credit and set-off .- Where there has been mutual credit given by the bankrupt, and any other person, or where there are mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, the commissioners shall state the account between them, and one debt or demand may be set against another, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed by bankrupt before the credit given to, or the debt contracted by, him; and what shall appear due on either side, on the balance of such account, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively; and every debt or demand proveable against the estate of the bankrupt may also be set off in like manner, against such estate. Provided that the person claiming the benefit of such set-off had not, when such credit was given, notice of an act of bankruptey by such bankrupt committed. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 50. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30.

Under the present act (§ 50.) the party holding such notes may set them off, though he take them after an act of bankruptcy, provided he had no notice of it; and this, although he had notice of the banker's having stopped payment, for notice of an act of bankruptcy alone prevents the set-off under the new act. 10 Barn. & C. 217. If however, the party receives notes of a firm after he has notice of an act of bankruptcy of any of the partners, this will defeat his right of set-off. 1 Barn. & Adol. 343.

It is now settled that the same mutuality is necessary in case of debts and credits under the bankrupt law as in cases of set-off under the statutes of set-off; and this rule prevails in equity as well as in bankruptcy, and at law. And, therefore, a debt due from the bankrupt, jointly with another, cannot be set off against a debt due to the bankrupt alone, nor vica versa, unless indeed there is an express agreement before the bankruptcy to this effect in cases of fraud. And where A. is indebted to B. & C., and B. & C. to A., and B. by deed takes upon himself solely the debt to A.. he cannot set off the debt due from A. to himself and C. 10 Ves. 105: 11 Ves. 517: 2 Meriv. Proof of contingent debts .- If any bankrupt shall, before the issuing of the commission, have contracted any debt payable upon a contingency which shall not have happened before the issuing of such commission, the person with whom such debt has been contracted may, if he thinks fit, apply to the commissioners to set a value upon such debt, and the commissioners are required to ascertain the value thereof, and to admit such person to prove the amount so ascertained, and to receive dividends thereon: or if such value shall not be so ascertained before the contingency shall have happened, he may prove in respect of such debt, and receive dividends with the other creditors, not disturbing any former dividends; provided such person had not, when such debt was contracted, notice of any act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 56. 332: 3 Barn. & A. 186.

Apprentice indentures.—When any person shall be an apprentice to a bankrupt at the time of issuing the commission against him, the issuing of such commission shall be and enure as a complete discharge of the indentures whereby such apprentice was bound to such bankrupt. And if any sum shall have been really and bona fide paid by or on the behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt as an apprentice fee, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, upon proof thereof, to order any sum to be paid to or for the use of such apprentice which they shall think reasonable, regard being had, in estimating such sum, to the amount of the sum so paid by or on behalf of such apprentice to the bankrupt, and to the time during which such apprentice shall have resided with the bankrupt previous bankrupt, [this case of bail was not remedied to the issuing of the commission. 6 G. 4. c. by 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 8.], either to the sheriff 16. § 49. New.

Interest when proveable.—In all future commissions against persons liable upon any bill of exchange or promissory note whereupon interest is not reserved, and which shall be over due at the issuing of the commission, the holder of such bill of exchange or promissory note shall be entitled to prove for interest upon the same, to be calculated by the commissioners to the date of the commission, at such rate as is allowed by the Court of King's Bench in actions upon such bills or notes. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 57. New.

Distress.—No distress for rent made and levied after an act of bankruptcy upon the goods or effects of any bankrupt (whether before or after issuing the commission) shall be available for more than one year's rent, accrued prior to the date of the commission; but the landlord or party to whom the rent shall be due shall be allowed to come in as a creditor under the commission for the overplus of rent due, and for which the distress shall not be available. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 74.

not be available. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 74.

Commissions against partners.—Any creditor whose debt is sufficient to entitle him to petition for a commission against all the partners of any firm, may petition for a commission against any one or more partners of such firm; and every commission issued upon such petition shall be valid, although it does not include all the partners of the firm. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 16. (As 3 G. 4. c. 74.) But before the passing of the 3 G. 4. this could not have been done: it must have included all the ostensible partners; and if a joint commission had been bad as against one partner, it was deemed bad as against all. If a joint commission is sued out against some of the partners, and any other commission is sued out against the remaining partners, such commission shall be directed to the commissioners to whom such first commission was directed; and immediately after the adjudication under such other commission, the commissioners shall convey and assign all the estate, real and personal, of such bankrupt or bankrupts to the assignees chosen under the first commission; and after such conveyance, all separate proceedings under any such other commission shall be stayed; and every such commission shall, without affecting the validity of the first commission, be annexed to and form part of the same: provided that the lord chancellor may direct any such other commission to be issued to any other commissioners, or that such other commissioners shall proceed separately or in conjunction with the first commission. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 17. (As 3 G. 4. c. 81. § 9.)

Under a separate commission, not only the separate creditors, but joint creditors also, whose respective debts amount to 10*l*. or upwards, may prove their debts for the purpose of voting in choice of assignees under such commission, and of assenting to, or dissenting from, the certificate of such bankrupt or bankrupts; but such creditor shall not receive any dividend out of the separate estates of the bankrupt or bankrupts, until all the separate creditors shall have received the full amount of their respective debts, unless such creditor shall be a petitioning creditor in a commission against one member of a firm. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 62. Am.

Assignees of one or more members of a firm may use the names of the partners in suits, indemnifying them, and allowing them part of the proceeds under order of Chancery. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 89. (As 3 G. 4. c. 81. § 11.)

The proof of debts by creditors (corporations by their agents) is provided for as by former acts. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 46. Am.

Commissioners may pay six months' wages to clerks and servants, and they may prove under the commission for any sum beyond that amount. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 48. New.

Debts not due at the time of the bankruptcy, but accruing afterwards, may be proved, allowing rebate of interest. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 51. (As 7 G. 1. c. 31. § 1, 2: 46 G. 3. c. 135. § 2.)

Debts upon bottomry, and respondentia bonds, are provided for, as also policies of insurances. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 53. (As 49 G. 3.

c. 121. § 16.)

Annuity creditors may prove for the value of the annuity, calculated on the lapse of time since the grant. Sureties for annuitants are also to prove. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 54, 55. New.—The surety cannot be sued by the annuitant until the latter has proved under the commission for the value of the annuity and the arrears thereof. The word Payment appears to have been printed in the act instead of Arrears. See Eden's note on the section.

A plaintiff having obtained judgment is entitled to prove for his costs. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 58. New.

Suits shall not be abated by the death or removal of assignees. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 67. New.

Commissioners may proceed under the commission in cases when, on examination, it appears that an extent issued under an untrue pretence of the bankrupt being the king's debtor. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 71. (As 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. § 10.)

Leases and assignments, to the benefit of which the bankrupt is entitled, may be accepted or declined by the assignees, under order of the lord chancellor. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 75. Am.—So a vendor of lands to bankrupt may compel assignees to accept or decline the contract. Id. § 76. New.

Bankrupt's discharge from leases, &c.— Prior to the 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 19. the bankrupt remained liable to the landlord on the covenants in the lease, notwithstanding the as-ute the bankrupt was discharged from liability in respect of the rents and covenants where the assignees had accepted the lease; but unless they accepted, the bankrupt still remained liable. By the present act the bankrupt may discharge himself from the rents and covenants, whether the assignees accept or decline the lease. Bac. Ab. Bankrupt. (F.) (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.) The chancellor's jurisdiction is only where the assignees refuse or neglect either to accept or decline; and where they elect he cannot make an order, and he cannot decide whether they have elected or not; he can only send that question to be tried by a jury. Ibid. The act only applies to eases between the lessor and lessee or assignee, and not to cases between the lessee and the assignee of the lease. 3 Barn. & A. 521. And the lessee is not discharged by the assignce becoming bankrupt, and delivering up the lease to the lessor within fourteen days; for the act does not put an end to the lease, but merely discharges the bankrupt from the rents and covenants. 3 Barn. & Adol. 211.

The lord chancellor may order bankrupt to join in conveyances. § 78. Am. And if such order is not obeyed, the bankrupt's title is effectually barred by the order.

All commissions, deeds, and instruments relating to effects of bankrupts are exempted from the stamp duties. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 98. New.

Penalties of perjury, or the bankrupt or others swearing falsely. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 99. (As 3 G. 4. c. 81. § 6.)

All forfeitures under the act may be sucd for by the assignces for the benefit of the creditors. 6 G. 4. c. 16. \S 100. (As 13 Eliz. c. 7. \S 8: 1 Jac. 1. c. 15.)

Assignces shall keep account of effects of bankrupt, under the superintendance and control of commissioners, who may summon and commit assignces for neglect. 6 G. 4. c. 16. 5 101 4m. (As 5 G. 2 c. 30 5 26) commit assignees for neglect. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 101. Am. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 26.)

Creditors, at meeting for choice of assignees, shall direct into what banker's proceeds of bankrupt's effects shall be paid, but not to be paid to the commissioners' solicitor or assignees. 6 G. 4. c. 116. § 102. (As 5 G. 2. c. 20. § 31: 49 G. 3. c. 121. § 3.)

The commissioners, before the choice of assignces, and afterwards the assignces, with the consent of the commissioners, may make the bankrupt an allowance for the maintenance of himself and his family, until he shall have passed his last examination. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 114. New.—The allowance to the bankrupt, after obtaining his certificate, is reenacted by 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 128. as directed by 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 7, 8. from 3 to 10 per cent., according to the amount of dividend, but not exceeding, at the utmost, 600l.; and by § 129. one partner may receive such allowance, though another may not be entitled to it.

The bankrupt must deliver up all his books

5 G. 2. c. 30. § 36.)

The bankrupt is protected from arrest during his examination, or if arrested or in custody, may be discharged, on producing the summons of the commissioners. 6 G. 4. c.

16. § 117. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 5.)

Certificate.—Bankrupt having obtained his certificate, is freed from all future arrests and execution for claims proveable under commission; and shall be entitled to his discharge on producing his certificate, which shall be taken as evidence of all prior proceedings in the bankruptcy. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 126. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 7. 13.)

If there is any appearance of fraud on the part of the bankrupt, the court will not interfere in a summary way. 2 H. Black. 1.

And any of the grounds in § 130. may be shown against the discharge; and whenever the validity of the certificate is disputed, the court will not relieve without giving an opportunity to try an issue. And as the case ought to be perfectly clear, on a summary application, the court will not decide on motion the effect of a foreign bankruptcy. Bac. Ab. Bankrupt (N. 2.) (nota by Gwillim and Dodd.) The bankruptcy and certificate cannot be given in evidence on the general issue, but must be pleaded according to the statute. 1 Camp. 362: 12 East, 664: Bac. Ab. ubi supra, where see the cases digested as to the effect of the certificate.

The discharge under § 121. of the 6 G. 4. c. 16. extends to the goods as well as the person of the bankrupt, and where a certificated bankrupt's goods were seized under an execution for a debt due before the bankruptcy, the court set aside the execution. Davis v. Shapley, 1 Barn. & Adol. 54.

Second commission .- On a second commission against a person having been once bankrupt, if the bankrupt does not pay 15s. in the pound, his future effects will be liable, by becoming vested in the assignees, but his person is protected from arrest. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 127. (As 5 G. 2. c. 30. § 9. Am.) Under this section a third commission of bankrupt, where 15s. in the pound was not paid under the sccond, was declared an absolute nullity. Fowler v. Coster, 10 Barn. & C. 427.

Bankrupt's promise to pay debts.—Bankrupt shall not be liable upon any promise to pay a debt, discharged by his certificate, unless such promise be in writing. 6 G. 4. c. 16. § 131. New. It appears to be now settled after conflicting decisions, that the bankrupt cannot be arrested on any subsequent promise, since the 126th section declares that if arrested for such debt, he shall be discharged on common bail. 1 Barn. & C. 116: Bac. Ab. Bankrupt. (N.) (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

ENROLMENT OF PROCEEDINGS IN BANKRUPTCY.

The 2 and 3 W. 4. c. 114. recites that it is expedient that the record of all matters in bankruptcy should be under the same custody, and enacts that the records of all commissions of bankrupt, and of all proceedings under the same, which may have been entered of record under the 6 G. 4. c. 16. or any other act, shall be removed into the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall be kept as records of the said court, in such place as the judges of that court shall direct; and it shall be lawful for the judges to nominate the person heretofore appointed by the lord chancellor, to enter such proceedings of record, or in case of his refusal some other fit person, as the clerk of enrollment of the said court, at such salary, to be paid out of the fees thereafter mentioned, as the chancellor shall direct; and such clerk of enrollment shall have the care and custody of all the records so removed as aforesaid, and shall in like manner enter of record all proceedings in bankruptcy, which by this act or the 6 G. 4. c. 16. or the Bankrupt Court act, or any order, may be directed to be entered, on payment of the fees therein mentioned.

By § 4. any judge of the Bankrupt Court may on application made to him direct the officer to enter on record any commission at any time before issued, and the depositions and proceedings; provided that the officer may without special order enter on record the matters directed by the 6 G. 4. c. 16. and 2 W. 4. c. 56. the Bankrupt Court act to be entered. By § 5. all fiats and adjudications of bankruptcy, and appointments of assignees and certificates, shall be entered of record on the application of any party interested, on the payment of the fees therein mentioned, without any petition. And any judge may on petition direct any deposition or other proceeding to be entered.

By § 7. in the event of the death of any witness deposing to the petitioning creditor's debt, or trading, or act of bankruptcy, the assignees, and all persons claiming under them may read in evidence in support of such commission or fiat, any deposition of such deceased witness, relative to such petitioning creditor's debt, trading, &c., which shall be duly entered of record according to the act, provided that the depositions shall be read in evidence in such cases only where the party using the same shall defend some right, title, interest, or demand, which the bankrupt might have claimed or defended.

By § 8. no fiat in lieu of a commission, nor In case any surplus of the bankrupt's ef- any adjudication of bankruptcy, nor appointceived in evidence in any court of law or equi- 1 gery, except drawing of teeth, &c. 32 H. 8. c. ty, unless the same shall have been first entered of record.

By § 9. it is provided that on the production in evidence of any commission, fiat, adjudication, assignment, appointment of assignees, certificate, deposition, or other proceeding in bankruptcy, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the court, the same shall be read as evidence of such documents respectively and of the same having been so entered of record as aforesaid, without farther proof.

By the 3 and 4 W. 4. c. 47. with a view to assist the insolvent commissioners, his Majesty may direct the judges of the Bankruptcy Court other than the chief to act in the Insolvent Court, to go upon circuit, &c.; and such judges shall have the same powers as the insolvent commissioners.

By § 7. his Majesty by his warrant under his sign manual may authorise any one or more of the judges of the Bankruptcy Court to exercise the same jurisdiction and powers as by the 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 56. are given to three of such judges. And also by such or like warrant direct at what times the said Court of Review, the judges, or commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy shall hold their sittings.

BANNERET. Knight Banneret is a knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of the standard and making it as it were a banner; and such are allowed to display their arms on a banner in the king's army as barons do; and were next to barons in dignity. See stat. 5 R. 2. st. 2. c. 4; by which it seems such bannerets were anciently called by summons to parliament.

BARGAIN AND SALE, is an instrument whereby the property of lands and tenements is for valuable consideration granted and transferred from one person to another; it is called a real contract upon a valuable consideration for passing of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, by deed indented and inrolled. 2 Inst.

Since the introduction of uses and trusts, and the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. for transferring the possession to the use, the necessity of livery of seisin for passing a freehold in corporeal hereditaments, has been almost wholly superseded and in consequence of it, the conveyance by feoffment is now very little in use. Before the statute of uses, equitable estates of freehold might be created through the medium of trust, without livery; and by the operation of the statute, legal estates of freehold may now be created in the same way. They who framed the statute of uses evidently foresaw that it would render livery unnecessary to the passing of a freehold; and that a freehold of such things as do not lie in grant would become transferrable by parol only, without any solemnity whatever. To prevent the inconveniences which might arise from a mode of conveyance so uncertain in the proof, and so liable to misconstruction and abuse, it was enacted in the same session of parliament, that an estate of freehold should not pass by bargain and sale only, unless it was by indenture enrolled in one of the courts at Westminster, or in the county where the lands lie; such inrollment to be made within six months after the date of the indenture. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16: see 2 Inst. 675: Dy. 229: Poph, 48: Dalt. 63. The objects of this provision evidently were, first, to enforce the contracting parties to ascertain the terms of the conveyance, by reducing it into writing; secondly, to make the proof of it easy, by requiring their seals to it, and consequently the presence of a witness; and lastly, to prevent the frauds of secret conveyances, by substituting the more effectual notoriety of enrollment, for the more ancient one of livery. But the latter part of this provision, which, if it had not been evaded, would have introduced almost an universal register of conveyances of the freehold, in case of corporeal hereditaments, was soon defeated by the invention of the conveysurgeons of London; but not to practise sur- ance by lease and release, which sprung from and sales for terms of years. See 8 Co. 93: 2 Roll. Ab. 204: 2 Inst. 671. And the other parts of the statute were necessarily ineffectual in our courts of equity, because these were still left at liberty to compel the execution of trusts of the freehold, though created without deed or writing. The inconveniences from this insufficiency of the statute of enrollments are now in some measure prevented by stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3. which provides against conveying any lands or hereditaments for more than three years, or declaring trusts of them, otherwise than by writing. I Inst. 48. a. n. 3.

This may serve at present to illustrate the doctrine of Bargain and Sale; but to obtain a clear and distinct idea of this part of the law, see farther tit. Conveyance, Deed, Feoffment, Lease and Release, Use, &c. and 1 Inst. by Hargrave and Butler. Bac. Ab. Bargain and Sale. (7th ed.)

III. 1. Of the Consideration, and

2. Enrollment of a Bargain and Sale. IV. Of the Manner of pleading Bargains and Sales.

I. What Things may be bargained and Sold. -All things, for the most part, that are grantable by deed in any other way, are grantable by bargain and sale; and lands, rents, advowsons, tithes, &c. may be granted by it in feesimple fee-tail, for life, &c. 1 Rep. 176: 11 Rep. 25.

Any freehold or inheritance in possession, reversion, or remainder upon an estate for years, or life, or in tail, may be bargained and sold, but the deed shall be enrolled. 2 Co. 54:

Dyer, 309: 2 Inst. 671.

But if tenant for life bargains and sells his land by deed enrolled, it will be a forfeiture of his estate. 4 Leon. 251.

But a man seised of a freehold, may bargain and sell for years, and this shall be executed by the statute of uses. 27 H. 8. c. 10.

A man possessed of a term cannot bargain and sell it, so as to be executed by the statute.

2 Co. 35, 36: Poph. 76.

A bargain and sale of the profits of land, is a bargain and sale of the land itself; for the profits and the land are the same thing in substance. Dyer, 71.

A rent in esse may be bargained and sold, because this is a freehold within the statute: and, before the statute, a rent newly created might be bargained and sold, because when money, as an equivalent, was given, and ceremonies or words of law were wanting, the Chancery supplied them; but it seems that, the omission to extend the statute to bargains | since the statute, a rent newly created cannot be bargained and sold, because there ought to be a freehold in some other person, to be executed in cestui que use; but here can be no seisin of his rent in the bargainor, because no man can be seised of a rent in his own land, and consequently there can be no estate to be executed in the bargainee. Kelw. 85: 1 Co. 126:1 And. 327:1 Jones, 179. Sed qu. de hoc.

If A., by indenture enrolled, bargains and sells lands to B. and his heirs, with a way over other lands of A., this is void as to the way; for nothing but an use passes by the deed, and there can be no use of a thing not in esse, as a way, common, &c. before they are created. Cro. Jac. 189.

II. 1. By whom and to whom Bargain and Sale may be made.—The king, and all other persons that cannot be seised to a use, cannot bargain and sell; for at common law, when a man had sold his land for money without giving livery, the use only passed in equity, and this is now executed, and becomes a bargain and sale by the statute; but, antecedent to any such execution, there must be a use well raised, which cannot be without a person capable of being seised to a use, which the king is not, there being no means to compel him to perform the use or trust; for the Chancery has only a delegated power from the king over the consciences of his subjects; and the king is the universal judge of property, and ought to be perfectly indifferent, and not to take upon him the particular defence of any man's estate as a trustee. Bro. Feoffment to Uses, 33: Hard. 468: Poph. 72.

If tenant in tail bargains and sells his land in fee, this passes an estate determinable upon the life of the tenant in tail; for, at common law, the use could not be granted of any greater estate than the party had in him; now tenant in tail had an inheritance in him, but he could dispose of it only during his own life; and therefore, when he sells the use in fee, cestui que use has a kind of an inheritance, yet determined within the compass of a life; and the statute executes it in the same manner as he has the use, and consequently he will have some properties of a tenant in fee, and some of a tenant for life only; but if tenant for life bargains and sells in fee, this passes only an estate for life, for he could not pass the use of an estate for life to the bargainee, and the statute executes the possession as the party has the use. 10 Co. 96. 98: 1 Saund. 260. 261: 1 Co. 14. 15: Co. Litt.

A man may bargain and sell to a corporation, for they may take a use, though the money be given by the governors in their natural capacity. 10 Co. 24. 34: 2 Roll. Ab.

A man may bargain and sell to his son; but then the consideration of money ought to be expressed, and it ought to have all the fraudulent deeds. Dyer, 90. If no considerother circumstances of bargain and sale; but this shall operate as a covenant to stand seised, if there be none but the consideration of natural love and affection expressed. 7 Co. 40: 2 Co. 24: Cro. Eliz. 394: 1 Vent. 137: 1 Lev. 56. But if a son and heir bargains and sells the inheritance of his father, this is void, because he hath no right to transfer; the same law of a release. Keilw. 85: Co. Litt.

If an infant bargains and sells his land by deed indented and enrolled, yet he may plead non-age: for, notwithstanding the statute, the bargainee claims by the deed as at common law, which was, and therefore is, still defeasible by non-age. 2 Inst. 673.

If a husband seised of lands, in right of his wife, or tenant in tail, bargains and sells the trees growing on the lands, and dies before severance, the bargainee cannot afterwards cut them down and take them away. Mo. 41.

See tit. Baron and Feme, IV.

If there be two joint-tenants, and one of them makes a bargain and sale of his own estate in fee, and then the other dies, the other moiety shall survive to the bargainor: for since the freehold is in the bargainor, the in-heritance continues; but if such joint-tenant had bargained and sold totum statum suum in fee, though he died before enrollment; yet if the deed were afterwards enrolled, the moiety would not survive, but would pass to the bargainee. Cro. Jac. 53: Co. Lit. 186: 1 Bulst. 3.

2. By what Words a Bargain and Sale may be made .- The very words bargain and sell are not of absolute necessity in this deed, for other words equivalent will suffice; as if a man, seised of lands, sell the same to another, by the words alien or grant, the deed being made in consideration of money, and indented and enrolled, will be an effectual bargain and sale. In short, whatever words upon valuable consideration would have raised an use of any lands, &c. at common law, the same would amount to a bargain and sale within this act; as if a man by deed, &c. for a valuable consideration, covenants to stand seised to the use of another, &c. 2 Inst. 672: Cro. Jac. 210: Mo. 34: Cro. Eliz.

III. 1. Of the Consideration.—There must be a good consideration given, or, at least, said to be given, for lands in these deeds; and for a competent sum of money is a good consideration; but not the general words for divers considerations, &c. Mod. Ca. 777. Where money is mentioned to be paid in a bargain and sale, and in truth no money is paid, some of our books tell us this may be a good bargain and sale; because no averment will lie against that which is expressly affirmed by the deed, except it comes to be questioned whether fraudulent or no, upon the statute against ation of money is expressed in a deed of bargain and sale, it may be supplied by an averment that it was made for money: and after a verdict on a trial, it shall be intended that evidence was given at the trial of money paid. Ventr. 108. If lands are bargained and sold for money only, the deed is to be enrolled according to the statute; but if it be in consideration of money, and natural affection, &c. the estate will pass without it. 2 Inst. 672: 2 Lev. 56.

If a man, in consideration of so much money to be paid at a day to come, bargains and sells, the use passes presently; and after the day the party has an action for the money. for it is a sale, be the money paid presently or hereafter. Dyer, 337. a.

2. Enrollment of a Bargain and Sale .- If the deed of bargain and sale be not enrolled within the six months (which are to be reckoned after twenty-eight days to the month, the day of the date taken exclusively), it is of no force; so that if a man bargains and sells his land to me, and the trees upon it, although the trees might be sold by deed without enrollment, yet, in this case, if the deed be not enrolled, it will be good neither for the trees nor the land. Dyer, 90: 7 Rep. 40: 2 Bulst. A bargain and sale of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant by indenture not enrolled, will not pass the advowson or the manor, for it was to go as appendant. Bro. Cas. 240.

But in some cases, where a deed will not enure by way of bargain and sale, by reason of some defect therein, it may be good to another purpose. Dyer, 90: and see 5 Barn.

BARON, baro.] Is a French word, and hath divers significations here in England. First, it is taken for a degree of nobility next of scarlet, in respect whereof they are ac-and but one acknowledge it, and thereupon to a viscount. Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8. says, which signification it agrees with other nations, where baronia are as much as provinciæ: so that barons are such as have the government of provinces, as their fee holden of the king; some having greater, and others less authority within their territories; it is probable that formerly, in this kingdom, all those were called barons that had such seigniories as we now call courts-baron; as they were called seigneurs in France, who had any manor or lordship: and soon after the conquest, all such came to parliament, and sat as peers in the lord's house. But when, by experience, it appeared that the parliament was too much thronged by these barons, who were very numerous, it was, in the reign of King John, ordained, that none but the barones majores should come to parliament, who, for their extraordinary wisdom, interest, or quality, should be summoned by writ. After this, men observing the estate of nobility to be but casual, and depending merely upon the king's will, they obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male, who were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now, by inheritance, those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create at his pleasure. Nevertheless, there are still barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent: and those barons who were first by writ, may now also justly be called barons by prescription, for that they and their ancestors have continued barons beyond the memory of man. 2 Inst. 48. See tit. Peers of the Realm. The original barons by writ Camden refers to King Henry III.; and barons by letters patent or creation commenced 11 R. 2. Camb. Brit. page 109. To these is added a third kind of barons, called barons by tenure, which are some of our ancient barons (see Cruise on Dignities, ch. 2.); and likewise the bishops, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, always had place in the lords' house of parliament, as barons by succession. Selden Tit. of Honour, lib. 4. cap. 13. See tit. Parliament.

There are also barons by office; as the barons of the Exchequer, barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. In ancient records, the word baron includes all the nobility of England, because regularly, all noblemen were barons, though they had a higher dignity, and therefore the charter of King Edward I., which is an exposition of what relates to barons in Magna Charta, concludes testibus archiepiscopis, episcopis, baronibus, &c. And the great council of the nobility, when they consisted, besides earls and barons, of dukes, marquisses, &c. were all comprehended under the name de la councell de baronage. Glanv. cap. 4. BARONY, baronia.] Is that honour and territory which give title to a baron; see Baron; comprehending not only the fees and lands of temporal barons, but of bishops also, who have two estates; one as they are spiritual persons, by reason of their spiritual revenues and promotions; the other grew from the bounty of our English kings, whereby they have baronies and lands added to their spiritual livings and preferments. The baronies belonging to bishops are by some called regalia, because ex sola liberalitate regum eis olim concessa et a regibus in feudum tenentur. Our law considers marriage in no other A baron in this sense enjoyed a juri-diction light than as a civil contract. The heliness of the matrimonial state is left entirely to the ceclesiastical law, the temporal courts not having jurisdiction to consider unlawful marriage as a sin, but merely as a civil inconvenience. The punishment, therefore, or annulling of incestuous and unscriptural marriages, is the province of the Spiritual Court. -Taking marriage in a civil light, the law treats it as it does all other contracts; on this part of the subject, therefore, as well as on what relates to marriage promises, marriage settlements, &c. see this Diet. tit. Marriage.

By marriage, the husband and wife are one person in law; 1 Inst. 112; thet is, the very being, or legal existence, of the woman is suspended during the marriage; or, at least, is incorporated and consolidated into that of her husband: under whose wing, protection, and cover, she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-French a femecovert, [famina vivo cooperta;] is said to be covert-baron, or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron or lerd; and her condition during marriage is called Therefore, if an estate be her coverture. granted or conveyed to an husband and wile, and their heirs, they do not take by moieties, as other joint-tenants, but the entire estate is in both. 2 Lev. 39. And if an estate be granted to an husband and wire, and another person, the husband and wife have but one moiety, and the other person the other moiety. Lit. § 291.—A woman may be attorney for her husband; for that implies no separation from, but is rather a represent tion of her lord. F. N. B. 27. Upon this principle of an union of person in husband and wife, depend almost all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities that either of them acquire by the marriage.

We may consider the effect of these rights, duties, and disabilities, according to the following arrangement:

> I. 1. Of Grants and Contracts between Husband and Wife.

2. Of their being Evidence for or against each other.

II. What Acts and Agreements of the Wife before Marriage bind the Husband.

III. 1. Of the Husband's Power over the Person of his Wife, and of her Remedy for any Injury done to her by him.

2. Of Actions by him for criminal Conversation with her.

IV. Of his Interest in her Estate and Property; and hers in his, as to her Paraphernalia.

V. Where the Husband shall be liable to the Wife's Debts contracted before Marriage; and therein of a Wife that is Executrix or Administratrix.

VI. Of her Contracts during Marriage, and how far the Husband is bound by such Contracts; and where a Wife shall be considered as a Feme Sole. As to conveyances by, or to, or for, the benefit of a feme covert, see tit. Incapacitated Persons.

VII. Where she alone shall be punished for a criminal Offence, and where the Husband shall be answerable for what she does in a civil Ac-

VIII. What Acts done by the Husband or Wife alone, or jointly with the Wife, will bind the Wife; and therein of her Agreement or Disagreement to such Acts after the Death of the Husband.

IX. Where the Husband and Wife must join in bringing Actions.

X. Where they must be jointly sued.

XI. Of the Effects of Divorce; and of separate Maintenance, Alimony, and Pin Money .- And see tit. Divorce.

I. 1. Of Grants and Contracts between Husband and Wife.—At common law a man could neither in possession, reversion, or remainder, limit an estate to his wife; but by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. a man may covenant with other persons to stand seised to the use of his wife; or may make any other conveyance to her use, but he may not covenant with his wife to stand seised to her use. A man may devise lands by will to his wife, because the devise doth not take effect till after his death.

If the feme obligee take the obligor to husband, this is a release in law. The like law is if there be two femes obligees, and the one take the debtor to husband. 1 Inst. 264. b:

Cro. Car. 551.

In the case of Smith v. Stafford, (Hob. 216.) the husband promised the wife before marriage, that he would leave her worth 100l. The marriage took effect, and the question was, whether the marriage was a release of the promise. All the judges but Hobart were of opinion, that as the action could not arise during the marriage, the marriage could not be a release of it. The doctrine of this case seems to be admitted in the case of Gage v. Acton; (1 Salk. 325: 12 Mod. 290:) the case there arose upon a bond executed by a husband to the wife before marriage, with a condition, making it void if she survived him, and left her 1000l. Two of the judges were of opinion that the debt was only suspended, as it was on a contingency which could not by any possibility happen during the marriage. But Lord C. J. Holt differed from them; he admitted that a covenant or promise by the husband to the wife, to leave her so much in case she survives him is good, because it is only a future debt on a contingency, which cannot happen during the marriage, and that it is precedent to the debt; but that a bond debt was a present debt, and the condition was not precedent but subsequent, that made it a present duty; and the marriage was consequently a release of it. The case afterwards went into Chancery; the bond was there taken to be the agreement of the parties, and relief accordingly decreed. 2 Vern. 481. A like decree was made in the case of Carnel v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243: and see 2 Freem. 205. See tit. Bankrupt, IV. 3.

A. before marriage with M. agrees with M. by deed in writing, that she, or such as she should appoint, should, during the coverture, receive and dispose of the rents of her jointure, by a former husband, as she pleased. It was decreed that, this agreement being with the feme herself before marriage, was by the marriage extinguished. Chan. Ca. But where a man before marriage articled with the feme to make a settlement of cero. Litt. 112.

As to devises by femes covert, see tit. Devise, solemnized; they intermarried before the settlement, and then the baron died: on a bill by the widow for an execution of the articles, ley's case is denied to be law; Raym. 1; and it was decreed against the heir at law of the baron, that the articles should be executed. 2 Vent. 343.

In a settlement on an intended marriage, the man covenanted to pay a sum of money at a given time after the marriage; and the real estate of the intended wife was conveyed to certain uses and trusts, limited to arise on the solemnization of the marriage. The marriage proved void, but the parties lived together as husband and wife for a year before the nullity was discovered; upon which a second settlement was made, and the parties remarried. Held, that the parties being of full age, and under no disability, the covenant for the payment of the money was put an end to by the second settlement; and that though the legal estate in the wife's property passed under the first settlement, it was not in equity binding on the parties, but the rights of the wife and her issue were also regulated by the second settlement. Robinson v. Dickinson, 3 Russ. 309.

2. Of their being evidence for or against each other.—In trials of any sort, husband and wife are not allowed to be evidence, for or against each other; partly because it is impossible their testimony should be indifferent; but principally because of the union of person; if they were admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of law, "nemo in propria causa testis esse debet;" and if against each other, they would contradict another maxim, "nemo tenetur seipsum accusare." But where the offence is directly against the person of the wife, this rule has been usually dispensed with. State Trials, vol. i. Lord Audley's case, Stra. 633. And therefore by stat. 3 H. 7. c. 2. in case a woman be forcibly taken away and married, she may be a witness against such her husband, in order to convict him of felony. For in this case she can with no propriety be reckoned his wife; because a main ingredient, her consent, was wanting to the contract; and also there is another maxim of law, that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong; which the ravisher here would do, if by forcibly marrying a woman he could prevent her from being a witness, who is perhaps the only witness to that very fact. 1 Comm. 443, 4. See tit. Marriage.

The husband cannot be a witness against the wife, nor the wife against the husband to prove the first marriage on an indictment, on stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11. for a second marriage. But the second wife or husband may be a witness; the second marriage being void. Bull. N. P. 287: 1 Hall P. C. 693.

In Raym. 1. there is an opinion that a husband and wife may be witnesses against one another in treason; but the contrary is herself cannot, without the consent of her adjudged, 1 Brownl. 47: see 2 Keb. 403: husband, determine the lease in either case. and 1 H. P. C. 301. The rule in Lord Aud- 5 Co. 10.

perhaps was admitted on the particular circumstances of the facts, which were detestable in the extreme, the husband having assisted in the rape of his wife. In an information against two, one for perjury, and the other for subornation, in swearing on the trial of an ejectment that a child was suppositious, the husband of one of the defendants was admitted to give evidence of the birth, but refused as to the subornation. Sid. 377: 2 Keb. 403: Mar. 120. And the evidence of n wife has been disallowed even against others, where her husband might be indirectly in danger. Dalt. 540: Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 607, 8. A husband and wife may demand surety of the peace against each other, and their evidence must then of necessity be admitted against each other. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253: see Stra. 1231. and the other authorities cited by Hawkins.

The wife of a bankrupt may be examined by the commissioners.—See tit. Bankrupt.

It seems that a wife may be evidence to prove a fraud on the husband, particularly if she were party thereto, as in case of a marriage-brocage agreement. Sid. 431: see post, II. And in cases of seduction, L. E. 55. And in civil actions, where the husband is not concerned in the action, but the evidence is collateral to discharge the defendant by charging the husband. 1 Stra. 504: and see I Stra. 527. A widow cannot be asked to disclose conversations between herself and her late husband. Ry. & Moo. 198: and see 1 Carr. & Pa. 364.

A woman was allowed to give evidence for a man with whom she was cohabiting, passing by his name, and held out to the world as his wife: Batthews v. Galindo, 4 Bing. 610: contrary to the former law on this point. See 1 Price, 81.

II. What Acts of the Wife before Marriage bind the Husband .- As by marriage the husband and wife become one person in law, therefore such an union works an extinguishment or revocation of several acts done by her before the marriage; and this not only for the benefit of the husband, but likewise of the wife, who, if she were allowed at her pleasure to rescind and break through, or confirm several acts, might be so far influenced by her husband as to do things greatly to her disadvantage. 4 Co. 60: 5 Co. 10: Keilw. 162: Co. Lit. 55: Hetl. 72: Cro. Car. 304.

But in things which would be manifestly to the prejudice of both husband and wife, the law does not make her acts void; and therefore if a feme sole makes a lease at will, or is lessee at will, and afterwards marries, the marriage is no determination of her will, so as to make the lease void; but she

So where a warrant of attorney was given | The courts of law, however, still permit a to confess a judgment to a feme sole, the court gave leave, notwithstanding the marriage, to enter up judgment; for that the authority shall not be deemed to be revoked or countermanded, because it is for the husband's advantage; like a grant of a reversion to a feme sole, who marries before attornment, yet the tenant may attorn afterwards; otherwise if a feme sole gives a warrant of attorney, and marries, for this is to charge the husband. 1 Salk. 117. 399.

But if a feme sole makes her will, and devises her land to J. S., and afterwards marries him, and then dies, yet J. S. takes nothing by the will, because the marriage was a revocation of it. 4 Co. 60: see tits.

Devise, Will.

Equity will set aside the intended wife's contract, though legally executed, when they appear to have been entered into with an intent to deceive the husband, and are in derogation of the rights of marriage; as where a widow made a deed of settlement of her estate, and married a second husband, who was not privy to such settlement; and it appearing to the court, that it was in confidence of her having such estate that the husband married her, the court set aside the deed as fraudulent; so where the intended wife, the day before her marriage, entered privately into a recognizance to her brother, it was decreed to be delivered up. See 2 Chan. Rep. 41. 79. 81: 2 Vern. 17: 2 Vez. 264: see ante, 1, 2.

But where a widow, before her marriage with a second husband, assigned over the greatest part of her estates to trustees for children by her former husband; though it was insisted that this was without the privity of the husband, and done with a design to cheat him, yet the court thought, that a widow might thus provide for her children before she put herself under the power of a husband; and it being proved that 8000l. was thus settled, and that the husband had suppressed the deed, he was decreed to pay the whole money without directing any account. 1 Vern. 408. Marriage is not a release of a claim which a woman has against her husband in character of executor. 12 Ves. 497.

III. 1. Of the Husband's Power over the Person of his Wife, and of her Remedy for any Injury done to her by him .- By marriage the husband hath power over his wife's person; and by the old law he might give her moderate correction; 1 Hawk. P. C. 258; but his power was confined within reasonable bounds. Moor. 874: F. N. B. 80. In the time of Charles II. this power of correction began to be doubted. 1 Sid. 113: 3 Keb. 433. damages. Bull. So may the husband have security of the peace against his wife. Stra. 1207.

But a wife cannot, either by herself, or her prochein amy, bring a homine replegiando against her husband; for he has by law a right to the custody of her, and may, if he think fit, confine her, but he must not imprison her; if he does, it will be a good cause for her to apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce propter sævitiam; and the nature and proceedings in the writ de homine replegiando show that it cannot be maintained by the wife against her husband. Prec. in Ch. 492.

The courts of law will grant a habeas corpus to relieve a wife from unjust imprison-

2. Of Actions for Criminal Conversation. -The ground of the action for adultery is the injury done to the husband, by alienating the affections of his wife, destroying the comforts arising from her company, and that of her children, and imposing on him a spurious

For this, among other reasons, it has been ruled that no action for crim. con. can be brought for act of adultery after separation between husband and wife. 5 T. R. 357. This doctrine was shaken in a later case. See Chambers v. Caulfield, 6 East, 244.

In this action the plaintiff must bring proof of the actual solemnization of a marriage; nothing shall supply its place: cohabitation or reputation are not sufficient, nor any collateral proof whatever. 4 Burr. 2057: Bull. N. P. 27: Doug. 162: Esp. N. P. 343. But it is not necessary to prove a marriage according to the ceremony of the church of England; if the parties are Jews, Quakers, &c. proof of a marriage according to their rites is sufficient. Bull. N. P. 28: see Bac. Ab. tit. Marriage, and Divorce. (7th ed.) The confession of the wife will be no proof against the defendant; but a discourse between her and the defendant may be proved, and the defendant's letters to her; but the wife's letters to the defendant will be no evidence for him.

The injury in case of adultery being great, the damages are generally considerable, but depend on circumstances; such on the one hand as go in aggravation of damages, and to show the circumstances and property of defendant; or on the other hand, such as go in extenuation of the offence, and mitigation of defendant may prove particular acts of crimi- stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. which makes them void. nality in the wife, previous to her guilt with him, but not her general character, in extenuation. If adultery be committed with another man's wife without any force, but by her own consent, though the husband may have assault and battery, and lay it vi et armis, yet they shall in that case punish him below for that very offence; for an indictment will not lie for such an assault and battery; neither shall the husband and wife join in an action at common law; and therefore they proceed below, either civilly, that is, to divorce them, or criminally, because they were not criminally prosecuted above. 7 Mod. 81.

IV. Of his Interest in her Estate and Property.—The freehold or right of possession of all her lands of inheritance, vests in the husband immediately upon the marriage, the right of property still being preserved to her. 1 Inst. 351. a. 273. b. 326. b. in note. This estate he may convey to another. An incorrect statement in the book called Cases in Equity, temp. Ld. Talbot, p. 167. of what was delivered by his lordship in the case of Robinson v. Cummins, seems to have given rise to a notion that the husband could not make a tenant to the præcipe of his wife's estate, for the purpose of suffering a common recovery of it, without the wife's previously joining in a fine; but it now seems to be a settled point that he can. See Cruise on Recoveries: and post, tit. Fine and Recovery. By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. leases of the wife's inheritance must be made by indenture, to which the husband and wife are both parties, to be sealed by the wife, and the rent to be reserved to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the wife; and the husband shall not alien the rent longer than during the coverture, except by fine levied by husband and wife. By the same act it is provided, that no fine or other act done by the husband only of the inheritance or freehold of his wife, shall be any discontinuance thereof, or prejudicial to the wife or her heirs, but they may enter according to their rights; fines whereunto the wife is party and privy [and the above-mentioned leases] only excepted. As to chattels real, and things in action of the wife; where the husband survives the

At the common law no person had a right to administer. The ordinary might grant administration to whom he pleased, till the statutes which gave it to the next of kin; and if there were persons of equal kindred, whichever took administration first, was entitled to the surplus. The statute of distribution was made to prevent this. Where the wife was entitled only to the trust of a chattel real, or to any chose in action, or contingent interest in any kind of personalty, it seems to have been doubted, whether, if the husband survived her, he was entitled to the benefit of it or not. See 1 Inst. 351: 4 Inst. 871: Roll. Ab. 346: All. 15: Cro. Eliz. 466: 3 C. R. 37: Gilb. Ca. Eq. 234: see tit. Executor, I.

Upon the construction of the statute of distributions (see tit. Executor, V. 8.) it has been held that the husband may administer to his deceased wife; and that he is entitled, for his own benefit, to all her chattels real, things in action, trusts and every other species of personal property, whether actually vested in her, and reduced into possession or contingent, or recoverable only by action or suit. It was, however, made a question after the stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3. § 25. whether, if the husband having survived his wife, afterwards die, during the suspense of the contingency upon which any part of his wife's property depended, or without having reduced into possession such of her property as lay in action or suit, his representative, or his wife's next of kin, were entitled thereto. , But, by a series of cases, it is now settled, that the representative of the husband is entitled as much to this species of his wife's property, as to any other; that the right of administration follows the right of the estate, and ought, in case of the husband's death after the wife, to be granted to the next of kin of the husband. See Mr. Hargrave's Law Tracts, 475. And that if administration de bonis non of the wife is obtained by any third person, he is a trustee for the representative of the husband. See 1 P. Wms. 378. 382: see Bac. Ab. Baron and Feme (C. 31): and see 2. B. & Adol. 273.

If the wife survive the husband.—As to this point, there is a material difference with respect to chattels real, and goods, cattle, money, and other chattels personal. All chattels personal become the property of the husband immediately on the marriage; he may dispose of them without the consent or concurrence of his wife; and at his death, whether he dies

2 Inst. 510. But although the husband's representative is entitled to the wife's choses in action not reduced into possession by the husband, yet the right of suing for them is in the wife's representative, and the husband's representative cannot sue. Betts v. Kimpton, 2 Barn. & Adol. 273. It now seems settled that if the wife survive her husband she will be entitled to her choses in action, notwithstanding the husband has become bankrupt, or has made a particular assignment of them, unless the assignce in the husband's life reduce them into possession. 9 Ves. 87: 2 Madd. 16: 1 Russell, 1: 3 Russell, 65: Bac. Ab. Baron and Feme. (C.) (ed. Gwillim & Dodd.) Where a married woman lent money to her husband, and took a note for it from him and two sureties, it was held that after his death she might sue the other parties to the note, for it was a chose in action, and survived to her. Richards v. Richards, 2

Barn. & Adol. 447. With respect to her chattels real, as leases for years, there is a distinction between those which are in the nature of a present vested interest in the wife, and those in which she has only a possible or contingent interest. To explain this fully, it seems proper to mention, that it was formerly held that a disposition of a term of years to a man for his life, was such a total disposition of the term, that no disposition could be made of the possible residue of the term; or at least, that if it was made, the first devisee might dispose of the whole term, notwithstanding the devise of the residue. This is reported (Dy. 47.) to have been determined by all the judges in a case in 6 Ed. 6. The Court of Chancery first broke through this rule and supported such future dispositions when made by way of trust; their example was followed by the courts of law in Mat. Manning's case, 8 Rep. 94. b: and Lampet's case, 10 Rep. 46. b. This disposition of the residue of a term, after a previous disposition of it to one for life, operates by way of executory devise, and the interest of the devisee of the residue is called a possibility. This possible interest in a term of years differs from a contingent interest created by way of remainder. If a person limits a real estate to A. for life, and after the decease of A., and if B. dies in A.'s life time, to C. for a term of years; this operates not as an executory devise, but as a remainder, and therefore is not to be considered as a possibility, but as a contingent interest.

Now if a person marries a woman possessed of, or entitled to, the trust of a present, actual, and vested interest in a term of years, or any other chattel real, it so far becomes his property, that he may dispose of it during her life; and if he survives her, it vests in him absolutely; but if he makes no disposition of it, and she survives him, it belongs to her, and not to his representatives: nor is he his personal representative. See 10 Co. 42: in this case entitled to dispose of it from her 2 Inst. 510. But although the husband's re- by will. Prec. Ch. 418: 2 Vern. 270.

If a person marries a woman entitled to a possible or contingent interest in a term of years, if it is a legal interest, that is, such an interest, as, upon the determination of the previous estate, or the happening of the contingency, will immediately vest in possession in the wife, there the husband may assign it; unless perhaps, in those cases, where the possibility or contingency is of such a nature that it cannot happen during the husband's life-time. 1 Inst. 46. b: 10 Rep. 51. a: Hutt. 17: 1 Salk. 326. But it is an exception to this rule, at least in equity, that if a future or executory interest in a term, or other chattel, is provided for the wife, by or with the consent of the husband, there he cannot dispose of it from the wife, as it would be absurd to allow him to defeat his own agreement. But this supposes the provision to be made before marriage: for, if made subsequent, it is a mere voluntary act, and void against an assignee for a valuable consideration. Ca. 225: 1 Vern. 7. 18: 1 Eq. Ab. 58.

If a wife have a chattel real en autre droit, as executor or administrator, the husband cannot dispose of it. 1 Inst. 351. a. But if the wife had it as executrix to a former husband, the husband may dispose of it. 3 Wils. 277.—And if a woman be joint-tenant of a chattel real, and marries and dies, the husband shall not have it, but it survives to the other joint-tenant. 1 Inst. 185. b.—And the husband hath not power over a chattel real, which the wife hath as guardian. Plovd. 294. As to the husband's interest in the wife's chattels real, see Bac. Ab. Baron and Feme.

(C. 2A

Things in action do not vest in the husband till he reduces them into possession. It has been held that the husband may sue alone for a debt due to the wife upon bond (this means a bond made to the wife during marriage, for if it be made to her before marriage, she must join in suing. 1 Chitt. Plead. 32.) but that if he join her in the action, and recover judgment and die, the judgment will survive to her. 1 Vern. 396: see All. 36: 2 Lev. 107: 2 Vez. 677: see 1 Chitt. on Plead. 35. The principle of this distinction appears to be, that his bringing the action in his own name alone is a disagreement to his wife's interest, and implies it to be his intention that it should not survive to her; but if he brings the action in the joint names of himself and his wife, the judgment is that they both should recover; so that the surviving wife, and not the representative of the husband, is to bring the scire facias on the judgment. In 3 Atk. 21. Lord Hardwicke is reported to say, that at law, if the husband has recovered a judgment, for a debt of the wife, and dies before execution, the surviving wife, not the husband's executors, is entitled.

These appear to be the general principles of the courts of law, respecting the interest | nature, subject to the same equity as the huswhich the husband takes in, and the power wife; but the courts of equity have admitted many very nice distinctions respecting them.

1. A settlement made before marriage, if made in consideration of the wife's fortune, entitles the representative of the husband, dying in his wife's life-time, to the whole of her things in action; but it has been said that, if it is not made in consideration of her fortune, the surviving wife will be entitled to the things in action, the property of which has not been reduced [into his power] by the husband in his life-time; so, if the settlement is in consideration of a particular part of her fortune, such of the things in action, as are not comprised in that part, it has been said, survive to the wife. Sec Prec. Ch. 63: 2 Vern. 502: Talb. 168. In the case of Blois v. Countess of Hereford, (2 Vern. 501.) a settlement was made for the benefit of the wife, but no mention was made of her personal estate; it was decreed to belong to the representative of the husband; and it was then said, that in all cases where there was a settlement equivalent to the wife's portion, it. should be intended that he is to have the portion, though there is no agreement for that purpose. See Eq. Ab. 69. And it appears that if the settlement is made in consideration of her fortune without saying more, it entitles the husband to all her then personal property, but not to such as afterwards accrues to her; but aliter if it appears it was the agreement between the parties that he should have not only her then present but all subsequently acquired personalty. 6 Ves. 395: 2 Ves. I. 607: 9 Ves. 89: 10 Ves. 574.

2. If the husband cannot recover the things in action of his wife by the assistance of a court of equity, the court, upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, will not give him their assistance to recover the property, unless he either has made a previous provision for her, or agrees to do it out of the property prayed for: or unless the wife appears in court, and consents to the property being made over to him. 2 P. Wms. 641: 3 P. Wms. 12: Toth. 179: 2 Vez. 669. Neither will the court, where no settlement is made for the wife, direct the fortune to be paid to the husband, in all cases where she does appear personally and consent to it. 2 Vez. 579. It appears to be agreed, that the interest is always payable to the husband, if he maintains his wife. 2 Vez. 561, 562. Yet where the husband receives a great part of the wife's fortune, and will not settle the rest, the court will not only stop the payment of the residue of her fortune, but will even prevent his receiving the interest of the residue, that it may accumulate for her benefit.

3. Voluntiers and assignees under a com-band; and are therefore required by the given him over, the things in action of his court, if they apply for its assistance in recovering the wife's fortune, to make a proper provision for her out of it. 2 Atk. 420: 1 P. Wms. 382. But if the husband actually assigns either a trust term of his wife, or a thing in action, for a valuable consideration, the court does not compel the assignee to make a provision for the wife. 1 Vern. 7: see 1 Vern. 18.—and Cox's P. Wms. i. 459. in note, where Lord Thurlow is reported to have said, in a case before him, "that he did not find it any where decided that, if the husband makes an actual assignment, by contract, for a valuable consideration, the assignee should be bound to make any provision for the wife: but that a court of equity has much greater consideration for an assignment actually made by contract, than for an assignment made by mere operation of law; for in this latter case, the creditor should be exactly in the case of the husband, and subject precisely to the same equity in favour of the wife."

4. But notwithstanding the uniform and earnest solicitude of the courts of equity, to make some provision for the wife out of her fortune, in those cases where the husband, or those claiming under him by act of law, cannot come at it without the assistance of those courts, still it does not appear that they have ever interfered to prevent its being paid the husband, or to inhibit him from recovering it at law. 2 Atk. 420.—In Pre. Ch. 414. it is observed, that if the trustees pay the wife's fortune, it is without remedy.

5. Money due on mortgage is considered as a thing in action. It seems to have been formerly understood, that as the husband could not dispose of lands mortgaged in fee without the wife, the estate remaining in the wife carried the money along with it to her and her representatives; but that us to the trust and the absolute power of a term of years, there was nothing to keep a mortgage debt, secured by a term, from going to the husband's representatives: but this distinction no longer prevails; and it is now held, that though in the case of a mortgage in fee, the legal fee of the lands in mortgage continues in the wife, she is but a trustee, and the trust of the mortgage follows the property of the debt. See 1 P. Wms. 458: 2 Atk. 207.

6. If baron and feme have a decree for money in right of the feme, and then the baron dies, the benefit of the decree belongs to the feme, and not to the executor of the husband. This was certified by Hyde, Ch. J. and his certificate confirmed by Lord Chancellor. 1 Cha. Ca. 27. If the wife has a judgment, and it is extended upon an elegit, the husband may assign it without a consideration. So if a judgment be given in trust for a feme sole, who marries, and, by consent of her trustees, mission of bankruptcy are, in cases of this is in possession of the land extended, the husand, by the same reason, if the feme has a riage, and are liable to his debts, if his perdecree to hold and enjoy lands until a debt sonal estate is not sufficient. 2 Atk. 104. due to her is paid, and she is in possession of the land under this decree, and marries, the quire a property in all the personal sub-husband may assign it without any considera-stance of the wife, so, in one particular tion, for it is in nature of an extent. 3 P. instance, the wife may acquire a property in Wms: 200.

The above summary on this part of the law relative to baron and feme, is principally taken from the ingenious and laborious notes by Mr. Butler, on 1 Inst. 351, a; to which may be added the following miscellaneous observa-

7. If a lease be conveyed by a feme sole, in trust for the use of herself, if she afterwards marries, it cannot be disposed of by the husband; if she dies, he shall not have it, but the executors of the wife. March, 44: see 2 Vern.

If a feme, having a rent for life, takes husband, the baron shall have action of debt for the rent incurred during the coverture, after the death of the feme. 1 Danv. 719. And arrears due in the life-time of the husband, after his death shall survive to the wife, if she outlives him, and her administrators after her death. 2 Lut. 1151. A feme, lessee for life, rendering rent, takes husband and dies, the baron shall be charged in action of debt for the rent which was grown during the coverture, because he took the profits out of which the rent ought to issue. Keilw. 125: Raym. 6.

If a feme covert sues a woman in the spiritual court for adultery with her husband, and obtains a sentence against her and costs, the husband may release these costs, for the marriage continues; and whatever accrues to the wife during coverture belongs to the husband; per Holt, Ch. 8. And as the husband may generally acsome of her husband's goods, which shall remain to her after his death, and not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia; which is a term borrowed from the Civil Law, and is derived from the Greek maga pepun, signifying something over and above her dower. Our law uses it to signify the apparel and ornaments of the wife suitable to her rank and degree; and therefore even the jewels of a peeress, usually worn by her, have been held to be paraphernalia. Moor, 213. These she becomes entitled to at the death of her husband, over and above her jointure or dower, and preferably to all other representatives. Cro. Car. 343. 347: 1 Ro. Ab. 911: 2 Leon. 106. Neither can the husband devise by his will such ornaments or jewels of his wife; though during his life perhaps, he hath the power to sell or give them away. Noy's Max. c. 49:2 Comm. 436. But if she continue in the use of them till his death, she shall afterwards retain them against his executors and administrators, and all other persons except creditors, where there is a deficiency of assets. 1 P. Wms. 730. And her necessary apparel is protected even against the claim of creditors. Noy's Max. c. 49.

That the widow's paraphernalia are subject to the debts, but preferred to the legacies of the husband; and that the general rules of marshalling assets are applicable in giving effeet to such priority, see not only 1 P. Wms. 730, quoted above, but also 2 P. Wms. 544: 2 Atk. 104. 642: 3 Atk. 369. 393: 2 Vez. 7: see also Cha. Ca. 240: 1 C. R. 27.

In one place Rolle says, the wife shall have a necessary bed and apparel. 1 Roll. 911. 20. See farther, on the subject of paraphernalia, Com. Dig. tit. Baron & Feme (F. 3.): 17 Vez. 273: Roper, Husband and Wife, c. 17.

V. Where the Husband shall be liable to the Wife's Debts contracted before Marriage; and therein of a Wife that is Executrix or Administratrix .- If a feme sole indebted takes husband, her debt becomes that of the husband and wife, and both are to be sued for it; but the husband is not liable after the death of the wife, unless there be a judgment against both during the coverture. 1 Roll. Ab. 351: F. N. B. 120. And if the husband dies before the debt is recovered, the wife surviving is liable. 1 Camp. R. 89. Where there is judgment against a feme sole, who marries and dies, the baron shall not be charged therewith; though, if the judgment be had upon scire facias against baron and feme, and then Trinkets and jewels given to a wife before the feme dies, he shall be charged. 3 Mod. if, pending the action, she marries, this shall not abate the action; but the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against her, according as the action was commenced. 1 Lill, 217: Trin. 12 W. 3. And if habeas corpus be brought to remove the cause, the plaintiff is to move for a procedendo on the return of the habeas corpus: also the court of B. R. may refuse it, where brought to abate a just action. 1 Salk. 8.

In general the husband is liable to the wife's debts contracted before marriage, whether he had any portion with her or not; and this the law presumes reasonable; because by the marriage, the husband acquires an absolute interest in the personal estate of the wife, and has the receipt of the rents and profits of her real estate during coverture; also whatever accrues to her by her labour, or otherwise, during the coverture, belongs to the husband; so that in favour of creditors, and that no person's act should prejudice another, the law makes the husband liable for those debts with which he took her attached. F. N. B. 265: 20 H. 6. 22. h: Moor, 468: 1 Roll. Ab. 352: 3 Mod. 186.

If baron and feme are sued on the wife's bond, entered into by the feme before mar-riage, and judgment is had thereupon, and the wife dies before execution, yet the husband is liable; for the judgment has altered the debt. 1 Sid. 337.

If judgment be against husband and wife, he dies, and she survives, execution may be against her. 1 Roll. Ab. 890. l. 10. 50. See Where a man marries a widow executrix, &c. her evidence shall not be allowed to charge her second husband with more than she can prove to have actually come to her hands. Agreed per cur. Ab. Eq. Ca. 227. Hil. 1719.

D. confessed a judgment to F., who made his wife, the plaintiff, executrix, and died; she administered, and married a second husband, and then, she alone, without her husband, acknowledged satisfaction, though no real satisfaction was made. The court held that this was not good. Sid. 31.

If a feme executrix takes baron, and he releases all actions, this shall be a bar during the coverture without question; by the justices. Br. Releases, pl. 29.

If a feme executrix take baron, and the baron puts himself in arbitrament for death of the testator, and award is made, and the baron dies, the feme shall be barred; per tot' cur'. If a man marries an administratrix to a former husband, who, in her widowhood. wasted the assets of her intestate, the husband is liable to the debts of the intestate during the life of the wife; and this shall be deemed a devastavit in him. Cro. Car. 603.

And if an executrix marry, and she and her husband, on being sued in equity, admit assets, the assets become a debt due from the husband, and may be proved under a commission of bankrupt against him. 1 Scho. & Lef. 172.

VI. Of her Contracts during Marriage. and how far the Husband is bound by such Contracts; and where a Wife shall be considered as a Feme Sole .- The general rule of the common law is, that every gift, grant, or disposition of goods, lands, or other things whatsoever, and all obligations and feoffments made by a feme covert, without her husband's consent, are void. 1 H. 5. 125: Fitz. Covert

The husband is obliged to maintain his wife in necessaries; yet they must be according to his degree and estate, to charge him: and necessaries may be suitable to a husband's degree of quality, but not to his estate; also they may be necessaries, but not ex necessitate, to charge the husband. 1 Mod. 129: 1 Nels. Ab. 354: see 5 Bing. 187: 3 Barn. & C. 631. If a woman buys things for her necessary apparel, though without the consent of her husband, yet the husband shall be bound to pay it. Brownl. 47. And if the wife buys any thing for herself, children, or family, and the baron does any act precedent or subsequent, whereby he shows his consent, he may be charged thereupon. 1 Sid. 120. The expences of a feme covert's funeral, paid by her father while her husband had left her and was gone abroad, deemed necessaries. H. Black. Rep. 90. Though a wife is very lewd, if she cohabits with her husband, he is chargeable for all necessaries for her, because he took her for better, for worse: and so he is if he runs away from her, or turns her away; but if she goes away from her husband, then as soon as such separation is notorious, whoever gives her credit doth it at his peril, and the husband is not liable, unless he takes her again. 1 Salk. 119: see 1 Stra. 647. 706: and as to actions against femes covert having cloped, see 2 Black. Rep. 1079.

If a man cohabits with a woman, allows her to assume his name, and passes her for his wife, though in fact he is not married to her, yet he is liable to her contracts for necessaries; and therefore ne unques accouple is a bad plea in an action on the case for the debt of a wife; it is good only in dower or on appeal. Camp. 245: 3 Camp. 215.

Although a husband be bound to pay his court declared it to be their opinion, that a wife's debts for her reasonable provision, yet feme covert living apart from her husband, if she parts from him, especially by reason of any misbehaviour, and he allows her a maintenance, he shall never after be charged with her debts, till a new cohabitation; but if the husband receive her, or come after her, and lie with her but for a night, that may make him liable to the debts. Pasch. 3 Ann. Mod. Cas. 147. 171. If there be an agreement in writing between husband and wife to live separate, and that she shall have a separate maintenance, it shall bind them both till they both agree to cohabit again; and if the wife is willing to return to her husband, she may; but it has been adjudged, that the husband hath no coercive power over the wife to force her, though he may visit her, and use all lawful means in order to a reconciliation. Mich. G. 1. Mod. Ca. in L. & E. 22.

Where there is a separation by consent, and the wife hath a separate allowance, those who trust her, do it upon her own credit. 1 Salk. 116. If a husband makes his wife an allowance for clothes, &c., which is constantly paid her, it is said he shall not be charged. 1 Sid. 109. And if he forbids particular persons to trust her, he will not be chargeable: but a prohibition in general, by putting her in the newspapers, is no legal notice not to trust her. 1 Vent. 42.

In assumpsit the defendant proved that she was married, and her husband alive in France, the plaintiff had judgment, upon which, as a verdict against evidence, she moved for a new trial, but it was denied; for it shall be intended that she was divorced; besides, the husband is an alien enemy, and in that case, why is not his wife chargeable as a feme sole? 1 Salk. 116. Deerly v. Duchess of Mazarine.

It was at one time held, that "where the husband and wife part by consent, and she has a separate maintenance from the husband, she shall in all cases be subject to her own debts." In the case of Ringstead v. Lady Lanesborough, M. 23 G. 3. and H. 23 G. 3. in actions against the defendant for goods sold, she pleaded coverture; and the plaintiff's replication "that she lived separate and apart from her husband, from whom she had a separate maintenance; and so was liable to her own debts," was on demurrer helden to be good; and plaintiff had judgment. In the above case the plea also stated that the husband lived in Ireland, which being out of the process of the court, some stress was laid on it in the decision; but in the case of Barwell v. Brooks, H. 24 G. 3. it was decided generally, that the husband was not liable in any case where the wife lived apart, and had a separate maintenance; and this was recognized in Corbett v. Poelnitz, and other cases. See 1 Term Rep. 5: 5 Term Rep. 679: 1 Bos. & Pull. 357.

But subsequently, after two arguments before all the judges of the King's bench, the having a separate maintenance secured to her by deed, cannot contract and be sued as a feme sole; in fact, that by no agreement between a man and his wife, can she be legally made responsible for the contracts she may enter into, or be liable to the actions of those who may have trusted her engagements, as if she were sole and unmarried. Marshall v. Rutton, 8 Term. Rep. 545. And it is the same though the husband be domiciled in a foreign country. 2 Bos. & Pull. 226: 11 East, 301: 1 New R. 80; unless in case of an alien enemy who has never been in this country. 3 Camp. 123. 1 Bos. & Pull. 357. And so. though the wife be divorced a mensa et thoro, yet she cannot be sued as a feme sole. 3 Barn. & C. 291: 3 Bro. & Bing. 92: 6 Maule & S. 73: Bac. Ab. Baron & Feme. (H.) And where husband and wife were separated by deed, and the husband covenanted with a third person to pay to his wife, or to whom she should appoint, a certain weekly allowance, and the wife lived with such third person (her sister) who found her in necessaries, the Court of Common Pleas held, that the husband having failed to pay the stipulated allowance, an action of indebitatus assumpsit might be maintained against him for such necessaries. Nurse v. Craig, 2 New Rep. 148. If the husband does not assent to the wife leaving his house and living separate, he cannot be sued for her debts. 6 Barn. & C. 200.

It seems that a feme covert, living apart from her husband, under no terms of separation, with alimony allowed pendente lite, may maintain trespass, in the name of her husband, against wrong doers, for breaking and entering her house, and taking her goods. 9 E. R. 470.

A husband who has abjured the realm, or who is banished, is thereby civiliter mortuus; and being disabled to sue or be sued in right of his wife, she must be considered as a feme sole; for it would be unreasonable that she should be remediless on her part, and equally hard on those who had any demands on her, that, not being able to have any redress from the husband, they should not have any against her. Bro. Baron and Feme, 66: Co. Lit. 133: 1 Roll. Rep. 400: Moor, 851: 3 Bulst. 188: 1 Bulst. 140: 2 Vern. 104.

A husband is not bound to receive, nor is trades by herself, in a trade with which her he liable to pay for necessaries found to his wife after she has committed adultery, though he has before committed adultery himself, and turned her out of doors without any imputation on her conduct. 6 Term Rep. 608: and see 1 Barn. & Adol. 227.

But the wife's adultery is no bar to an action by her trustee against the husband, on his covenant to pay a separate maintenance.

2 Barn. & C. 547: 8 Bing. 256.

But where the wife having committed adultery, the husband left her in his house with two children bearing his name, but without making any provision for her in consequence of the separation; although she continued in a state of adultery, the Court of Common Pleas held that the husband was liable for necessaries furnished to her, unless it appear that the plaintiff knew, or ought to have known, the circumstances under which she was living. 1 Bos. & Pull. 226.

If the wife's situation is rendered dangerous by the husband's cruelty and ill-treatment, it is equivalent to turning her out of doors, and the husband is liable for necessaries supplied to her. 3 Esp. Ca. 251: 1 Sel. N. P. 264. And Lord Ellenborough held that it was the same if the husband rendered his home unfit for his wife by bringing another woman to live in it. 1 Sel. N. A wife may use the goods of her husband, but she may not dispose of them: and if she takes them away, it is not felony, for she cannot by our law steal the goods of her husband; but if she delivers them to an adulterer, and he receives them, it will be felony in him. 3 Inst. 308. 310.

If the baron is beyond sea in any voyage, and during his absence his wife buys necessaries, this is a good evidence for a jury to find that the baron assumpsit. Sid. 127.

By the custom of London, if a feme covert

But in such case she cannot give a bond and warrant of attorney to confess a judgment: and when sued as a feme sole, she must be sued in the courts of the city of London; for if sued in the courts above, the husband must be joined. So the wife alone cannot bring an action in the courts above, but only in the city courts; and this even though her husband be dead, if the cause of action accrued in his life-time. 4 Term Rep. 361, 2. VII. Where she alone shall be punished for a criminal Offence, and where the Husband shall be answerable for what she does in a civil Action.- In some cases the command or authority of the husband, either express or implied, will privilege the wife from punishment, even for capital offences. And therefore if a woman commit bare theft or burglary by the coercion of her husband (or even in his company, which the law construes a coercion), she is not guilty of any crime, being considered as acting by compulsion, and not of her own

But for crimes mala in se, not being merely offences against the laws of society, she is answerable; as for murder and the like; not only because these are of a deeper die, but also since in a state of nature no one is in subjection to another, it would be unreasonable to screen an offender from the punishment due to natural crimes, by the refinements and subordinations of civil society. So if a wife be accessary before the fact to murder, she shall not be acquitted on the presumption of coercion. 1 Hale's P. C. 47. In treason also (the highest crime which a member of society can, as such, be guilty of), no plea of coverture shall excuse the wife: no presumption of the husband's coercion shall extenuate her guilt. 1 Hale's P. C. 47. And this as well because of the odiousness and dangerous consequence of the crime itself, as because the husband having broken through the most sacred tie of social community, by rebellion against the state, has no right to that obedience from a wife which he himself as a subject has forgotten to pay. 4 Comm. 28, 29. (But she shall not be considered criminal for receiving her husband, though guilty of treason, nor for the receiving another offender jointly with her husband. Leach's Huwk. P. C. i. c. 1. § 11. in note.)—See tit. Accessary. And see Blacst. Com. 428. note (16th ed.) as to the origin of the wife's exemption.

If also a feme commit a theft of her own

Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 11.—The distinction between her guilt in burglary or theft and robbery seems to be, that in the former, if committed through the means of her husband, "she cannot know what property her husband may claim in the goods taken;" 10 Mod. 63; but a better reason is that the law considers her as acting by compulsion, and not of her own will. In inferior misdemeanors also, another exception may be remarked; that a wife may be indicted and set in the pillory with her husband, for keeping a brothel; for this is an offence touching the domestic economy or government of the house, in which the wife has a principal share; and is also such an offence as the law presumes to be generally conducted by the intrigues of the female sex. 1 Hawk. A feme covert generally shall answer, as much as if she were sole, for any offence not capital against the common law or statute; and if it be of such a nature that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, she may be punished for it without the husband, by way of indictment, which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband shall not be included in it for any offence to which he is no way privy. 9 Co. 71: 1 Hawk. A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar her, because the præcipe in the recovery answers the writ of covenant in the fine, to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroys the presumption of the law, that this is done by the coercion of the husband, for then it is to be presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43: 1 Roll. If a husband disseise another to the use of his wife, this does not make her a disseisoress, she having no will of her own; nor will any agreement of hers to the disseisin during the coverture make her guilty of the disseisin, for the same reason: but her agreement after her husband's death will make her a disseisoress, because then she is capable of giving her consent, and that makes her tenant of the freehold, and so subject to the memedy of the disseisee. 1 Roll. But if a feme covert actually enters and commits a disseisin, either sole or together with her husband, then she is a disseisoress, because thereby gains a wrongful possession; but such actual entry cannot be to the use of her husband or a stranger, so as to make them disseisors, because, though by such entry she gains an estate, yet she has no power of transferring it to another. If the husband, seised of lands in right of his wife, makes a lease thereof for years by indenture or deed poll, reserving rent; all the books agree this to be a good lease for the whole term, unless the wife, by some act after the husband's death, shows her dissent thereto; for if she accepts rent which becomes due after his death, the lease is thereby become absolute and unavoidable; the reason whereof is, that the wife, after her intermarriage, being by law disabled to contract for, or make any disposition of, her own possessions, as having subjected herself and her whole will to the will and power of her husband; the law therefore transfers the power of dealing and contracting for her possessions to the husband, because no other can then intermeddle therewith, and without such power in the husband they would be obliged to keep them in their own manurance or occupation, which might be greatly to the prejudice of both; but to prevent the husband's abusing such power, and lest he should make leases to the prejudice of his wife's inheritance, the law has left her at liberty after his death, either to affirm and make good such lease, or defeat and avoid it, as she finds it subscrvient to her own interest; and this she may do, though she joined in such lease, unless made pursuant to stat. 32 H. Husband and wife make a lease for years, by indenture, of the wife's lands, reserving rent; the lessee enters; the husband before any day of payment, dies; the wife takes a second husband, and he at the day accepts the rents, and dies; and it was held, that the wife could not now avoid the lease, for by her second marriage she transferred her power of avoiding it to her husband, and his acceptance of the rent binds her, as her own act before such marriage would have done; for he by the marriage succeeded into the power and place of the wife, and what she might have done as to affirming or avoiding such lease before marriage, the same may the husband do after the marriage. Dyer, 159: 1 Roll Ab. 475: 1 Roll. Rep. 132.

A re-deliver by the wife after the death of her husband, of a deed delivered by her during the coverture is a sufficient confirmation of such deed so as to bind her, without its being re-executed or re-attested-and circumstances alone may be equivalent to such re-delivery, though the deed be a joint deed by baron and feme affecting the wife's land; and no fine levied. Cowp. 201.

The husband being seised of copyhold lands in right of his wife in fee, makes thereof a lease for years not warranted by the custom, which is a forfeiture of her estate; yet this shall not bind the wife or her heirs after the husband's death, but that they may enter and avoid the lease, and thereby purge the forfeiture; and the diversity seems between this act, which is at an end when the lease is expired or defeated by the entry of the lord, or the wife after the husband's death, and such acts as are a continuing detriment to the inheritance, as wilful waste by the husband, which tends to the destruction of the manor; so of non-payment of rent, denial of suit or service; for such forseitures as these bind the inheritance of the wife after the husband's death; but in the other case the husband cannot forfeit by this lease more than he can grant, which is but for his own life. 2 Roll. Lit. 133: Doctr. Placit. 3: 2 Hen.

If goods come to a feme covert by trover, the action may be brought against husband and wife, but the conversion may be laid damages thereby recovered may accrue to her only in the husband, because the wife cannot convert goods to her own use; and the action is brought against both, because both were concerned in the trespass of taking them. See Co. Lit. 351: 1 Roll. Ab. 6. pl. 7; Yelv. 166: Noy. 79: 1 Leon. 312: Cro. Car. 254. 494: 1 Roll. Ab. 348. But in debt upon a devastavit against baron and feme executrix, it shall not be laid quod devastaverunt, for a feme covert cannot waste. 2 Lev. 145. It is now held that a declaration stating a joint conveyance by husband and wife is good after verdict. 3 Barn. & A. 684.

An action on the case was brought against baron and feme for retaining and keeping the servant of the plaintiff, and judgment accordingly. 2 Lev. 63.

If a lease for life or years be made to baron, and feme, reserving rent, an action of debt for rent arrear may be brought against both; for this is for the advantage of the wife. 1 Roll. Ab. 348.

If an action be brought against a husband and wife, for the debt of the wife when sole, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, the ca. sa. shall issue to take both the husband and wife in execution. Moor, 704.—But if the action was originally brought against herself when sole, and pending the suit she marries, the ca. sa. shall be awarded against her only, and not against the husband. Cro. Jac. 323. Yet if judgment be recovered against a husband and wife for the contract, nay, even for the personal misbehaviour (Cro. Car. 513.) of the wife during her coverture, the ca. sa. shall issue against the husband only: which is (says Mr. J. Blackstone) one of the many great privileges of English wives. 3 Comm. See 3 Wils. 124.—See tits. Arrest, Bail, Execution, Action, &c .- But in an action against husband and wife, for an assault by the wife, it was held that both may be taken in execution. 1 Wils. 149.

Where a woman before marriage becomes bound for the payment of a sum of money, and on her marriage separate property is settled on her, if the obligee can have no remedy against the husband, the wife's separate property is bound. But the obligee must first endeavour to recover against the husband by suing him. 1 Bro. C. R. 17. in note. See Bac. Ab. Baron and Feme. (F.)

XI. Of the Effects of Divorce; and of separate Maintenance, Alimony, and Pin Money.—If baron and feme are divorced causa adulterii, which is a divorce a mensa et thoro, they continue baron and feme; it is otherwise in a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, which dissolves the marriage.

The feme, after divorce, shall re-have the goods which she had before marriage. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. D. 13. pl. 63: per Fitzherbert, Keilw. 122. b. pl. 75.

But if the husband had given or sold them without collusion before the divorce, there is no remedy; but if by collusion, she may aver convert goods to her own use; and the action is brought against both, because both were concerned in the trespass of taking them. See Co. Lit. 351: 1 Roll. Ab. 6. pl. 7; Yelv. 166: she shall sue in the spiritual court. Br. De-Noy. 79: 1 Leon. 312: Cro. Car. 254. 494: 1 raignment and Divorce, pl. cites 26 H. 8. 7.

If a man is bound to a feme sole, and after marries her, and after they are divorced, the obligation is revived. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. Because the divorce being a vinculo matrimonii, by reason of some prior impediment, as pre-contract, &c. makes them never husband and wife ab initio; but if the husband had made a feoffment in fee of the lands of his wife, and then the divorce had been, that would have been a discontinuance as well as if the husband had died, because there the interest of a third person had been concerned; but between the parties themselves it will have relation to destroy the husband's title to the goods, and it proves no more than the common rule, viz. that relations will make a nullity between the parties themselves, but not amongst strangers. Ld. Raym. 521. Hil.

If a man gives lands in tail to baron and feme, and they have issue, and after divorce is sued, now they have only frank tenement, and the issue shall not inherit. Br. Tail et Dones, &c. pl. 9.

If the baron and feme purchase jointly and are disseised, and the baron releases, and after they are divorced, the feme shall have the moiety, though before the divorce there were no moieties; for the divorce converts it into moieties. Br. Deraignment, pl. 18. cites 32 H. 8.

If baron alien the wife's land, and then there is a divorce causa præcontratus, or any other divorce which dissolves the marriage a vinculo matrimonii, the wife during the life of the baron, may enter by statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. Dyer, 13. pl. 61. But vide Ld. Raym. 521.

But if after such alienation and divorce the baron dies, she is put to her cui in vita ante divortium; and yet the words of the statute are, that such alienation shall be void, but this shall be intended to toll the cui in vita. Mo. 58. pl. 164: Pasch. 8 Eliz. Broughton v. Comway.

Divorce causa adulterii of the husband; afterwards the wife sues in the spiritual court for a legacy; the executor pleads the release of the baron; the release binds the wife, for the vinculum matrimonii continues. Cro. Eliz. 908: vide 1 Salk. 115.

Holt held, that if a feme covert, after a divorce a mensa et thoro, sues for a legacy, which, if recovered, comes to her husband, there the husband may release it, because there is no alimony: and if he may release the duty, he may release the costs. 1 Salk. 115. pl. S. C. & S. P.: and see 1 Vern. 261.

A divorce was a mensa et thoro, and then the husband dies intestate. The wife, by bill, prayed assistance as to dower and administration, (it being granted to another), and live separate, they appear to have cohabited, distribution. The master of the rolls bid her equity will consider the agreement as waived go to law, to try if she was entitled to her dower, there being no impediment, and as to that dismissed the bill; and as to the administration, the granting that is in the ecclesiastical court; but the distribution more properly belongs to this court; but since in that court she is such a wife as is not entitled to administration, he dismissed the bill as to distribution too, and said, if they could repeal that sentence, she then would be entitled to distribution. Ch. Prec. 111.

In case of a divorce a mensa et thoro the law allows alimony to the wife; which is that allowance which is made to a woman for her support out of the husband's estate, being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case.-And the ecclesiastical court is the proper court in which to sue for alimony. Het. 69 .- This is sometimes called her estovers, for which, if the husband refuses payment, there is (besides the ordinary process of excommunication in the ecclesiastical court) a writ at common law de estoveriis habendis, in order to recover it. 1 Lev. 6. It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties; but in case of an elopement and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony. Cowel, 1 Inst. 235. a: 12 Rep. 30.

A bill may be brought in Chancery for a specific performance of an agreement by the husband with a third person, for a separate maintenance of the wife; notwithstanding that alimony belongs to the spiritual court.

Treat, Eq. 39.

The Court of Chancery has decreed the wife a separate maintenance out of a trust fund on account of the cruelty and ill-beha-viour of the husband, though there was no evidence of a divorce or agreement that the fund in dispute should be so applied. 2 Vern. 752.—And in another case the husband having quitted the kingdom, Lord Hardwicke decreed the wife the interest of a trust fund till he should return and maintain her as he ought. 2 Atk. 96.—Yet in a subsequent case Lord Hardwicke observes, that he could find no decree to compel a husband to pay a scparate maintenance to his wife, except upon an agreement between them, and even then unwillingly. 3 Atk. 547.—And this latter opinion seems most reconcileable with principle; for the case of a divorce propter savitiam (see 2 Vern. 493.) may be considered as an implied agreement; and if there be an express or implied agreement, there seems no doubt but that courts of equity may, concurrently with the spiritual court, in proceeding upon it, decree a separate maintenance. Wood's Inst. 62: 2 Vern. 386: Guth. v. Guth. MSS.—The spiritual court, however, would be the more proper jurisdiction if it acted in rem. Lit. Rep. 78: 2 Atk. 511: But if after an agreement between husband and wife to to be paid within this trust; and my lord thereby. Fletcher v. Fletcher, Mich. 1788 .-See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. 96, 7; and Hindley v. Westmeath, 6 Barn. & C. 200.

Where, on a separation, lands are conveyed by the baron in trust for the feme, chancery will not bar the feme from suing the baron in the trustee's name, and a surrender or release by the baron shall not be made use of against the feme. 2 Chan. Ca. 102.

A woman living separate from her husband, and having a separate maintenance, contracts debts. The creditors, by a bill in chancery, may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues; but when that is determined, and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with the debts: by Lord Keeper North; and the rather, because the executor of the husband, who may have paid the debt, is no party. Vern. 326. A decree for alimony will not discharge a husband from being liable for necessaries furnished for his wife, unless the sum decreed be paid. Hunt v. De Blaquiere, 5 Bing. 550. And so if they live separate under a deed providing a separate maintenance, the maintenance must be duly paid, or the husband is liable for her debts. Bac. Ab. Baron & Feme. (H.) (7th ed.) If the maintenance is consented to be paid to the wife for life, she is entitled to receive it though she may commit adultery and be divorced a mensa et thoro. Price. 577: 2 Barn. & C. 547: 6 Barn. & C. 200: Bac. Ab. ubi supra.

Where the husband, during his cohabitation with the wife, makes her an allowance of so much a year for her expenses, if she out of her own good housewifery saves any thing out of it, this will be the husband's estate, and he shall reap the benefit of his wife's frugality; because when he agrees to allow her a certain sum yearly, the end of the agreement is, that she may be provided with clothes and other necessaries, and whatsoever is saved out of this, redounds to the husband; per Lord Keeper Finch. Freem. Rep. 304.

A term was created on the marriage of A. with B. for raising 200l. a year for pin-money, and in the settlement A. covenanted for payment of it. There was an arrear of one year at A.'s death, which was decreed, because of the covenant to be charged on a trust-estate, settled for payment of debts, it being in arrear for one year only; secus had it been in arrear for several years. Chan. Prec. 26.

The plaintiff's relation (to whom he was heir) allowed the wife pin-money; which being in arrear, he gave her a note to this purpose: I am indebted to my wife 100l. which became due to her such a day; after by his will he makes provision out of his lands for payment of all his debts, and all monies which he owed to any person in trust for his wife; and the question was, whether the 100l. was keeper decreed not; for in point of law it assumpsit in case, is a good bar in debt, &c. was no debt, because a man cannot be indebt-'ed to his wife; and it was not money due to any in trust for her. Hil. 1701, between Cornwall and the Earl of Montague. But quare: for the testator looked on this as a debt, and seems to intend to provide for it by his will. Abr. Eq. Ca. 66.

Where the wife hath a separate allowance made before marriage, and buys jewels with the money arising thereout, they will not be assets liable to the husband's debts.

Prec. 295.

Where there is a provision for the wife's separate use for clothes, if the husband finds her clothes, this will bar the wife's claim: nor is it material whether the allowance be provided out of the estate which was originally the husband's, or out of what was her own estate: for in both cases her not having demunded it for several years together shall be construed a consent from her that he should receive it; per Lord C. Macclesfield. 2 P. W. 82, 83.

So where 50l. a year was reserved for clothes and private expences, secured by a term for years, and ten years after the husband died, and soon after the wife died; the executors in equity demanded 500l. for ten years' arrear of this pin-money; but it appearing that the husband maintained her, and no proof that she ever demanded it, the claim was disallowed. 2 P. Wms. 341.

BARONET. A dignity or degree of honour next after barons, having precedency of all knights excepting knights bannerets, created by the king under the royal standard.

See Precedence.

BAR, or BARR, Lat. barra. Fr. barre.] In a legal sense, is a plea or peremptory exception of a defendant, sufficient to destroy the plaintiff's action. And it is divided into bar to common intendment, and bar special: bar temporary, and perpetual; bar to a common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which usually is a bar to the declaration of the plaintiff; bar special is that which is more than ordinary, and falls out upon some special circumstance of the fact as to the case in hand. Terms de Ley.

Bar temporary is such a bar that is good for the present, but may afterwards fail; and bar perpetual is that which overthrows the action of the plaintiff for ever. Plowd. 26. But a plea in bar not giving a full answer to all the matter contained in the plaintiff's declaration is not good. 1 Lill. Abr. 211. If one be barred by a plea to the writ or to the action of the writ, he may have the same writ again, or his right action; but if the plea in bar be to the action itself, and the plaintiff is barred by judgment, &c. it is a bar for ever in personal actions. 6 Rep. 7. And a recovery in debt is a good bar to action on the case for the same thing; also a recovery on

Cro. Jac. 110: 4 Rep. 94.

In all actions personal, as debt, account, &c. a bar is perpetual, and in such case the party hath no remedy, but by writ of error or attaint; but if a man is barred in a real action or judgment, yet he may have an action of as high a nature, because it concerns his inheritance; as for instance, if he is barred in a formedon in descender, yet he may have a formedon in the remainder, &c. Rep. 7. It has been resolved, that a bar in any action real or personal by judgment upon demurrer, verdict, or confession, is a bar to that action, or any action of the like nature for ever; but, according to Pemberton, Ch. J. this is to be understood, when it doth appear that the evidence in one action would maintain the other: for otherwise the court shall intend that the party hath mistaken his action. Skin. 57, 58.

Bar to a common intent is good; and if an executor be sued for his testator's debt, and he pleadeth that he had no goods left in his hands at the day the writ was taken out against him, this is a good bar to a common intendment, till it is shown that there are goods: but if the plaintiff can show by way of replication, that more goods have fallen into his hands since that time, then, except the defendant allege a better bar, he shall be condemned in the action. Plowd. 26: Kitch. 215: Bro. tit. Barre.

There is a bar material, and a bar at large: bar material may be also called special bar; as when one, in stay of the plaintiff's action, pleadeth some particular matter, viz. a descent from him that was owner of the land, &c. a feoffment made by the ancestor of the plaintiff, or the like: a bar at large is, when the defendant, by way of exception, doth not traverse the plaintiff's title, by pleading, nor confess, nor avoid it, but only makes to himself a title in his bar. Kitch. 68: 5 H. 7. 29. See tits. Abatement, Action, Judgment; and especially Pleading.

This word bar is likewise used for the place where serjeants and counsellors at law stand to plead the causes in court; and where prisoners are brought to answer their indictments, &c. whence our lawyers, that are called to the bar, are termed barristers. 24 H.

BARRASTER, BARRISTER, barrasteri-A counsellor learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon him the protection and defence of clients. They are termed jurisconsulti; and in other countries called licentiati in jure; and anciently barristers at law were called apprentices of the law (from the French apprendere to learn), in Lat. apprenticii juris nobiliores. Fortesc. The time before they ought to be called to the bar, by the ancient orders, was eight years, now reduced to five; not called ex gratia), were twelve grand moots performed in the inns of Chancery, in the time of the grand readings, and twentyfour petty moots in the term times, before the readers of the respective inns: and a barrister newly called was to attend the six (or four) next long vacations the exercise of the house, viz. in Lent and Summer, and was thereupon for those three (or two) years stiled a vacation barrister. Also they are called utter barristers, i. e. pleaders ouster the bar, to distinguish them from benchers, or those that have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king, queen, or prince's counsel are. From the degrees of barristers and serjeants at law, (see tit. Serjeant) some are usually selected to be his majesty's counsel; the two principal of whom are called his attorney and solicitor-general.-The first king's counsel under the degree of serjeant, was Sir Francis Bacon, who was made so honoris causa, without either patent or fee; so the first of the modern order, who are now the sworn servants of the crown, with a standing salary, seems to have been Sir Francis North, afterwards lord keeper to Charles II. These king's counsel must not be employed in any cause against the crown without special licence, but which is never refused, and costs about 9l. A custom now prevails of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers as the crown thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents, sometimes next after the king's attorney-general, but usually next after his majesty's counsel then being.-These, as well as the queen's attorney and solicitorgeneral, rank promiscuously with the king's counsel, and together with them sit within the bar of the respective courts, but receive no salaries and are not sworn, and therefore are at liberty to be retained in causes against the crown. And all other serjeants and barristers indiscriminately (except in the Court of Common Pleas, where serjeants only are admitted in term time) may take upon them the protection and defence of any suitors whether plaintiff or defendant. 3 Comm. 27. 28.

A counsel can maintain no action for his fees; Davis Pref. 22: 1 C. R. 38; which are given not as a salary or hire, but as a mere gratuity, which 'a barrister cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation. Davis, 23.

The reason why counsel can maintain no action for their fees is, because their compensation is not made to depend upon the event of the cause; and for the purpose of promoting the honour and integrity of the bar, it is expected that all their fees should be paid when their briefs are delivered; per Bayley, J. in Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chitty, R. 551. Fell v. Brown, and Turner v. Phillips, Peake's and the exercises done by them (if they were in the lawful defence of their clients, and at the same time to give a check to unseemly licentiousness, it hath been holden, that a counsel is not answerable for any matter by him spoken, relative to the cause in hand, and suggested in his client's instructions; although it should reflect upon the reputation of another, and even prove absolutely groundless: but if he mentions an untruth of his own invention, or even upon instructions, if it be impertinent to the cause in hand, he is then liable to an action from the party injured. Cro. Jac. 90. No action can be maintained for words of slander, originating in judicial proceedings, as being used by counsel, if they are pertinent to the subject matter of discussion. Hodgson v. Scarlett, Holt, (N. P.) 621: 1 B. & A. (K. B.) 232: Peake, 122.

Counsel guilty of deceit or collusion are punishable by stat. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 28. with imprisonment for a year and a day, and perpetual silence in the courts; and the latter punishment is still sometimes inflicted for gross misdemeanors in practice. Raym. 376: 3 Comm. 29.

Barristers, who constantly attend the King's Bench, &c. are to have the privilege of being sued in transitory actions in the county of Middlesex. 1 Wils. 159: 1 W. Blackst. But the court will not change the venue because some of the defendants are barristers. Str. 610. See tit. Privilege. Pleas, before they are filed, must be signed by a barrister or serjeant; and where he is defendant he has no privilege whatsoever respecting the venue. 1 Tidd. Prac. 76. 656. He is privileged from arrest whilst in attendance on the courts, and therefore will be discharged if arrested on the circuit. 1 H. Blackst. 636.

A mandamus does not lie to the benchers of an inn of court to compel them to admit an individual to be a member of that society, in order to his qualifying himself to become a barrister. 7 D. & R. 351: S. C. 1 B. & C. 855. The only mode of relief is to appeal to the twelve judges. Dougl. 353.

An advocate (or attorney) who betrays the cause of his client, or, being retained, neglects to appear at the trial, by which the cause miscarries, is liable to an action on the case, for a reparation to their injured client. 3 Comm. 165. cites Bro. Ab. tit. Parliament, 19: 2 Inst. 382.

The authority cited for this position falls short of maintaining it in its full extent. Finch merely lays down the law in the case of an attorney for the tenant in a real action making default; and F. N. B. 96. which is his authority, goes no farther. As the advocate can maintain no action for his fees, there would be some hardship in exposing him to an action for what his client might consider want of proper zeal, industry, or knowledge, in the conduct of his cause. In two cases, In order to encourage due freedom of speech | N. P. C. 137. 166. Lord Kenyon, at Nisi

Prius, held such actions not to be maintainand unskilfully settling and signing a bill in chancery, which was referred to the master for scandal and impertinence, and the plaintiff obliged to pay the costs of the reference. Upon this case it may be observed, that the plaintiff had a direct and far more proper remedy in chancery; as, by several orders, the counsel who signs such a bill is liable to pay costs for it. Beames' Orders, 167: Mitford's Pleadings, 33. 257. (3d ed.) The second case was an action to recover back from a counsel who had not attended at the trial of a cause the fee given to him for attending; upon this; too it seems obvious that if the counsel could have maintained no action for the fee, if it had been withheld after his attendance, the giving it must have been merely gratuitous, and there could be no legal grounds for an action to recover it back. It does not appear to have been alleged in this case, that the cause had miscarried in consequence of the counsel's non-attendance; indeed the contrary appears probable: at all events, neither case amounted to a direct betraying of the chent; but upon this point Lord Hale cites a strong authority in favour of the position in his notes on F. N. B. 94.

The case is Somerton's case, which was several times before (see Year Book, 11 H. 6. 18. 24. 55.) the courts; and the principle of the judgment seems to have been, that for treachery after a retainer an action might be maintained against a barrister. Lord Hale's summary is, "if one retains counsel, and gives him his fee to assist him in the purchase of such a manor; if he becomes counsel for another or discovers his counsel (advice) case lies." And see Bac. Ab. Action on the Case. (ed. by Gwillim & Dodd.) See titles Abatement, Pleading. See farther titles Counsellor, Inns of Court, Non-conformists, Oaths.

BARRATOR, or BARRETOR, Lat. barractator, Fr. barrateur.] A common mover of suits and quarrels, either in courts or elsewhere in the country, that is himself never quiet, but at variance with one or other. Lambard derives the word barretor from the Lat. balatro, a vile knave: but the proper derivation is from the Fr. barrateur, i. c. a deceiver, and this agrees with the description of a common barretor in Lord Coke's Reports, viz. that he is a common mover and maintainer of suits in disturbance of the peace, and in taking and detaining the possession of houses and lands, or goods by false inventions, &c. 8 Rep. 37.

However, it seems clear that no general indictment, charging the defendant with being a common oppressor, and disturber of the peace, and stirrer up of strife among neighbours is good, without adding the words common barretor, which is a term of art appropriated by law to this purpose. 1 Mod. 288: 1 Sid. 282: Cro. Jac. 526: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 9.

A common barretor is said to be the most able. The first was an action for negligently dangerous oppressor in the law; for he oppresseth the innocent by colour of law, which was made to protect them from oppression. 8 Rep. 37. No one can be a barretor in respect of one act only; for every indictment for such crime must charge the defendant with being communis barractator, and conclude contra pacem, &c. And it hath been holden, that a man shall not be adjudged a barretor for bringing any number of suits in his own right, though they are vexatious, especially if there be any colour for them; for if they prove false he shall pay the defendant costs. 1 Roll. Abr. 355: 3 Mod. 98.

A barrister at law entertaining a person in his house, and bringing several actions in his name, where nothing was due, was found guilty of barratry. 3 Mod. 97. An attorney is in no danger of being convicted of barratry, in respect of his maintaining another in a groundless action, to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. Ibid. A common solicitor, who solicits suits, is a common barretor, and may be indicted thereof, because it is no profession in law. 1 Danv. Abr. 725.

The punishment for this offence in a common person is by fine and imprisonment; but if the offender (as is too frequently the case) belongs to the profession of the law, a barretor who is thus able as well as willing to do mischief, ought also to be disabled from practising for the future. See the stat. 12 G. 1. c. 29. under title Attornies at Law. 4 Comm. 134: and see stat. 34 E. 3. c. 1: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81.

It seems to be the settled practice not to suffer the prosecutor to go on in the trial of an indictment of this kind, without giving the defendant a note of the particular matters which he intends to prove against him; for otherwise it would be impossible to prepare a defence against so general and uncertain a charge, which may be proved by such a multiplicity of different instances. 5 Mod. 18: 1 Ld. Raym. 490: 12 Mod. 516: 2 Atk. 340: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 13.

To this head may also be referred another offence of equal malignity and audaciousness, that of suing another in the name of a fictitious plaintiff; either one not in being at all, or one who is ignorant of the suit. This offence, if committed in any of the king's superior courts, is left, as a high contempt, to be punished at their discretion. But in courts of a lower degree, where the crime is equally pernicious, but the authority of the judges not equally extensive, it is directed by stat. 8 Eliz, c. 2. to be punished by six months' imprisonment, and treble damages to the party injured. 4 Comm. 134.

BARRATRY, see Barrator, Insurance, II. This term was applied to the obtaining benefices at Rome.

In Scotland the crime of a judge who is induced to pronounce a judgment by bribery is termed barratry. See Act, 1540. c. 104.

BARREL. See tit. Weights and Measures. BARRETOR, BARRETRY. See Barretor. BARR-FEE. A fee of 20d. payable by every prisoner acquitted of felony, to the sheriff or gaoler. 21 H. 7.16. b: Terms de Ley.—See Fees.

BARRIERS, Fr. barrieres; jeu de barres, i.e. palæstra.] A martial exercise of men armed and fighting together with short swords, within certain bars or rails which separated them from the spectators; it is now disused here in England. Covel. There are likewise barrier towns, or places of defence on the frontiers of kingdoms.

BARRISTER. See BARRASTER.

BARROW, from the Sax. beerg, a heap of earth.] A large hillock or mount, raised or cut up in many parts of England, which seems to have been a mark of the Roman tumuli, or sepulchres of the dead. The Saxon beera was commonly taken for a grove of trees on the top of a hill. Kennett's Gloss.

To BARTER, from the Fr. barater, or Span. baratar circumvenire] To exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9. Because probably they that exchange in this manner do endeavour, for the most part, one to over-reach and circumvent the other.—So bartery, the substantive in stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7. of Bankrupts.

BARTON, or BURTON, a word used in Devonshire for the demesne lands of a manor; sometimes the manor-house itself, and in some places for out-houses and fold-yards. In the stat. 2 and 3 Ed. 6. c. 12. barton lands and demesne lands are used as synonima. Blount says it always signifies a farm distinct from a mansion—and bertonarii were farmers, husbandmen that held bartons at the will of the lord. In the west, they called a great farm a berton or barton; and a small farm, a living. Blountin v. Barton and Berton.

BAS CHEVALIERS, low or inferior knights by tenure of a base military fee; as distinguished from bannerets, the chief or superior knights; hence we call our simple knights, viz. knights bachelors, bas chevaliers. Kennet's Gloss, Parach, Antio.

BASE COURT, Fr. cour basse.] Is an inferior court, that is not of or occurd, as the court baron, &c. Kitch. fol. 95, 96.

BASE ESTATE, Fr. bas estat.] Or base tenure. That estate which base tenants have in their lands. And base tenants, according to Lambard, are those who perform villainous services to their lords; but there is a difference between a base estate and villenage, for to hold in pure villenage is to do all that the lord will command him; and if a copyholder have but a base estate, he not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be said to hold in villenage. See Kitch. 41.—This Dict. tit. Tenures.

BASE Fee, is a tenure in fee at the will of the lord, distinguished from socage fee tenure; but Lord Coke says, that a base fee, or qualified fee, is what may be defeated by limitation, or on entry, &c. Co. Lit. 118. Bassa tenura, or base tenure, was a holding by villenage, or other customary service, opposed to alta tenura, the higher tenure in capite or by military service, &c.—See tit. Tenure; Tail.

BASELARD, or BASILLARD, in the stat. 12 Rich, 2. c. 6. signifies a weapon, which Mr. Speight, in his exposition upon Chaucer, calls pugionem vel sicam, a poinard. Knighton, lib. 5. p. 2731.

BASILEUS. A word mentioned in several of our historians, signifying King, and seems peculiar to the kings of England. Monasticon, tom. 1. p. 64. Ego Edgar totius Angliæ basileus confirmavi. BASTARD, bastardus; fancifully derived from the Greek βασσαρις, meretrix; more truly from the Brit. Bastard nothus, spurius; or, according to Spelman, from the German bastart—bas low, and start risen, Sax. steort; as up-start, homo novus, suddenly risen up-l One whose father and mother were not lawfully married to each other, previous to his birth; or as it has been seemingly more incorrectly phrased, "one born out of lawful wedlock."

- I. 1. Who are Bastards, and of their Incapacities.—A bastard by our English laws, is one that is not only begotten, but born out of lawful matrimony. The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a bastard, if the parents afterwards intermarry; [and this is still the law in Scotland;] and here they differ most materially from the English law; which though not so strict as to require that the child shall be begotten, yet makes it mate, that it shall be born after lawful wed- inspiciendo. lock. 1 Comm. 454: 2 Inst. 96, 7.

Blackstone observes, that the reason of our English law is surely much superior to that of the Roman, if we consider the principal end and design of the marriage contract taken in a civil light. He then recapitulates several motives, which he concludes we may suppose actuated the peers at the parliament Merton, when they refused to enact that children born before marriage should be esteemed legitimate. 1 Comm. 456: and see 1 Inst. 244. b. and 245. a. in the notes.

If a man marries a woman grossly big with child by another, and within three days after she is delivered, the issue is no bastard. I Danv. Ab. 729. If a child is born within a day after marriage between parties of full age, if there be no apparent impossibility that the husband should be the father of it, the child is no bastard, but supposed to be the child of the husband. 1 Roll. Ab. 358.

All the children born before matrimony are bastards; so are all children born so long after the death of the husband, that by the usual course of gestation they could not be begotten by him. But this being a matter of some uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days. Cro. Jac. 451: see 1 Inst. 123. b. in note 1 and 2; where the time of gestation as connected with this question is inquired into at great length, and with exquisite nicety and accuracy. On the whole it appears that what is commonly considered as the usual period is forty weeks, or 280 days. though the child is born some time after, it only affords presumption, not proof of illegitimacy. The information of the late celebrated anatomist, Dr. Hunter, is also given, from which we learn, 1. That the usual period is nine calendar months; (from 270 to 280 days;) but there is very commonly a difference of onc, two, or three weeks .- 2. A child may be born alive at any time, from three months, but we see none born with powers of coming to manhood, or of being reared before seven calendar months, or near that time; at six months it cannot be. -3. The doctor said he had known a woman bear a living child, in a perfectly natural way, fourteen days later than nine calendar months; and he believed two women to have been delivered of a child alive, in a natural way, above ten calendar months from the hour of conception. It has been suggested in a very interesting article on Medical Jurisprudence (Law Magazine, No. IX. July, 1830), that this period might safely and consistently with the best experience be extended to 310 days, 30 days beyond the usual period. See the case of the Gardner Peerage, 1824, reported by Mr. Le Mar-

But if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time, as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he may, when he arrives to years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. 1 Inst. 8. For this reason by the ancient Saxon laws, in imitation of the civil law, a widow was forbidden to marry for twelve months. Ll. Ethel. A. D. 1008. Ll. Canut. c. 71: 1 Comm. 456, 7. See 1 Inst. 8. a. in note 7. where it is said, "Brook questions this doctrine, from which it seems as if he thought it reasonable that the circumstances of the case, instead of the choice of the issne, should determine who is the father." See Bro. Ab. Bastardy, p. 18: Palm. 10. See farther, 1 Inst. 123. b. in note 1. where additional authorities are cited, to show that in this case a jury ought to decide on the question, according to the proof of the woman's condition.

Children born during wedlock may also in some circumstances be bastards. As if the husband be out of the kingdom of England, or as the law somewhat loosely phrases it, extra quatuor maria, for above nine months, so that no access to his wife can be presumed, her issue during that period shall be bastards. 1 Inst. 244. But generally, during the coverture, access of the husband shall be presumed, unless the contrary can be shown; Salk. 123: 3 P. Wms. 276: Stra. 925; which is such a negative as can only be proved by showing him to be elsewhere; for the general rule is præsumitur pro legitimatione. 5 Rep. 98. See also 1 Inst. 126. a. in note 2; and as to these phrases infra (or more classically intra) et extra quatuor maria, see some incomplete notes in 1 Inst. 180. a. note 6; and 261. a. note 1. Although a feme covert may on a question of bastardy give evidence of the fact of criminal conversation, yet she shall not be admitted to prove the non-access of her husband. Annal. 79.

There are determinations by which it appears that the child of a married woman may be proved a bastard by other circumstantial evidence than that of the husband's non-access. 4 Term Rep. 251. 356: Banbury Peerage, 2 Selwin, Nisi Prius, 746. (6th ed.) Upon this case, which was finally determined by the House of Lords in 1813, on the claim of an alleged descendant of the first Earl of Banbury (Knollys), who was created such in 1627, and the legitimacy of whose wife's child was disputed, it appears that the ancient laws of legitimacy may be considered as in some measure altered, the rule having formerly stood thus: "That presumption of legitimacy might be rebutted by physical evidence proving the contrary;" but that the rule may now be stated thus: "Presumption | bastardized by the rules of the civil or comof legitimacy may be rebutted by physical evidence proving, or by moral evidence rendering probable, the contrary; and Phillipps therefore is justified in laying down as a doctrine to be extracted from this case, "that a jury may not only take into consideration proofs tending to show the physical impossibility of the child born in wedlock being legitimate, but they may decide the question of paternity, by attending to the relative situation of the parties, their habits of life, the evidence of conduct, and of declarations connected with conduct, and to every induction which reason suggests for determining upon the probabilities of the case." Law of Evidence, ii. p. 288. edit. 1829; and see Bac. Ab. Bastardy. (Ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.)

In a divorce a mensa et thoro, if the wife has children, they are bastards; for the law will presume the husband and wife conformable to the sentence of separation, unless access be proved; but in a voluntary separation by agreement, the law will suppose access unless the negative be shown; and the children, prima facie shall not be esteemed bastards. Salk. 123 .- In case of divorce in the spiritual court a vinculo matrimonii, all the issue born during the coverture are bastards; because such divorce is always upon some cause, that rendered the marriage unlawful and null from the beginning. 1 Inst. 235.

If a man or woman marry a second wife or husband, the first being living, and have issue by such second wife or husband, the issue is a bastard. See Bott. (ed. 1793 by Const.) 397. pl. 521. Before the stat. 2 and 3 Ed. 6. c. 21. one was adjudged a bastard, quia filius sacerdotis.

A man hath issue a son by a woman before marriage, and afterwards marries the same woman, and hath issue a second son born after the marriage; the first of these is termed in law a bastard eigne, and the second a mulier, or mulier puisne; by the common law, as hath been said, such bastard eigne is as incapable of inheriting as if the father and mother had never married; but yet there is one case in which his issue was let into the succession, and that was by the consent of the lord and person legitimate; as if upon the death of the father the bastard eigne enters, and the mulier during his whole life never disturbs him, he cannot upon the death of the bastard eigne enter upon his issue. Lit. sect. 399: Co. Lit. 245.

To exclude the mulier from the inheritance, there must not only be an uninterrupted possession of the bastard eigne during his life, but a descent to his issue. Co. Lit. 244: 1 Roll. Ab. 624: see 2 Comm. c. 2. § 5.

No man can bastardize another after his death, that was a mulier by the laws of holy church, and who carried the reputation of legitimate during his life; for a man must be mon law: by the rules of the civil law, this person is by supposition legitimate; and if the common law be made the judge he cannot be bastardized; for it is a rule of common law, that a personal defect dies with the person, and cannot after his death be objected to his successor that represents him; and this rule of law was taken from the humanity of the ancients, which would not allow the calumny of the dead: as also from an important reason of convenience, for pedigrees are often derived through several persons, concerning whom there remains little knowledge or remembrance of any thing, but only of their being; and therefore it were an easy matter to throw on them the aspersion of bastardy by any forged evidence, which cannot be confronted by opposite proof; and so it is fit to limit a time in which all proofs of bastardy are to be disallowed. 7 Co. 44: Jenk. Rep. 268: 1 Brownl. 42: Co. Lit. 33. a.: Lit. sect. 399 : Co. Lit. 245.

In the case of Pride v. The Earls of Bath and Montague, it was held that the rule that a person shall not be bastardized after his death, is only good in the case of bastard eigne and mulier puisne. 1 Salk. 120: 3

Lev. 410.

If there be an apparent impossibility of procreation on the part of the husband, natural, or accidental, as in case of the husband being only eight years old, or disabled by disease, there the issue of the wife shall be a bastard. 1 Inst. 244.

The rights of a bastard are very few, being only such as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the son of nobody, and sometimes called filius nullius, sometimes filius populi. Fortesc. de Ll. c. 40. Yet he may gain a surname by reputation, though he has none by inheritance. 1 Inst. 3. 123: 6 Co. 65.

Where a remainder is limited to the eldest son of Jane S., whether legitimate or illegitimate, and she hath issue, a bastard shall take this remainder, because he acquires the denomination of her issue by being born of her body: and so it was never uncertain who was designed by this remainder. Noy. 35.

If parents are married and afterwards divorced, this gives the issue the reputation of children; and so doth a subsequent marriage of the parents. 6 Co. 65:, Hugh's Ab.

If a man, in consideration of natural affection and love, covenants to stand seised to the use of a bastard, this is not good; for he is not de sanguine patris; but it is said that a woman may give lands in frank marriage with her bastard, because he is of the blood of the mother; but he hath no father, but from reputation only. Dyer, 347: and 79: 6 Co. 77: Noy. 35.

A court of equity will not supply the want of a bastard, as it will for a legitimate child. Preced. Chan. 475.

The incapacity of a bastard consists principally in this, that he cannot be heir to any one, neither can he have heirs but of his own body; for being as was before said nullius filius, he is therefore of kin to nobody, and has no ancestor from whom any inheritable blood can be derived. But though bastards are not looked upon as children to any civil purposes, yet the ties of nature hold as to maintenance, and many other purposes; as particularly that a man shall not marry his bastard sister or daughter. 3 Salk. 66, 7: Ld. Raym. 68: Comb. 356. And see post, II.

A bastard was, in strictness of law, incapable of holy orders, and though that were dispensed, yet he was utterly disqualified from holding any dignity in the church. Fortesc. c. 40: 5 Rep. 58. But this doctrine seems now obsolete; and there is a very ancient decision that a felon should have the benefit of clergy though he were a bastard. Bro. Clergy, 20. In all other respects therefore, except those mentioned, there is no distinction between a bastard and another man. 1 Comm.

A bastard may be made legitimate, and capable of inheriting by the transcendant power of an act of parliament, and not otherwise; 4 Inst. 36; as was done in the case of John of Gaunt's bastard children, by a stat. of R. 2. 1 Comm. 459.

2. Of the Trial of Bastardy .- Bastardy, in relation to the several manners of its trial, is distinguished into general and special bas-

Till the stat. of Merton, 20 H. 3. the question, whether born before or after marriage, was examined before the ecclesiastical judge, and his judgment was certified to the king or his justices, and the king's court either abided by it or rejected it at pleasure. But after the solemn protest made by the barons at Merton, against the introduction of the doctrine of the civil and canon law in this respect, special bastardy has been always triable at common law; and general bastardy alone has been left to the judgment of the ecclesiastical judge, who in this case agrees with the temporal. 2 Inst. 99: Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law. 85. 201: and see 1 Inst. 126. a. note 2; and 245. a. note 1.

General bastardy, tried by the bishop, in its notion contains two things. 1st. It should not be a bastard made legitimate by a subsequent marriage. 2ndly. That it should be a point collateral to the original cause of action. 1 Roll. Ab. 361.

Formerly bastards had a way in such issues to trick themselves into legitimation; for they used to bring feigned actions, and get suborned witnesses before the bishop to prove their legitimation, and then got the certificate returned of record; and after that their legitiof a surrender of a copyhold estate, in favour | mation could never be contested; for being returned of record as a point adjudged by its proper judges, and remaining among the memorials of the court, all persons were concluded by it; but this created great inconveniences, as is taken notice of in the preamble of stat. 9 H. 6. c. 11. in the case of several persons of quality; for the evidence of the contrary parties concerned was never heard at the trial, and yet their interest was concluded: to remedy this inconvenience without altering the rules of law, it was enacted, that before any writ to the bishop, there should be a proclamation made in the court where the plea depends, and after that the issue should be certified into Chancery, where proclamation should be made once in every month for three months, and then the chancellor should certify to the court where the plea depends, and afterwards it shall be again proclaimed in the same court, that all that are concerned may go to the ordinary to make their allegations; and without these circumstances, any writ granted to the ordinary, and all proceedings thereupon, shall be utterly void. 1 Roll. Ab. 361.

If the ordinary certify or try bastardy without a writ from the king's temporal courts, it is void; for the spiritual jurisdiction within these kingdoms is derived from the king, and therefore it must be exercised in the manner the king hath appointed; for it would be injurious if they should declare legitimation where the rights of inheritance are so nearly concerned, without any apparent necessity. 1 Roll. Ab. 361.

The certificate must be under the seal of the ordinary, and not under the seal of the commissary only: for the command is to the bishop himself to certify, and therefore the execution of the command must appear to be by the bishop in proper person. Ab. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, this binds perpetually, though the person so adjudged a bastard is not party to the action, for all persons are estopped to speak against the memorial of any judicatory; because the act of the public judicatory under which any person lives is his own act; and were he not thus bound, there might be contradiction in certificates. 1 Roll. Ab. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, that doth not bind a stranger till returned of record, because it is no judicial act till recorded in the place appointed to record such transactions; nor doth it bind the party to the action till judgment thereon, because if he avoid the action he avoids all consequences of the action; and therefore if the defendant be certified bastard by the ordinary, yet if the plaintiff be nonsuit, they cannot go on to trial, and so the bishop's certificate never appears of record, and therefore is not binding. 1 Roll. Ab.

If a man be certified mulier, no man is estopped to bastardize him, for though he sessions: but if the woman die or marry may be a mulier by the spiritual law, yet he any man, notwithstanding the certificate, may plead the issue of special bastardy. 1 Roll. Ab.

Special bastardy is two-fold: 1. Where the bastardy is the gist of the action, and the material part of the issue. 2dly. Where those are bastards by the common law that are muliers by the spiritual law. 1 New. Ab. 314: Co. Lit. 134: 1 Roll. 367: Hob. 117.

If a man receives any temporal damage by being called a bastard, and brings his action in the temporal courts, and the defendant justifies that the plaintiff is a bastard, this must be tried at common law, and not by writ to the bishop; for otherwise you suppose an action brought in a court which hath not a capacity to try the cause of action. 1 Brownl. 1: Hob. 179: Godol. 479: Co. Ent. 29.

If it be found by an assise taken at large that a man is a bastard, the temporal courts are judges of it; for the jury cannot be estopped to speak truth which may fall within their own knowledge; and what they find becomes the record of the temporal courts, and so within their conuzance. Bastardy, 97.

II. 1. Of the case of Infant-Bastards their Maintenance and Protection .- By stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3. two justices of peace may make an order on the mother or reputed father of a bastard to maintain the infant by weekly payments or otherwise; and if the party disobey such order, he or she may be committed to gaol, until they give security to perform it, or to appear at the sessions. By stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 7. the justices may commit the mother of a bastard, likely to become chargeable, to the house of correction for a year; or for a second offence till she gives security for her good behaviour. This part of the stat. of 7 Jac. 1. is now repealed by 50 G. 3. c. 51, which enables two magistrates to punish such woman by committing her to the House of Correction, for any time not exceeding twelve calendar months nor less than six weeks, and the magistrates may at their discretion order her to be discharged after she has been confined for any space not less than six weeks. Such woman not to be committed until one month after her delivery .- By stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 19. if the putative father or lewd mother run away from the parish, the overseers may by authority of two justices, seize, and by order of the sessions sell the effects of the father, or mother to maintain the child. By stat. 6 G. 2. c. 31. the mother of a bastard may before or after it is born, swear it to any person; and the putative father shall then on application by the overseer of the parish be apprehended and committed; unless he give security to Act, 4 G. 4. c. 76. before the delivery, or miscarry, or prove not may be a bastard by our law; and therefore to be with child, the reputed father shall be discharged. [So much of 6 G. 2. c. 31. as authorises the commitment of reputed fathers before the birth of the bastard is repealed by 49 G. 3. c. 68. § 6.] Any justice near the parish, on application of the reputed father in custody, shall summon the overseer to show cause against his being discharged; and if no order be made in pursuance of stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. (for the maintenance of the child) within six weeks after the woman's delivery, he shall be discharged .- By the said stat. 6 G.2. c. 31. § 4. it is expressly provided that "It shall not be lawful for the justice to send for any woman before she shall be delivered, or for a month after, in order to be examined concerning her pregnancy; or to compel any woman before her delivery to answer any question relating to her pregnancy. -By stat. 13 G. 3. c. 82. § 5. bastards born in any licensed hospital for pregnant women, are settled in the parishes to which their mothers belong. And the like provision is made by stat. 20 G. 3. c. 36. § 2. as to bastards born in houses of industry.

By stat. 49 G. 3. c. 68. the reputed father of a bastard is chargeable with the expences incident to the birth, and of his own apprehension, and of the order of filiation. Reputed fathers may be apprehended and committed unless they give security to indemnify the parish, or enter into recognizance to appear at the next sessions, unless it shall be certified by one magistrate that the woman had not then been delivered, or been delivered only one month previous to such sessions. § 2. Upon nonpayment of sums ordered for maintenance of bastards, the mother or reputed father may be apprehended and committed for a month or till payment. § 3. Costs thereof to be subject to the discretion of justices in session, as under 18 Eliz. c. 3.

The putative father of a bastard, although no legal relationship subsists between them. is so far considered as its natural guardian, as to be entitled to the custody of it, for its maintenance and education. 2 Stra. 1162; 1 Bott. 2. Of the Murder of Infant-Bastards .- The offence of murdering or concealing the birth of bastards was provided for by 21 Jac. 1. c. 27. which was repealed by 43 G. 3. c. 58; and this latter act is repealed by 9 G. 4 c. 31. (which extends to England only) by § 14. of which is enacted, that if any woman shall be delivered of a child, and shall by secret burying or otherwise disposing of the body, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by two years' imprisonment with hard labour; and it shall not be necessary to prove whether the child died before, at, or after, its birth; and a jury may find a verdict for such offence on trial of the woman for murder. Like provision is made as to Ireland by 10 G. 4. c. 34. § 97. See farther, tit. Children, Murder.

The Scotch act W. and M. Sess. 2. Part. 1. providing that a woman concealing her pregnancy during the whole space, and not calling for help at the birth, the child being found dead or missing, shall be held as the murderer of the child, repealed 49 G. 3. c. 14.

Any woman in Scotland concealing her pregnancy during the whole period, and not calling for help at the birth, if the child be found dead or missing, she shall be imprisoned not exceeding two years in the common gaol. § 2.

In Scotland a bastard is legitimated by the subsequent matrimony of the parents, founded on a fiction that the parents had been married by compact at the period of conception, such consent being deemed a valid marriage by the law of Scotland. But this fiction will not extend to legitimate a bastard conceived and born in England (or elsewhere out of Scotrents after the birth. See Doe, d. Birtwhistle, shall be no wager of battel; and by stat. 6 v. Vardill, 8 D. & R. 135; and the cases of Sheddan v. Patrick; Bowes v. Ld. Strathmore; and Morison v. Saunders, determined at various periods in the House of Lords.

BASTARDY, bastardia.] The defect of birth objected to one born out of wedlock. Bract. lib. 5. c. 19. See Bastard.

BASTARD EIGNE. See Bastard.

BASTON, Fr.] A staff or club. In the statutes it signifies one of the wardens of the Fleet's servants or officers who attend the king's courts with a red staff for taking such into custody who are committed by the court. Stats. 1 R. 2. c. 12: 5 Eliz. c. 23. See Tip. staff.

BAS-VILLE. The suburbs of a town, Fr. BASUS, per basum tolnetum capere, to take toll by strike; and not by heap; per basum being opposed to in cumulo vel cantello. See Consuetud. Domus de Farendon, MS. f. 42.

BATABLE GROUND. Land that lay between England and Scotland, heretofore in question, when they were distinct kingdoms, to which it belonged; litigious or debateable ground, i. e. land about which there is debate; and by that name Skene calls ground that is in controversy. Camb. Britain, tit. Cumberland.

BATH, Lat. Bathon, called by the Britons Badiza, has been termed the city of sick men, Sax. Acemannes Cæster.] It is a place of resort in Somersetshire, famous for its medicinal waters. The chairmen are there to be licensed by the mayor and aldermen, by stat. 7 G. 1. c. 19. And a public hospital or infirmary for poor is established in the city of Bath, the governors whereof have power to hold all charitable gifts, &c. and appoint physicians, surgeons, and other officers: any persons not able to have the benefit of the Bath waters may be admitted into this hospital, their case being attested by some physician, and the poverty of the patients certitified by the minister and churchwardens of the place where they live, &c. Every person so admitted shall have use of the old hot bath, and be entertained and relieved in the hospital; and when cured or discharged, such persons shall be supplied with 3l. each, to defray the expense of removing them back to their parishes, &c. Stat. 12 G. 2. c. 31.

BATHING. The public have no common law right of bathing in the sea, nor as incident thereto, of crossing the sea-shore on foot, or with bathing machines for that purpose. 5

B. V. A. 268.

BATTEL, Fr. battaile.] A trial by combat, anciently allowed of in our laws, (among other cases,) where the defendant in appeal of murder or felony might fight with the appellant, and make proof thereby whether he be culpable or innocent of the crime.

The citizens of London were privileged by charter, that in appeals by any of them, there R. 2. c. 6. defendant could not be received to wage battle in an appeal of rape. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 45.

The species of trial by wager of battel (says Blackstone) was introduced into England, among other Norman customs, by William the Conqueror; but was only used in three cases, one military, one criminal, and the third civil.-The first in the martial court, or court of chivalry and honour: Co. Litt. 261; the second in appeals of felony; and the third, upon issue joined in a writ of right, the last and most solemn decision of real property, in which latter it appears to have been admitted for the sake of such claimants as might have the true right, but yet by the death of witnesses or other defect of evidence, be unable to prove it to a jury.

The last trial by battle that was waged in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster; [though there was afterwards one in the court of chivalry, in 1631, 6 Car. 1. between Donald Lord Ray, appellant, and David Ramsey, Esquire, defendant, which was compromised; see Orig. Jurid. 65; 19 Raym. 322; and another in the county palatine of Durham in 1638; Cro. Car. 512;] was in 13 Eliz. A. D. 1571, as reported by Dyer, and held in Tothill-fields, Westminster, See Dy. 301. and Spelm. in v. Campus; the latter of whom was

In 1819, an appeal having been brought against one Thornton by Ashby, the intant brother of a young woman, whom he was accused of having murdered (after violation), all the judges of the Court of King's Bench narrowly escaped the necessity of being compelled to sit from sunrise to sunset to see the defendant prove his innocence against the infant's champion. A slip in the proceedings fortunately relieved the judges from this method of doing justice, and the recurrence of such an emergency was prevented by stat. 59 G. 3. c. 46. which declares, "that the trial by battle in any suit is a mode of trial unfit to be used; and it is expedient that the same should be wholly abolished," and it is abolished accordingly. See tit. Appeal.

BATERSEGA. Battersey. BATTERY. See tit. Assault.

BATTERY, PENDENTE LITE. The offence of attacking an adversary in a law-suit, while the suit is depending. By two Scotch acts, 1584, c. 138. and 1594, c. 219. the plaintiff of fending is to lose the sum sued for, and the defendant is condemned without farther proof. in terms of the conclusion of the libel or declaration. These acts have been held in force as late as 1789.

BATUS, Lat. from the Sax. bat.] A boat, and battellus a little boat. Chart. Ed. 1: 20 Julii, 18 regni. Hence we have an old word batswain, for such as we now call boatswain of a ship.

BAUBELLA, baubles.] A word mentioned, ble shall go with them before a justice of the in Hoveden in R. 1. and signifies jewels or precious stones.

BAUDEKIN, baldicum, and baldekinum.] Cloth of baudekin, or gold; it is said to be the richest cloth, now called brokade, made with gold and silk, or tissue, upon which figures in silk, &c. were embroidered.

BAWDY-HOUSE, Lupanar fornix.] A house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes. keeping of a bawdy-house comes under the cognizance of the temporal law as a common nuisance, not only in respect of its endangering the public peace by drawing together dissolute and debauched persons, and promoting quarrels, but also in respect of its tendency to corrupt the manners of the people, by an open profession of lewdness. 3 Inst. 205: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74. Those who keep bawdyhouses are punishable with fine and imprisonment; and all such infamous punishment, as pillory, &c. as the court in discretion shall inflict; and a lodger who keeps only a single room for the use of bawdry, is indictable for keeping a bawdy-house. 1 Salk. 382. Persons resorting to a bawdy-house are punishable, and they may be bound to their good behaviour, &c. But if one be indicted for keeping or frequenting a bawdy-house, it must be expressly alleged to be such a house, and that the party knew it, and not by suspicion only. Poph. 208. A man may be indicted for keeping bad women in his house. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61. § 2. A constable upon information, that a man and woman are gone to a lewd house, or about to commit fornication or adultery, may, if he finds them together, carry them before a justice of the peace without any warrant, and the justice may bind them over to the sessions. Dalt. 214.

Constables in these cases may call others to their assistance, enter bawdy-houses, and arrest the offenders for a breach of the peace; in London they may carry them to prison; and by the custom of the city, whores and bawds may be carted. 3 Inst. 206.

As to a married woman's being indicted for keeping a house of ill-fame, see tit. Baron and Feme, VII.

But it is said a woman cannot be indicted for being a bawd generally; for that the bare solicitation of chastity is not indictable. Pawk. P. C. c. 74. § 1: 1 Salk. 352.

It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-house; yet some of our historians mention bawdy-houses, brothel-houses, or stews, publicly allowed here in former times, till the reign of Hen. 8. by whom they were suppressed about A. D. 1546; and writers assign the number to be eighteen thus allowed on the bank-side in Southwark. See Brothel-houses.

By stat. 25 G. 2. c. 36. made perpetual by stat. 28 G. 2. c. 19. if two inhabitants, paying scot and lot, shall give notice to a constable of any person keeping a bawdy-house, the constapeace, and shall (upon such inhabitants making oath, that they believe the contents of such notice to be true, and entering into a recognizance of 20l. each, to give material evidence of the offence,) enter into a recognizance of 30l. to prosecute with effect such person for such offence at the next sessions: the constable shall be paid his reasonable expences by the overseers of the poor, to be ascertained by two justices; and if the offender be convicted, the overseers shall pay to the two inhabitants 10l. each. On the constable's entering into such recognizance as aforesaid, the justice shall bind over the person accused to the next sessions, and if he shall think proper, demand security for such person's good behaviour in the mean time. A constable neglecting his duty forfeits 201. Any person appearing as master or mistress. or as having the care or management of any bawdy-house, shall be deemed the keeper thereof, and liable to be punished as such. The same act also directs the licensing by magistrates of all public places within twenty miles of the metropolis. See also 58 G. 3. c. 70. § 7, 8. as to notice to overseers of the poor, who are to be the prosecutors in such cases; and the payment of costs to witnesses.

BAY, or pen, is a pond-head made up of a great height, to keep in water for the supply of a mill, &c. so that the wheel of the mill may be driven by the water coming thence, through a passage or flood-gate. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 19. A harbour where ships ride at sea, near some port, is also called a bay.

BEACON, from the Sax. beacn, signum, whence the English beckon to nod or to make a sign.] A signal well known; being a fire maintained on some eminence near the coasts of the sea. 4 Inst. 148. Hence beaconage (beaconagium), money paid towards the maintenance of beacons. See stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 3. as to keeping watch on the sea coast.

Barrington, in his observations on this statute, introduces the copy of an order of ancient date cited by Prynne in his remarks on Coke's 4 Inst. showing the stations fixed on for beacons in Kent and Essex, viz. at the Isle of Sheppy in Kent; at Shorebury in Essex; at Hoo in Kent; at Tolbing in Essex; at Cleve in Kent; at Tilbury in Essex; at Gravesend in Kent; and at Famedon in Essex.

See Barr. 5 edit. p. 369.

The erection of beacons, light-houses, and sea-marks, is a branch of the royal prerogative; whereof the first was anciently used in order to alarm the country, in the case of the approach of an enemy; and all of them are signally useful in guiding and preserving vessels at sea by night as well as by day. For this purpose the king hath the exclusive power, by commission under his great seal (3 Inst. 204: 4 Inst. 148.) to cause them to be erected in fit and convenient places (4 Inst. 136.), as well upon the lands of the subject as upon the demesnes of the crown: which fair pleading, viz. for not pleading fairly or power is usually vested by letters patent in the office of lord high admiral Nid. 158: 4 Inst. 149.) or the Admiralty board. And by stat. 8 Eliz. c. 13. the corporation of the Trinity House are empowered to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they shall think them necessary; and if the owner of the land or any other person shall destroy them, or shall take down any steeple, tree, or other known sea-mark, he shall forfeit 100% or in case of inability to pay it, he shall be ipse facto outlawed. I Comm. 265.—See the stats. 4 Ann. c. 20. and 8 Ann. c. 17. for building the Eddystone light-house near Plymouth, and raising the duties payable by ships for its support; and stat. 3 G. 2. c. 36, as to the lighthouse on the rock Skerries, near Holyhead, in the county of Anglesea.

BEAD, or bede, Sax. bead, oratio. A prayer; so that to say over beads, is to say over one's prayers. They were most in use before printing, when poor persons could not go to the charge of a manuscript book: though they are still used in many parts of the world, where the Roman Catholic religion prevails. They are not allowed to be brought into England, or any superstitious things, to be used here, under the penalty of a pramunire, by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2.

BEAM. That part of the head of a stag where the horns grow, from the Sax. beam, i. e. arbor; because they grow out of the head as branches out of a tree. Beam is likewise used for a common balance of weights in cities and towns.

BEAMS and BALANCE, for weighing goods and merchandize in the city of London.

See tit. Weights and Measures.

BEARERS. Such as bear down or oppress others, and is said to be all one with maintainors.—Justices of assise shall inquire of, hear and determine maintainors, bearers, and conspirators, &c. Stat. 4. Ed. 3. c. 11.

BEARROCSIRA, Berkshire,

BEAST, ordinarily kept in a state of confinement, not being the subject of larceny at common law; persons stealing or having in possession, or the skin thereof punishable summarily before one or two justices, by 7, 8 G. 4. c. 20. § 32.

BEASTS of chase, fera campestres.] Are five, viz. the buck, doc, fox, marten, and rec. Manw. part 1. p. 342. Beasts of the forest (feræ silvestres) otherwise called beasts of venary, are the hart, hind, boar, and wolf. Ibid. part 2. c. 4. Beasts and fowls of the warren are the hare, coney, pheasant, and partridge. Ibid. Reg. Orig. 95, 96. Sc. Co. Lit. 233.—

BEAU-PLEADER, pulchre placitando, Fr. beauplaider, i. e. to plead fairly.] Is a writ upon the statute of Marlbridge, 52 H. 3. c. 11. whereby it is enacted, that neither in the circuit of justices nor in counties, hundreds, or courts-baron, any fines shall be taken for aptly to the purpose; upon which statute this writ was ordained, directed to the sheriff, bailiff, or him who shall demand such fine, and it is a prohibition not to do it: whereupon an alias and pluries and attachment may be had, &c. New. Nat. Br. 596, 597. And beaupleader is as well in respect of vicious pleadings, as of the fair pleading, by way of amendment. 2 Inst. 122.

BEBBA. Bamburgh, in Northamptonshire. BEDEL, bedellus, Sax. bydel, Fr. bedeau.] A crier or messenger of a court, that cites men to appear and answer; and is an interior officer of a parish or liberty, very well known in London, and the suburbs. There are likewise university bedels, and church bedels, now called summoners and apparitors; and Manwood in his Forest Laws, saith there are forest bedels, that make all manner of garnishments for the courts of the forest, and all proclamations, and also execute the process of the forest, like unto bailiffs errant of a sheriff in his county. Cowel.

BEDELARY, bedelaria.] The same to a hedel, as bailiwick to a bailiff. Lit. lib. 3. cap.

5: Blount: Cowel.

BEDEREPE, alias biderepe, Sax.] A service which certain tenants were anciently bound to perform, viz. to reap their landlord's corn at harvest; as some yet are fied to give them one, two, or three day's work, when commanded. This customary service of inferior tenants was called in the Latin pracaria bedreprum, Sc. See Magna Pracaria.

BEDEWERI. Those which we now call landitti; profligate and excommunicated perwills. The word is mentioned in Mat. Paris, anno 1258.

By 11 G. 4. and 1 W. 4. c. 64, reciting that it is expedient for the better supplying the public with beer, to give greater facilities for the sale thereof, than are at pres at afford d by licences to keepers of inns, al-houses, and victualling-houses, it is enacted that any person obtaining a licence under the act may sell small beer, ale, and porter by retail, in any house or premises specified in the heener; and any householder may obtain an excise licence for that purpose, giving sureties, and also paying two guineas for the licence, which is to be valid for twelve calendar months; no such licence to entitle the party to receive a licence to sell wine, or spirits; nor to be granted to a sheriff's efficer, or officer executing the process of any court of justice; nor to any person not being a householder assessed to the poor rates in the parish where he is licensed; and a list of the persons licensed, and the sureties, and the name and description of the house, shall be kept at the Excise-office, or at the office of the collector or supervisor of excise, and open to the inspection of any magistrate of the county or place where such house shall be situate. The licence duty is to be under the management of the commissioners of excise, and the pro- | any day appointed for a public fast or thanks-The parties licensed are to put up boards with the words "Licensed to sell Beer by retail," under a penalty of 10l.; and a party selling beer without licence is liable to a penalty of 20l.

By § 11. it is lawful for any one justice for any county or place where any riot shall happen, or for any two or more justices where any riot may be expected, to order any licensed house to be closed at such time as they shall direct. By § 13. any person selling beer, or under such licence, who shall permit any drunkenness or disorderly conduct in such house, and every person who shall transgress the conditions specified in the licence, or allow them to be transgressed, shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct, and for the first offence forfeit not less than 40s. nor more than 51.; for the second offence not less than 51. nor more than 10l; and for the third offence not less than 201. nor more than 501. By § 14. the licensed houses are not to be opened before four in the morning, nor after ten at night; nor between the hours of ten and one, and of three and five on Sunday, Good Friday, Christmas-day, or any fast, or thanksgivingday, under a penalty of 40s. for every offence; and every separate sale of beer, &c. to be a separate offence. By § 29, the act is not to affect any privileges or authorities of the two universities, or of the master, wardens, &c. of the vintners in London, nor to prohibit persons selling beer in booths at lawful fairs. As to the exporting, selling, measuring, &c., see tits. Alchouses, Brewers, Navigation Acts, Weights and Measures.

By the 4 and 5 W. 4. c. 85. the provisions of the 1 W. 4. c. 64. allowing the sale of beer to be drunk on the premises, are repealed. Licenses henceforth to be granted for the sale of beer are not to authorise its consumption on the premises, unless granted upon a certificate of good character, signed by six rated inhabitants of the parish, &c., and certified by one of the overseers, which is to be deposited with the commissioners of excise.

§ 3. Penalty of 5l. on overseers refusing to certify as required.

§ 4. Permitting drinking beer in a neighbouring house or in any shed, &c., with intent to evade the provisions of the act, to be deemed drinking on the premises.

§ 5. Provisions for billetting soldiers under mutiny act shall extend only to persons licensed to sell beer or cider on the premises.

§ 6. Justices of the peace at their petty sessions are, once a year, to regulate the times of opening and closing houses; any one aggrieved may appeal to the sessions, giving the justices fourteen days' notice. Provided that the hour so to be fixed for opening any such house shall not be earlier than five in the morning, or for closing later than eleven at night, or before one o'clock in the afternoon on Sunday, Good Friday, Christmas-day, or

§ 7. Constables and officers of police may visit licensed houses when they shall think proper, and owners of such houses, or any other person in their employment, or by their direction, refusing constable, &c. admittance, shall forfeit 51. and costs, and for a second offence may be disqualified for selling beer, &c. by retail for two years.

§ 8. Imposes a penalty of 201. for making or using false certificates, and licences obtained on false certificates are to be void.

§ 10. Retailers are compellable to produce their licenses on the requisition of two magistrates, under a penalty of 5l.

§ 11. The powers, provisions, and penalties of 1 W. 4. c. 64. are to apply to persons licensed under this act, and to their sureties, &c.

§ 13. Repeals the duties on beer licenses under the 1 W. 4. c. 64. repealed, and grants new duties in lieu thereof; viz. for a licence to sell beer not to be drunk on the premises, the annual sum of 1l. 1s.; where consumed upon the premises, 3l. 3s.

§ 17. Penalty on unlicensed persons selling beer and cider by retail to be drunk off the premises, 10t.; to be drunk on the premises, § 18. The board over the door is to state "Not to be drunk on the premises," or "To be drunk on the premises."

§ 19. Every sale of beer, cider, or perry, in any less quantity than four gallons and a half, shall be deemed a selling by retail. § 20. Persons licensed to sell beer or cider under this act are liable to penalties for selling spirits or wine without licence.

§ 21. Such certificate shall not be required as to any house within the cities of London and Westminster, or the bills of mortality, or or within any city, or within the distance of one mile from the place used at the last elec-tion as the place of election or polling place of any town returning a member or members to parliament; provided the population, according to the last parliamentary census taken in such city, &c., shall exceed 5,000; provided always, that no licence for the sale of beer, ale, porter, cider, or perry, by retail on the premises, in London and Westminster, or within the bills of mortality, or in any such city, &c. hereinbefore mentioned, shall be granted after the 5th of April, 1836, unless the house in which beer or cider is intended to be sold shall be of the value of 10l. per annum.

BENEFICE, beneficium.] Is generally taken for any ecclesiastical living or promotion; and benefices are by stat. 13 R. 2. st. 2. c. 2. divided into elective and donative : so also it is used in the canon law. 3 Inst. 155. Duarenus de beneficiis, lib. 2. c. 3. All church preferments and dignities are benefices; but they must be given for life, not for years, or at will. Deaneries, prebendaries, &c. are benefices with cure of souls, though not comprehended as such within the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13. of residence: but, according to a more strict and proper acceptation, benefices are only rectories and vicarages.—The word benefice was formerly applied to portions of land, &c. given by lords to their followers for their maintenance; but afterwards, as these tenures became perpetual and hereditary, they left their name of beneficia to the livings of the clergy, and retained to themselves the name of feuds.-And beneficium was an estate in land at first granted for life only, so called, because it was held ex mero beneficio of the donor; and the tenants were bound to swear fealty to the lord, and to serve him in the wars, those estates being commonly given to military men: but at length, by consent of the donor, or his heirs, they were continued for the lives of the sons of the possessors, and by degrees past into an inheritance: and sometimes such benefices were given to bishops, and abbots, subject to the like services, viz. to provide men to serve in the wars; and when they as well as the laity had otbained a property in those lands, they were called regalia when given by the king; and on the death of a bishop, &c. returned to the king till another was chosen. Spelm of Feuds, c. 21; Blount. verb. Beneficium. See tit. Tenure. For matter relating to Ecclesiastical Benefices, and the requisites of the clergy admitted thereto, &c., see titles Advowson, Parson, Tithes.

BENEFICIO PRIMO ECCLESIASTICO

BENEFIT OF DISCUSSION, is that whereby the antecedent heir, such as the heir of line, in a pursuit against the heir of tailzie, &c. must be first pursued to fulfil the defunct's deeds, and pay his debts: this benefit is likewise competent in many cases to cautioners. Scotch Dict.

BENER'TH. An ancient service which the tenant rendered to his lord with his plough and cart. Lamb. Itin. p. 222: Co. Lit. 86.
BENEVOLENCE, benevolentia.] Is used in the chronicles and statutes of this realm for a voluntary gratuity given by the subjects to the king, Stow's Annals, p. 701. And Stow saith that it grew from Edward the Fourth's days; you may find it also anno 11 H. 7. c. 10. yielded to that prince in regard of his great expences in wars, and otherwise. 12 Rep. 19. And by act of parliament, 13 Car. 2. c. 4. it was given to his majesty King Charles II., but with a proviso that it should not be drawn into future example, as those benevolences were frequently extorted without a real and voluntary consent, so that all supplies of this nature are now by way of taxes, by grant of parliament; any other way of raising money for the crown is illegal. Stat. 1 Wm. & M. st. 2. c. 2. In other nations benevolences are sometimes given to lords of the fee by their tenants, &c. Cassan. de Consuet. Burg. p. 134. 136 .- See tit. Taxes.

BERBIAGE, herbiagium.] Nativi tenentes manerii de Calistocke reddunt per ann. de certo redditu vocat. berbiagg. ad le Hokeday, xix. s. MS. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall. Blount.

BERBICARIA. A sheep down, or ground to feed sheep. Leg Alfredi, c. 9: Monasticon.

tom. 1. p. 308. See next article.

BERCARIA, berchery, from the Fr. bergerie.) A sheepfold, or other inclosure, for the keeping of sheep; in Domesday it is written berquarium. 2 Inst. 476: Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 590. Bercarius is taken for a shepherd: and bercaria, is said to be abbreviated from berbicaria, and berbex; hence come berbicus, a ram, berbica, an ewe, caro berbicina, mutton. Cowl.

BERCEIA BERCHERIA. Berkshire. BERECHINGUM. Barking, in Essex.

BEREFELLARII. There were seven churchmen so called, anciently belonging to the church of St. John of Beverley. Cowel:

BERGHMASTER, from the Sax. berg, a hill, quasi, master of the mountains.] Is a bailiff or chief officer among the Derbyshire miners, who also executes the office of a coroner. Esc. de An. 16 Ed. 1 num. 34. in Turre or miner, a bergman. Blount.

BERGMOTH, or BERGHMOTE. Comes from the Sax. berg, a hill, and gemote, an assembly: and is as much as to say, an assembly or court upon a hill, which is held in Derbyshire, for deciding pleas and controversies among the miners. And on this court of berghmote, Mr. Manlove, in his Treatise of the Customs of the Miners, hath a copy of verses, with references to statutes, &c. Vide Squire on the Anglo-Saxon Government.

BERIA, berie, berry, a large open field.] Those cities and towns in England which end with that word, are built in plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Sir Henry Spelman imagines. Most of our glossographers, in the names of places, have confounded the word beri with that of bury and borough, as the appellatives of ancient towns; whereas the true sense of the word berie is a flat wide campaign, as is proved from sufficient authorities by the learned Du Fresne, who observes, that Beria Sancti Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Paris. sub anno 1174, is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain. To this may be added, that many flat and wide meads and other open grounds are called by the name of beries, and berry-fields; the spacious meadow between Oxford and Isley was, in the reign of king Athelstan, called Bery. As is now the largest pasture ground in Quarendon, in the county of Buckingham, known by the name And though these meads of Bery field. have been interpreted demesne or manor meadows, yet they were truly any flat or open meadows that lay adjoining to any vill or farm.

BERMUNDI INSULA. Bermondsey, in BERRA. A plain open heath. Berras assartare, to grub up such barren heaths.

Cowel.

BERNET, Incendium, comes from the Sax. byran, to burn.] It is one of those crimes which, by the laws of H. 1. cap. 15. emendari non possunt. Sometimes it is used to signify any capital offence. Leges Canuti apud Brompt. c. 90: Leg. H. 1. c. 12. 47.

BERTON. See Barton.

BEREWICHA, or BERWICA. Villages or hamlets belonging to some town or manor. This word often occurs in Domesday: ista sunt berewichæ ejusdem manerii.

BERWICK. The town of Berwick-upon-Tweed was originally part of the kingdom of

The Germans call a mountaineer, | Scotland; and as such was, for a time, reduced by king Edward I. into the possession of the crown of England: and, during such its subjection, it received from that prince a charter, which (after its subsequent cession by Edward Baliol, to be for ever united to the crown and realm of England) was confirmed by king Edward III. with some additions; particularly that it should be governed by the laws and usages which it enjoyed during the time of king Alexander, that is, before its reduction by Edward I. Its constitution was new modelled, and put upon an English footing, by a charter of king James I., and all its liberties, franchises, and customs, were confirmed in parliament by stats. 22 E. 4. c. 8. and 3 Jac. 1. c. 28. Though, therefore, it hath some local peculiarities, derived from the ancient laws of Scotland; (see Hale Hist. C. L. 183: 1 Sid. 382. 462: 2 Show. 365;) yet it is clearly part of the realm of England, being represented by burgesses in the House of Commons, and bound by all acts of the British parliament, whether specially named or otherwise. And, therefore, it was, perhaps, superfluously declared by stat. 20 G. 2. c. 42. that where England only is mentioned in any act of parliament, the same, notwithstanding, hath been, and shall be, deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales and town of Berwickupon-Tweed. And though certain of the king's writs or processes of the courts of Westminister do not usually run into Berwick, any more than the principality of Walcs, yet it hath been solemnly adjudged, that all prerogative writs (as those of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, &c.) may issue to Berwick, as well as to every other of the dominions of the crown of England; and that indictments and other local matters arising in the town of Berwick, may be tried by a jury of the county of Northumberland. Cro. Jac. 543: 2 Ro. Ab. 292: stat. 11 G. 1. c. 4: 2 Burr. 834: 1 Comm. 99.

The case quoted from 2 Burr. 834. is that of the King v. Cowle; and lays down the great principles which determine the prerogative of the Court of King's Bench over the dominions of the crown part of the realm of England, but not in England proper.

BERY, or BURY. The vill or seat of habitation of a nobleman, a dwelling or man-sion-house, being the chief of a manor; from the Sax. beorg, which signifies a hill or castle; for, heretofore, noblemen's seats were castles, situate on hills, of which we have still some As in Herefordshire, there are the beries of Stockton, Hope, &c. It was anciently taken for a sanctuary. See Beria.
BESAILE, or BESAYLE, Fr. besayeul, proavus.] The father of the grandfather; and in the common law it signifies a writ that lies where the great grandfather was seised, the day that he died, of any lands or tenements in fee-simple; and, after his death, a stranger entered the same day upon him, and keeps out married: but is now used by an almost unithe heir. F. N. B. 222. See tit. Mort d'Ancestor.

of Actions, II. 1.

BESCHA, from the Fr. bercher, fodere, to dig.] A spade or shovel. Hence perhaps, una bescata terra inclusa (Mon. BEBERCHES. Bid-works, or customary services done at the bidding of the lord by his inferior tenants. Cowel.

BEWARED. An old Saxon word signifying expended; for, before the Britons and Saxons had plenty of money, they traded wholly in exchange of wares. Blount.

BIBROCI, -ORUM. People of Berkshire.

BIDALE, or BIDALL, precaria potaria, from the Saxon biddan, to pray or supplicate.] Is the invitation of friends to drink ale at the house of some poor man, who thereby hopes a charitable contribution for his relief: it is still in use in the West of England: and is mentioned stat. 26 H. S. c. 6. And something like this seems to be what we commonly call house-warming, when persons are invited and visited in this manner, on their first beginning house-keeping.
BIDDING OF THE BEADE, bidding, from the Saxon biddan.] Was anciently a charge or warning given by the parish priest to his parishioners at some special times to come to prayers, either for the soul of some friend departed, or upon some other particular occasion. And at this day our ministers, on the Sunday preceding any festival or holiday in the following week, give notice of them, and desire and exhort their parishioners to observe them as they ought, which is required by our canons.

BIDENTES. Two yearlings, tags, or sheep of the second year. Paroch. Antiq. p. 216.

BIDUANA. A fasting for the space of two days. Matt. West. p. 135.

BIGA, bigata.] A cart or chariot drawn with two horses coupled side to side; but it is said to be properly a cart with two wheels, sometimes drawn by one horse; and in our ancient records it is used for any cart, wain, or wagon. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 256.

BIGAMUS. One guilty of bigamy.

this word properly signifies the being twice marriage, the effect may be avoided by eviversal corruption, to signify the offence of polygamy, or the having a plurality of wives or husbands at once. 3 Inst. 88.

Bigamy, according to the canonists, consisted in marrying two virgins successively, one after the death of the other, or in once marrying a widow. Such were esteemed incapable of holy orders; probably on the ground of St. Paul's words, 1 Tim. c. 5. v. 2. "That a bishop should be the husband of one wife," and they were by a canon of the council of Lyons, A. D. 1274, denied all clerical pri-

A second marriage, the former husband or wife living, is, by the ecclesiastical law of England, simply void, and a mere nullity; but the legislature has thought it just to make it felony, by reason of its being so great a violation of the public economy and decency of a well ordered state. By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. \S 22. and 10 G. 4. c. 34. \S 26. for Ireland), it is enacted, that if any person being married, shall marry another person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage has taken place in England or Ireland, or elsewhere, such offender, and persons counselling, aiding, or abetting, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for seven years, or imprisoned not exceeding two years; and the offence may be tried in the county where the offender is apprehended or be in custody. A proviso in the act, however, contains these four exceptions: 1. When the second marriage is contracted out of England by one not a subject of his majesty. 2. When either of the parties have been continually absent from each other for seven years, and not know the other to be living. 3. Where there is a divorce. 4. Where the first marriage has been declared

On an indictment for bigamy, if the first marriage was in Ireland, by licence, but without consent of parents, one of the parties being under age, such marriage will support the indictment, not having been vacated within the year, as required by the Irish Marriage Act, 9 G. 2. c. 11. Rex v. Jacobs, 1 Ry. & M. 140.

Under the former stat. of Jac. 1. (now repealed) if the first marriage were beyond sea, and the latter in England, the party might have been indicted for it here; because the latter marriage was the offence; but not vice versa. See 1 Hawk. P. C. 174, 175: 1 Hale's P. C. 692: 1 Sid. 171: Kel. 80. Lord Hale seems most precise on the question. The other writers make a query. See also 3 Inst. 88: Cro. Eliz. 94.

A sentence in the ecclesiastical coart against a marriage, in a suit for jactitation, does not preclude the proof of a marriage on an indictment on the statute. And admitting BIGAMY, bigamia.] A double marriage; such sentence were conclusive as to the fact of dence of fraud and collusion in obtaining the bill, upon the scaling and delivery is debitum sentence. 11 St. Tr. 262. Duchess of King- in præsenti, though solvendum in futuro. On ston's case.

tion, &c. See Bye-Laws.

BILANCIIS DEFERENDIS, an obsolete writ directed to a corporation, for the carrying of weights to such a haven, there to weigh the wool that persons by our ancient laws were licensed to transport. Reg. Orig. 270.

BILL, billa.] Is diversely used in law proceedings: it is a declaration in writing, expressing either the wrong the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of, or else some fault committed against some law or statute of the realm; and this bill is sometimes addressed to the lord chancellor of England, especially for unconscionable wrongs done to the complainant; and sometimes to others having jurisdiction, according as the law directs. It contains the fact complained of, the damage thereby sustained, and petitions of process against the defendant for redress; and it is made use of as well in criminal as civil matters. See tits. Chancery: Equity.

In criminal cases, where a grand jury upon a presentment or indictment find the same to be true, they indorse on it billa vera; and thereupon the offender is said to stand indicted of the crime, and is bound to make answer unto it; and if the crime touch the life of the person indicted, it is then referred to the jury of life and death, viz. the petty jury, by whom, if he be found guilty, then he shall stand convicted of the crime, and is by the judge condemned to death. Terms de Ley, 86: 3 Inst. 30. See Ignoramus and Indict-

Many of the proceedings in the King's Bench are by bill; but now by the act for uniformity of process, the proceedings in all the courts are commenced by a writ of summons where not bailable, or by a capias where bailable. See tits. Amendment, Original, Process, &cc.

Proceedings by bill in the Court of King's Bench are now abolished, except in ejectment.

See Original, Process, &c.

Bill is also a common engagement for money given by one man to another; being sometimes with a penalty, called penal bill, and sometimes without a penalty, then called a single bill, though the latter is most frequently used. By a bill we ordinarily understand a single bond without a condition; and it was formerly all one with an obligation, save only its being called a bill when in English, and an obligation when in Latin. West. Symbol, lib. 2. sect. 146. Where there is a bill of 1001. to be paid on demand, it is a duty presently, and there needs no actual demand. Dyer, 231. pl. 3: Raym. 486. Cra. Eliz. 548. And a single obligation or a collateral promise to pay money on demand, there must be a special demand: but between the parties it is a debt, and said to be sufficiently demanded by the action: it is otherwise where the money is to be paid to a third person; or where there is a penalty. 3 Keb. 176. If a person acknowledge himself by bill obligatory to be indebted to another in the sum of 50l., and by the same bill binds him and his heirs in 100l, and says not to whom he is bound, it shall be intended he is bound to the person to whom the bill is made. Roll. Ab. 148. A bill obligatory written in a book with the party's hand and seal to it is good. Cro. Eliz. 613: see 2 Roll. Ab. 146.

These kinds of bills are now superseded in use, the single bills by the more modern traffic of Bills of Exchange, and the penal bills by Bonds or Obligations. See those titles.

BILL IN CHANCERY. See tits. Chancery, Equity.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS TO EVI-DENCE. At common law a writ of error lay, for an error in law apparent in the record, or for error in fact, where either party died before judgment; yet it lay not for an error in law not appearing in the record; and therefore, where the plaintiff or demandant, tenant or defendant, alleged any thing ore tenus, which was overruled by the judge, this could not be assigned for error, not appearing within the record, not being an error in fact, but in law, and so the party grieved was without remedy. 2 Inst. 426. And therefore by the stat. of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 31. "when one impleaded before any of the justices, alleges an exception, praying they will allow it, and if they will not, if he that alleges the exception writes the same, and requires that the justices will put to their seals, the justices shall so do, and if one will not, another shall; and if, upon complaint made of the justice, the King cause the record to come before him, and the exception be not found in the roll, and the plaintiff show the written exception, with the seal of the justice thereto put, the justice shall be commanded to appear at a certain day, either to confess or deny his scal, and if he cannot deny his seal, they shall proceed to judgment according to the exception, as it ought to be allowed or disal-

This statute extends to the plaintiff as well as defendant, also to him who comes in loco tenentis, as one that prays to be received, or the vouchee; and in all actions whether real, personal, or mixed. 2 Inst. 427.

This statute extends not only to all pleas dilatory and peremptory, but to prayers to be received, oyer of records and deeds, &c.; also to challenges of jurors, and any material evidence offered and over-ruled. 2 Inst. 427:

The exceptions ought to be put in writing

sedente curia, in the presence of the judge | Nores, being implicated together, are here who tried the cause, and signed by the counconsidered under one head, and thus arranged: sel on each side; and then the bill must be drawn up and tendered to the judge that tried the cause to be sealed by him; and when signed, there goes out a scire facias to the same judge ad cognoscendum scriptum, and that is made part of the record, and the return of the judge, with the bill itself, must be entered on the issue-roll; and if a writ of error be brought, it is to be returned as part of the record. 1 Nels. Ab. 373. If a bill of exceptions is drawn up, and tendered to the judge for sealing, and he refuses to do it, the party may have a compulsory writ against him, commanding him to seal it, if the fact alleged be truly stated: and if he returns that the fact is untruly stated, when the case is otherwise, an action will lie against him for making a false return. 3 Comm. 372: Reg. When a bill of exceptions is allowed, the court will not suffer the party to move any thing in arrest of judgment on the point on which the bill of exceptions was allowed. Vent. 366, 367: 2 Lev. 237: 2 Jones, 117.

A bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal; examinable, not in the court out of which the record issues for the trial at Nisi Prius, but in the next immediate superior court, upon a writ of error after judgment given in the court below. 3 Comm. 372.

If a party who, at the trial of a cause, has tendered a bill of exceptions, bring a writ of error before he has procured the judge's signature to the bill of exceptions, he thereby waives the bill of exceptions, and will not be permitted by the court of error afterwards to append the bill of exceptions to the writ of error; and it seemes that if there had been no waiver, a court of error cannot order a party to settle a bill of exceptions, in order that it might be sealed and appended to the transcript of the record. Dillon v. Doe, d. Parker, 11 Price, 100: 1 Bingh. 17: and see Carr. & Pay. 239.

These bills of exceptions are to be tendered before a verdict given; 2 Inst. 427; and extend only to civil actions, not to criminal.

see III.

I. 1. Of the Nature of Bills .- A BILL OF Exchange is an open letter of request, addressed by one person to a second, desiring him to pay a sum of money to a third, or to any other to whom that third person shall order it to be paid: or it may be made payable to bearer.

The person who makes the bill is called the drawer; he to whom it is addressed, the drawee; and when he undertakes to pay the amount, he is then called the acceptor. The person to whom it is ordered to be paid is called the payee; and if he appoint enother to receive the money, that other is called the indorsee, as the payee is, with respect to him, the indorser; any one who happens, for the time, to be in possession of the bill, is called the holder of it.

The time at which the payment is limited to be made is various, according to the circumstances of the parties, and the distance of their respective residences. Sometimes the amount is made payable at sight; sometimes at so many days after sight; at other times at a certain distance from the date. Usance is the time of one, two, or three months after the date of the bill, according to the custom of the places between which the exchanges run; and the nature of which must therefore be shown and averred in a declaration on such a bill.-Double or treble usance is double or treble the usual time; and half usance is half the time.-Where the time of payment is limited by months, it must be computed by calendar, not lunar months: and where one month is longer than the succeeding one, it is a rule not to go in the computation into a third. Thus, on a bill dated the 28th, 29th, 30th, or 31st of January, and payable one month after date, the times expires on the 28th of February in common years, and in the three latter cases in leap- | place the same to account, as per advice for year, on the 29th. [To which are to be added the days of grace. See post.]-Where a bill is payable at so many days after sight, or from the date, the day of presentment, or of the date, is excluded. Thus, where a bill, payable 10 days after sight, is presented on the first day of a month, the 10 days expire on the 11th; where it is dated the 1st, and payable 20 days after date, these expire on the 21st. Ld. Raym. 281: Stra. 829.

A custom has obtained among merchants, that a person to whom a bill is addressed, shall be allowed a few days for payment beyond the term mentioned in the bill, ealled days of grace.—In Great Britain and Ireland three days are given; in other places more. If the last of these three days happen to be Sunday, the bill is to be paid on Saturday. These days of grace are allowed to promissory notes; but not to bills payable at sight.

2. Inland and Foreign Bills.—Bills of exchange are distinguished by the appellation of Foreign and Inland bills; the first being those which pass from one country to another, and the latter such as pass between parties residing in the same country. A bill drawn in Ireland on England is not an inland bill. Mahoney v. Ashlin, 2 Barn. & Adol. 480. Nor a bill drawn in Scotland on Eng-1 Bell's Comm. 330. (4th ed.): and see 1 Barn. & Cres. 192: 1 Moo. & Malk. 66. And the universal consent of merchants has long since established a system of customs relative to foreign bills, which is adopted as part of the law in every commercial estate.

It does not appear that inland bills of exchange were very frequent in England before the reign of Charles II. (see 6 Mod. 29.) And when they were introduced, they were not regarded with the same favour as foreign bills. At length the legislature, by two different statutes, 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 17. and 3 and 4 Ann. c. 9. set both on nearly the same footing; so that what was the law and custom of merchants with respect to the one, is now, in most respects, the established law of the country with respect to the other.

The following are the most general forms of inland and foreign bills of exchange; but which are varied according to circumstances.

The two other bills of the foreign set are varied thus, "first and third," and "first and second not paid."

2. Promissory Notes .- A promissory note is a less complicated kind of security, and may be defined to be an engagement in writing to pay a certain sum of money, mentioned in it, to a person named, or to his order, or to the bearer at large. At first these notes were considered only as written evidence of a debt; for it was held that a promissory note was not assignable or indorsible over, within the custom of merchants; and that if, in fact, such a note had been indorsed or assigned over, the person to whom it was so indorsed or assigned could not maintain an action within the custom against the drawer of the note: nor could even the person to whom it was in the first instance made payable bring such action. Salk. 129: 2 Ld. Raym. 757. 759. But at length they were recognised by the legislature, and put on the same footing with inland bills of exchange, by stat. 3 and 4 Ann. c. 9. (made perpetual by stat. 7 Ann. c. 25. § 3.) which enacts that promissory notes, payable to order or bearer, may be assigned and indorsed, and action maintained thereon, as on

4. The Parties .- By the stats. 15 G. 3. c. 51. and 17 G. 3. c. 30. made perpetual by stat. 27 G. 3. c. 16. all negotiable notes and bills for less than 20s. are declared void; and notes or bills between that sum and 5l. must be made payable within 21 days after date; must particularize the names and descriptions of pounds sterling value received of him, and the payees; must bear date at the time and place they are made; must be attested by a ! subscribing witness, and the indorsement of them must be attended with the same strictness in all respects, and made before the notes or bills become due. See new statutes 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 78: 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 15. as to England: and 9 G. 4. c. 24. as to Irelend.

By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 65, no corporation or person shall utter, in England, notes or bills under 51. made or issued in Scotland or Ire-

Bills of exchange and promissory notes must now be drawn on stamped paper. The stamp is proportioned, under the various acts, to the amount of the bill.—If foreign bills are drawn here, the whole set must be stamped. But bills drawn abroad, of necessity, are not liable to any stamp duty.

Bills of exchange having been first introduced for the convenience of commerce, it was formerly thought that no person could draw one, or be concerned in the negotiation of it, who was not an actual merchant; but it soon being found necessary for others, not at all engaged in trade, to adopt the same mode of remittance and security, it has been since decided that any person capable of binding himself by a contract, may draw or accept a bill of exchange, or be in any way engaged in the negotiation of it (and, since the stat. 3 and 4 Ann. c. 9. be a party to a promissory note), and shall be considered as a merchant for that purpose. Where there are two joint-traders, and a bill is drawn on both of them, the acceptance of one binds the other, if it concern the jointtrade; but it is otherwise if it concern the acceptor only, in a distinct interest and respect. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175. See 7 Term Rep. 207: 1 Barn & C. 146: 13 East, 175: Bac. Ab. vol. 5, p. 402 (ed. by Gwillim and Dodd.

Sometimes exchange is made in the name, and for the account, of a third person, by virtue of full power and authority given by him, and this is commonly termed procuration; and such bills may be drawn, subscribed, indorsed, accepted, and negotiated, not in the name or for the account of the manager or transactor of any or all of these branches of remittances, but in the name and for the account of the person who authorised him. Lex. Merc. 1 Barn. & C. 146.

5. The several kinds of Bills and Notes .-A promissory note, in its original form of a promise from one man to pay a sum of money to another, bears no resemblance to a bill of exchange. When it is indorsed, the rethe indorser to the maker of the note, who, by his promise, is his debtor, to pay the money to the indorsee .- The indorser of the note corresponds to the drawer of the bill; the maker to the drawee or acceptor; and the indorsee to the payee .-- When this point of resemblance is once fixed, the law is fully settled to be exactly the same in bills of exchange and promissory notes; and whenever the law is reported to have been settled with respect to the acceptor of a bill, it is to be considered as applicable to the maker of a note; when with respect to the drawer of a bill, then to the first indorser of a note; the subsequent indorsers and indorsees bear an exact resemblance to one ather. 2 Burr. 676.

Both bills and notes are in two different forms, being sometimes made payable to such a man or his order, or to the order of such a man; sometimes to such a man or bearer, or simply to bearer.

The first kind have always been held to be negotiable; but where they were made payable to the order of such a man, exception has been taken to an action brought by that man himself, on the ground that he had only an authority to indorse; but the exception was not allowed. 10 Mod. 286: 2 Show. 8: Comb. 401: Carth. 403.-And it is now decided law, that bills and notes payable to bearer, are equally transferable as those payable to order; and the transfer in both cases equally confers the right of action on the bona fide holder. 1 Black. The mode of transfer, however, is different; bills and notes payable to bearer are transferred by mere delivery, the others by in-

6. Bank Notes .- The bills and notes mentioned above are considered merely as securities for money; but there is a species of each which is considered as money itself. These are bank notes, bankers' cash notes, and drafts on bankers payable on demand.

Bank notes are treated as money or cash in the ordinary course of transactions of business by common consent, which gives them the credit and currency of money to every effectual purpose; they are as much considered to be money as guineas themselves; 1 Burr. 457: and it seems are as lawful a tender. See stat. 5 W. & M. c. 20. § 28: 3 Term Rep. 554: and Tidd. Pract. (9th ed.)

Banker's cash notes and drafts on bankers are so far considered as money among merchants, that they receive them in payment as ready cash; and if the party receiving them do not within a reasonable time demand the money, he must bear the loss in case of the What shall be construed to be a reasonable time has been subject to much doubt; it was formerly considered as a question of fact depending on the circumstances of the case, to be determined by a jury; but it semblance begins, for then it is an order by is now established to be a question of law to be decided by the court, though the precise | principle there seems to be a material distince is necessarily undetermined. 1 Black. tinction between bills and notes. And on the the hands of the drawee, the objection holds in whole, the best rule in these cases seems to its full force; not only because it may be unbe, that drafts on bankers, payable on decertain whether the fund will be productive, mand, ought to be carried for payment on but because the credit is not given to the person the very day on which they are received, if of the drawer; but where the fund on account from the distance and situation of the parties of which the money is payable, either is in the that may conveniently be done.

A draft on a banker, post-dated, and delivered before the day of the date, though not intended to be used till that day, must be stamped, by the stat. 31 G. 3. c. 25. Allen v. Keeves, 1 East, 435.—See 55 G. 3. c. 184. §

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, spect regarded as specialities, and on the same, being an acknowledgment that he has money footing with bonds; for unless the contrary be shown by the defendant, they are always presumed to have been made on a good consideration; nor is it incumbent on the plaintiff either to show a consideration in his declaration, or to prove it at the trial. 1 Black. Rep. 445: Peckham v. Wood, K. B. East, 18 G. 3.—However, though foreign bills were always entitled to this privilege, it was not without some difficulty that it was extended to inland bills: and notes are indebted for it to the statute. 2 Ld. Raym. 758: 1 Black. Rep. 487.

7. Qualities of Bills and Notes.—Bills of exchange, contrary to the general nature of choses in action, are by the custom of merchants assignable or negotiable without any fiction, and every person to whom they are transferred may maintain an action in his own name against any one who has before him, in the course of their negotiation, rendered himself responsible for their payment. The same privilege is conferred on notes by the statute. But the instrument or writing which constitutes a good bill of exchange according to the custom, or a good note under the stutute must have certain essential qualities. 3 Wils. 213.

One of these qualities is, that the bill or note should be for the payment of money only; and not for the payment of money and the doing some other act; 2 Stra. 1271; for these instruments being originally adopted for the convenience of remittance, and now considered only as securities for the future payment of money, must undertake only for that; and it must be money in specie, not in good East India bonds, or any thing else which can itself be only considered as a security. Bull. N. P. 273.

Another requisite quality is, that the instrument must carry with it a personal and words of engagement make the debt; and it certain credit, given to the drawer or maker, is no direction to any other person; the former not confined to credit on any particular fund. part of the note is a promise to pay the mo3 Wils. 213. But in the application of this ney, and the rest is only fixing the particular hands of the drawer, or he is accountable for it, the objection will not hold, because the credit is personal to him, and the fund is only the consideration of his giving the bill.-With respect to a note, if the drawer promise to pay out of a particular fund then within his power, the note will be good under the statute: the payment does not depend on the cirthough, according to the general principles of cumstance of the fund's proving unproduclaw, they are to be considered only as evi-tive or not, but there is an obligation on his dences of a simple contract, are yet in one re- personal credit; the bare making of the note in his hands. See Joscelyne v. Lassere, Fort. 281. 1361: 10 Mod. 294. 316: Jenny v. Herle, 1 Stra. 591: 2 Ld. Raym. 1361: 8 Mod. 265: Dawkes & Ux. v. Deloraine, 3 Wils. 207: 2 Black. Rep. 782 .- On the principle which governed these cases an order from an owner of a ship to the freighter to pay money on account of freight, was held to be no bill of exchange. 2 Str. 1211.-But such a bill from the freighters of a ship to any other person, if good in other respects, would certainly not be bad, though made payable on account of freight; because indisputably there is a personal credit given to the drawer, the words "on account of freight" only expressing the consideration for which the bill was given. See Pierson v. Dunlop, Doug. 571.-And there may be cases where the instrument may appear at first sight to be payable out of a particular fund, but in reality be only a distinction how the drawee is to reimburse himself, or a recital of the particular species of value received by the maker of a note; in which case their validity rests on the personal credit given to the acceptor of the bill, or drawer of the note. 2 Ld. Raym. 1481. 1545: 2 Stra. 762: Barn. K. B. 12.

Another essential quality to make a good bill or note is, that it must be absolutely payable at all events; and not depend on any particular circumstances which may or may not happen in the common course of things. 3 Wils. 213: 1 Burr. 325: see 2 Ld. Raym. 1362. 1396. 1563: 8 Mod. 363: 4 Vin. 240. pl. 16: 2 Stra. 1151: 4 Mod. 242: 1 Burr. 323. In the case of notes, however, it is not necessary that the time of payment should be absolutely fixed; it is sufficient if, from the nature of the thing, the time must certainly arrive, on which their payment is to depend; 2 Stra. 1217: 1 Burr. 227; for here the time when it is to be paid. It is sufficient if receive a direct judicial decision. There were it be certainly and at all events payable at that time, whether the maker live till then, or die in the interim.-And it has been decided that a promise to pay "within two months after such a ship shall be paid off" will make a good note; for the paying off the ship is a thing of a public nature and morally certain. See I Stra. 24: 1 Wils. 262, 3. But this indulgence seems to have been carried almost too far; and such a latitude seems incompatible with the nature and original intention of a bill of exchange; its allowance in favour of promissory notes arising entirely from a liberal construction of the statute on which the negotiability of those notes depends.

In most of the cases where the several instruments have been denied the privilege of bills and notes, it is not for that reason to be concluded that they are of no force: when the fund from which they are to be paid can be proved to have been productive, or the contingency on which they depend has happened, they may be used as evidence of a contract according to the circumstances of the case, or according to the relation in which the parties stand to one another. See 2 Black. Rep.

No precise form of words is necessary to make a bill of exchange or a note under the statute; any order which cannot be complied with, or promise which cannot be performed, without the payment of money, will make a good bill or note. Thus an order to deliver money, or a promise that such a one shall receive it. 10 Mod. 287: 2 Ld. Raym. 1396: 1 Stra. 629. 706: 1 Wils. 263: 3 Wils. 213: 8 Mod. 364: All. 1.

The words value received being in general inserted in bills and notes, there seems to have been some doubt, whether they were essential; in one case, (Banbury v. Lisset, 2 Stra. 1212,) where the want of these words was objected, a verdict was given on that account against the instrument; but that case seems a very doubtful authority .- On several occasions it appears to have been said incidentally by the court, and at the bar, that these words are unnecessary. Fort. 282: Barn. K. B. 88: 8 Mod. 267: 1 Show. 5. 497: Lord Raym. 1556. 1481: Lutw. 889: 1 Mod. Ent. 310.—And the point is now fully settled that these words are not necessary; for as these instruments are always presumed to have been made on a valuable consideration, words which import no more cannot be essential. White v. Ledwick, K. B. Hil. 25 G. 3: Bayl. Bills, 34. If the bill contain those words an action of debt may be maintained by the drawer against the acceptor. 1 Barn. & C. 674. In a note the words value received import value received from the payee. 5 Barn. & C. 360.

Whether it be essential to the constitution of a bill of exchange, that it should contain words which render it negotiable, as to order or to bearer, did not for a considerable time two cases in which the want of such words was taken as an exception; but as there were two exceptions, the point was not decided. 2 Stra. 1212: 3 Wils. 212. And in another case, the same exception was taken and overruled, but under such circumstances that the point was not generally determined. 2 Wils. 353 .- But in Smith v. Kendall, 6 T. R. 123. 1 Esp. 231. S. C. it was decided, that a promissory note, or bill of exchange, was valid, although it did not contain the words to order, or to bearer. If in a doubtful point, however, it may be allowed to reason on general principles, it should seem, that it being the original intention and the actual use of bills of exchange that they should be negotiable, such drafts as want these operative words are not entitled to be declared on as specialities, however they may be sufficient as evidence to maintain an action of another kind. Kyd. 42.—But it has been ruled that such words are not necessary in notes, and that the person to whom they are made payable may maintain an action on them, within the statute against the maker. Moor v. Paine. Hardw. 288.

II. Acceptances .- An acceptance is an engagement to pay a bill of exchange according to the tenor of the acceptance.-The circumstances which generally concur in an acceptance are, that the party to whom it is addressed binds himself to the payment, after the bill has issued, before it has become due, and according to its tenor; by either subscribing his name or writing the word accepts, or accepted, or accepted A. B. But a man may be bound as acceptor without any of these cir-

An acceptance may be either written or verbal; if the former, it may be either on the bill itself, or in some collateral writing, as a letter, &c. 1 Stru. 648. In foreign bills it has always been understood that a collateral or parol acceptance was sufficient. 1 Stra. 649: 3 Burr. 1674: Hardw. 75. And it is now settled that such acceptance is also good in cases of inland bills; as by word, Lumley v. Palmer, 2 Stra. 1000; or by letter, 1 Atk. 717. (613.) But now by the 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 78. § 2. no acceptance of inland bill shall be sufficient to charge any person unless in writing.

The acceptance is usually made between the time of issuing the bill and the time of payment; but it may also be made before the bill has issued, or after it has become due; when it is made before the bill is issued, it is rather an agreement to accept, than an actual acceptance; but such agreement is equally binding as an acceptance itself. 3 Burr. 1663: Doug. 284: 1 Atk. 715. (611.)—When the acceptance is made after the time of payment is elapsed, it is considered as a general promise to pay the money; and if it be to shall not invalidate the acceptance, though, the time being past, it be impossible to pay according to the tenor; but these words shall be rejected as surplusage. 4 Salk. 127. 9: 1 Ld. Raym. 364. 574: 12 Mod. 214. 410: Carth.

Acceptance is usually made by the drawee, and when before the issuing of the bill, is hardly ever made by any other person; but after the issuing the bill, it often happens either, that the drawee cannot be found, or refuses to accept, or that his credit is suspected; or that he cannot by reason of some disability render himself responsible: in any of these cases an acceptance by another person, in order either to prevent the return of the bill, to promote the negotiation of it, or to save the reputation of, and prevent an action against, the drawer, or some of the other parties, is not uncommon; such an acceptance is called an acceptance for the honour of the person on whose account it is made.

That engagement which constitutes an acceptance is usually made to the holder of the bill, or to some person who has it in contemplation to receive it; and then the acceptor must answer to him, and to every one who either has had the bill before, or shall afterwards have it by indorsement; but it is frequently made to the drawer himself; and then it may be binding on the party making the engagement or not, according to the circumstances of the case.

The mere answer of a merchant to the drawer "that he will duly honour his bill," is not of itself an acceptance, unless accompanied with circumstances which may induce a third person to take the bill by indorsement; but if there be any such circumstances, it may amount to an acceptance, though the answer be contained in a letter to the drawer. Cowp. 572. 4: 1 Atk. 715. (611.) An agreement to accept may be expressed in such terms as to put a third person in a better condition than the drawer. If one, meaning to give credit to another, make an absolute promise to accept his bill, the drawer or any other person may show such promise on the exchange to procure credit, and a third person advancing his money on it has nothing to do with the equitable circumstances which may subsist between the drawer and acceptor. Dougl. 286.

A. in consideration of having commissioned B. to receive certain African bills payable to him, drew a bill upon B. for the amount, payable to his own order; B. acknowledged by letter the receipt of the list of the African bills, and that A. had drawn for the amount and assured him that it would meet due honour from him. This is an acceptance of the bill by B., and the purport of such letter having been communicated by A. to third persons, who, on the credit of it, advanced pay according to the tener of the bill, this money on the bill to A., who indersed it to them; held that B. was liable as acceptor in an action by such indorsees, although, after the indorsement, in consequence of the African bills having been attached in B.'s hands, who was ignerant of his letter having been shown, A. wrote to B. advising him not to accept the bill when tendered to him; which as between A. and B. would have been a discharge of B.'s acceptance if the bill had still remained in A.'s hands. Clarke and others v. Cock, 4 East, 57.

An acceptance is generally according to the tenor of the bill; and then it is called a general and absolute acceptance; but it may differ from the tenor in some material circumstances, and yet, as far as it goes, be binding on the acceptor.—Thus it may be for a less sum than that mentioned in the bill; or it may be for an enlarged period. 1 Stra. 214: Marius, 21.—So the drawee may accept a bill which has no time mentioned for payment, and which is held to be payable at sight, to pay, at a distant period; which acceptance will bind him. 11 Mod. 190.

A bill was payable the 1st of January; the drawce accepted to pay the 1st of March: the holder struck out the 1st of March, and inserted the first of January, and when it was payable according to that date, presented it for payment which the acceptor refused; on which the holder restored the acceptance to the original form; and the court held that it continued binding. Price v. Shute, East, 33 Car. 2.—So the acceptance may direct the payment to be made at a different place from that mentioned in the bill, as at the house of a banker. See 2 Stra. 1195 .- So also the acceptance may differ from the tenor of the bill in its mode of payment, as to pay half in money, half in bills. Bull. N. P. 270.—An acceptance may also be conditional, as "to pay when certain goods consigned to the acceptor, and for which the bill is drawn, shall be sold." 2 Stra. 1152.

What shall be considered as an absolute or conditional acceptance is a question of law to be determined by the court, and is not to be left to the jury. 1 Term. Rep. 182: see 1 Stra. 648: 1 Atk. 717. (612.)—If the acceptance be in writing, and the drawee intend that it should be only conditional, he must be careful to express the condition in writing as well as the acceptance; for if the acceptance should on the face of it appear to be absolute, he cannot take advantage of any verbal condition annexed to it, if the bill should be negotiated and come to the hands of a person unacquainted with the condition; and even against the person to whom the verbal condition was expressed, the burthen of proof will be on the acceptor. Dougl. 286 .- A conditional acceptance, when the conditions on which it depends are performed, becomes absolute. Cowp. 571. But if the conditions will be discharged. Doug. 297.

If the drawee says the bill " will not be accepted until a ship arrives," this amounts to an acceptance on the arrival of the ship. Camp. 393.—So if he say he cannot accept " till stores are paid for," it is an undertaking to accept when the stores are paid for. Camp.

If a person to whom a bill is directed generally accept it, payable at a particular place, the holder need not receive such a qualified acceptance, but may resort to the drawer, as for non-acceptance. C. 1 March, 80. The place of payment writ- W. 4. c. 98. was passed, enacting that all bills ten at the foot of a note is to be considered as of exchange, wherein the drawer shall have a memorandum merely, and need not be men- expressed that such bills are to be payable in tioned in the declaration whether it be in the any place other than the residence of the Williams v. same hand-writing or not.

A bill of exchange payable 30 days after sight, was presented for acceptance, and refused, and duly protested eight days afterwards; it was then accepted by a third person for the honour of the drawer; at the expiration of 30 days from such acceptance, together with the days of grace, it was presented for payment, as well to the original drawees, as to the acceptor for honour; held that these presentments for payment were made at a proper time. An acceptance for honour is not an absolute but a conditional acceptance, and therefore it was held that an averment of presentment to the drawer was necessary in proceedings on such acceptance. Williams v. Germaine, 7 B. & C. 468.

A bill was drawn in America, on C. & Co. of Liverpool, directed to them at Liverpool, requesting them to pay 500l. to L. & Co. or order, in London, and indorsed by L. & Co. to plaintiffs. The bill on presentment to the drawees at Liverpool was refused acceptance, whereupon the defendants accepted it for honour of L. & Co., the payees, in this form: "Accepted under protest, for honour of L. & Co., and will be paid for their account, if regularly protested, and refused when due."
The bill when it became due was presented at the house of the drawees for payment, and refused; whereupon it was protested at Liverpool, and by the next post it was forwarded to London, and two days after it became due, it was presented to the defendants, who refused to pay it, on the ground that it should have been presented and protested in London on the day when due. At the trial at Guildhall, several merchants of eminence, and also notaries, proved that it was usual to protest such a bill in London, where it was made payable, and not at the residence of the drawees; and two notaries for the plaintiff also proved, that such bills were sometimes protested at Liverpool, where the drawce resided. Held by Lord Tenterden, Ch. J. and made, be not complied with, that agreement cessary to decide whether the protest at Liverpool would have been sufficient, if the defendant's acceptance had been general, though they seemed to think it would. But, at all events, the defendants, by stipulating in the acceptance, that the bill must be duly " protested, and refused when due," had rendered it necessary that the bill should be presented on the day when due to the drawees at Liverpool; since it could only be refused when there was some person to whom to present it, and in London there was no such person. Mitchell v. Baring, 10 Barn. & C. 5 Taunt. 344. S. 4. In consequence of this case the 2 and 3 drawee, and which shall not on the presentment for acceptance be accepted, may, without farther presentment to the drawee, be protested for non-payment in the place where such bills are expressed by the drawer to be payable, unless the amount of such bills shall have been paid to the holder, on the day on which such bills would have been payable had the same been duly accepted.

It seems that there must be either a trading partnership, or an express proveable authority, to bind two parties by a bill drawn for a debt, due from both, but accepted only by one in the name of both. Greenslade v.

Dower, 7 B. & C. 635.

A conditional acceptance must be declared on as such, with an averment that the conditions are performed. Langton v. Corney, 4

Camp. 176.

An acceptance by the custom of merchants as effectually binds the acceptor, as if he had been the original drawer; and, having once accepted it, he cannot afterwards revoke it. Cro. Jac. 308: Hard. 487.

A very small matter will amount to an acceptance; and any words will be sufficient for that purpose which show the party's assent or agreement to pay the bill; as if upon the tender thereof to him, he subscribes, accepted, or accepted by me A. B. or, I accept the bill, &c. these clearly amount to an acceptance. Molloy, book 2. c. 10. § 15.

If the party under-writes the bill, presented such a day, or only the day of the month; this is such an acknowledgment of bill as amounts to an acceptance. Comb. 401. So if he ordered a direction to another person to

If the party says, Leave your bill with me and I will accept it, or call for it to-morrow and it shall be accepted; these words, according to the custom of merchants, as effectually bind, as if he had actually signed or subscribed his name according to the usual manner.

But if a man says, Leave your bill with me; I will look over my accounts and books between afterwards by the Court of King's Bench, on the drawer and me, and call to-morrow, and does not amount to a complete acceptance: the bill became due. Wynne v. Raikes, 5 for the mention of his books and accounts shows plainly that he intended only to accept the bill, in case he had effects of the drawer's in his hands. And so it was ruled by the Lord Chief Justice Hale, at Guildhall. Molloy, book 2. c. 10. § 20.

An answer received at the house of drawce, that the bill would be taken up when due, does not amount to an acceptance, unless it can be shown that the answer was given by the drawee or by his authority. 1 Esp. 209.

A bare promise by a debtor to his creditor, that if he would draw a bill upon him at a certain date, for the amount of his demand, he should then have the money, and would pay it, does not amount in law to an acceptance when drawn. 1 E. R. 98.

But a promise to give notice to a party when he might draw a bill, amounts to an undertaking to accept the bill when drawn in pursuance thereof. 2 Marsh, 41: S. C. 6 Taunt.

A foreign bill was drawn on the defendant, and being returned for want of acceptance, the defendant said, that if the bill came back again he would pay it; this was ruled a good

If a merchant be desired to accept a bill, on the account of another, and to draw on a third, in order to reimburse himself, and in consequence he draw a bill on that third person, the bare act of drawing this bill will not amount to an acceptance of the other. 1 Term Rep. 269: and see 4 Maule & S. 303: 2 Barn. & Ald. 113: Bac. Ab. Merchant,

Bills, &c. (M.) (7th ed.)

An agreement to accept or honour a bill will in many cases be equivalent to an acceptance, and whether that agreement be merely verbal, or in writing, is immaterial. If A. having given or intending to give a credit to B., write to C. to know whether he will accept such bills as shall be drawn on him on B.'s account, and C. return for answer, that he will accept them; this is equivalent to an acceptance; and a subsequent prohibition to draw on him on B.'s account will be of no avail, if in fact, previous to that prohibition, the credit has been given. 3 Burr. 1663.

A letter from the drawees of a bill in England to the drawer in America, stating that "their prospect of security being so much improved, they shall accept or certainly pay the bill," is an acceptance in law; although the drawees had before refused to accept the bill when presented for acceptance by the holder, who resided in England, and again after the writing such letter refused payment of it when presented for payment; and although such letter written before were not

In those cases in which the stat. 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 78. does not apply, the drawee's keeping a bill, which is presented to him for acceptance, may amount to such. Bayl. Bills,

A mere acceptance, without delivery to the holder, is not sufficient to make the contract binding. 1 D. & R. 533: S. C. 5 B. & A. 474. Acceptances in Ireland are now regulated by stat. 9 G. 4. c. 24. which defines general and qualified acceptances, and declares that no acceptance shall be good unless in writing. And so also in England, no acceptance of any bill shall be good, unless in writing. 1 and 2 Geo. 4. c. 78.

Forging the acceptance of any bill of exchange, or the number or principal sum of any accountable receipt, is felony. See tit.

III. Transfer of Bills and Notes .- According to the difference in the style of negotiability of bills and notes, the modes of their transfer also differ. Bills and notes payable to bearer are transferred by delivery: if payable to A. B. or bearer, they are payable to bearer, as if A. B. were not mentioned. 1 Burr. 453: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. But to the transfer of those payable to order, it is necessary, in addition to delivery, that there should be something by which the payee may appear to express his order. This additional circumstance is an indorsement; so called from being usually (though not necessarily) written on the back of the note or bill. It may be on the face of the bill. 16 East, 12. And it may be in pencil. 5 Barn. & C.

Where no regulation is made by act of parliament (see ante, I. 4.) relative to the negoti- | ceipt which shows he is only the agent of the ation of bills or notes, no particular form of words is necessary to make an indorsement; only the name of the indorsor must appear upon it, and it must be written or signed by him, or by some person authorized by him for that purpose.

Indorsements are either in full or in blank; a full indorsement is that by which the indorsor orders the money to be paid to some particular person, by name: a blank indorsement consists only of the name of the indorsor. Blank indorsements are most frequent, indeed almost universal in business. A blank indorsement renders the bill or note afterwards transferable by delivery only, as if it were payable to bearer; for by only writing his name, the indorsor shows his intention that the instrument sohuld have a general currency, and be transferred by every possessor. Doug. 617. (639.) 611. (633.)

Except where restrained by statute (see ante, I. 4.), the transfer of a bill or note may be made at any time after it has issued, even after the day of payment; and in case of bills, where the acceptor resides at a distance from the drawer, is frequently made before acceptance. 1 Ld. Raym. 575: see 3 Term. Rep. 80: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black Rep. 485: Doug.

An indorsement may be made on a blank note, before the insertion of any date or sum of money, in which case the indorsor is liable for any sum which the stamp will cover, at any time of payment that may be afterwards inserted; and it is immaterial whether the person taking the note on the credit of the indorsement knew whether it was made before the drawing of the note or not; for in such a case the indorsement is equivalent to a letter of credit for any indefinite sum. Doug. 496. (514.)

On a transfer by delivery, it is said that the person making it ceases to be a party to, or security for, the payment of a bill or note (1 Ld. Raym. 442: 12 Mod. 241: 1 Salk. 128.); yet it seems there can be little doubt that he is liable in another sort of action; as for money had and received, &c. See 3 Term Rep. 757:

Though a blank indorsement be a sufficient transfer, and may enable the person, in whose favour it is made, to negotiate the instrument, yet it is in his option to take it either as indorsee, or as servent or agent to the indorsor; and the latter may, notwithstanding his indorsement, declare as holder in an action against the drawer or acceptor. Nothing is more usual than for the holder of a bill or note to indorse it in blank, and send it to some friend for the purpose of procuring the acceptance or the payment; in this case it is in the power of the friend, either to fill up the blank space over the indorsor's name, with an order to pay the money to himself, which shows his election to take an indorsee; or to write a reindorsor. 1 Salk. 125. 128. 130: 1 Shaw. 163: 2 Ld. Raym. 871. And, on this principle, one to whom a bill was delivered with a blank indorsement, and who carriad it for acceptance, was admitted in an action of trover for the bill against the drawee, to prove the delivery of it to the latter. 1 Salk. 130: 2 Ld. Raym. 871.

The original contract on negotiable bills and notes is to pay to such person or persons, as the payee, or his indorsces, or their in-dorsces, shall direct; and there is as much privity between the last indorsor and the last indorsee, as between the drawer and the original payee. When the payee assigns it over, he does it by the law of merchants; for, as a thing in action, it is not assignable by the general law. The indorsement is part of the original contract, is incidental to it in the nature of the thing, and must be understood to be made in the same manner as the instrument was drawn; the indorsee holds it in the same manner and with the same privileges. qualities, and advantages as the original payee, as a transferable negotiable instrument, which he may indorse over to another, and that other to a third, and so on at pleasure; for these reasons an indorsor for a valuable consideration cannot limit his indorsement by any restriction on the indorsee, so as to preclude him from transferring it to another as a thing negotiable. 2 Burr. 1222, 3. 6, 7: see also Com. 311: 1 Stra. 457: 2 Burr. 1216: 1 Black. Rep. 295: and as to the effect of restrictive indorsement, see Doug. 615. (637.) 617. (639, 640.)

Where the transfer may be by delivery only, that transfer may be made by any person who by any means, whether accident or theft, has obtained the possession; and any holder may recover against the drawer, acceptor, or indorsor, in blank, if such holder gave a valuable consideration without knowledge of the accident. 1 Burr. 452: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. The same principle applies also to the case of a bill negotiated with a blank indorsement; Peacock v. Rhodes & al. Doug. 611. (613); where the court held, that there was no difference between a bill or note indorsed blank, and one payable to bearer. They both pass by delivery, and possession proves property in both cases. However, it has been recently held, that if a party take a bill or note which has been stolen or lost, he cannot recover on it if he took it under such circumstances as ought to have excited the suspicions of a prudent man. Down v. Holling, 4 Barn. & C. 330: Snow v. Peacock, 3 Bing. 406.

But a transfer by indorsement where that is necessary, can only be made by him who has a right to make it, and that is strictly only the payee, or the person to whom he or his indorsees have transferred it, or some one claiming in the right of some of these parties. Bills and notes in favour of partners must be indorsed by them all, or at least by one in the firm of the house; and a bill drawn by two 9 G. 4, c. 24. If a man write his name on a blank piece of paper, and deliver it to another, with authority to draw on it a bill of exchange to any amount, at any distance of time, he renders himself liable to be called on as the drawer of any bill so formed by the person to whom he has given the authority. 1 H. Black. Rep. 313.

If acceptance be refused, and the bill returned, this is notice to the drawer of the refusal of the drawee; and then the period when the debt of the former is to be considered as contracted is the moment he draws the bill; and an action may be immediately commenced against him; though the regular time of payment, according to the tenor of the bill be not arrived. For the drawee not having given credit, which was the ground of the contract, what the drawer has undertaken has not been performed. Doug. 55. Mitford v. Mayor. See also 2 Stra. 949. cited 3 Wils. 16, 17.

When a bill of exchange is indorsed by the person to whom it was made payable, as between the indorsor and the indorsee, it is a new bill of exchange; as it is also between every subsequent indorsor and indorsee: the indorser, therefore, with respect to all the par-ties subsequent to him, stands in the place of the drawer, being a collateral security for the acceptance and payment of the bill by the drawee; his indorsement imposes on him the same engagement that the drawing of the bill does on the drawer; and the period when that engagement attaches is the time of the indorsement. 1 Salk. 133: 2 Show. 441. 494: counts might be adjusted between the drawer. For the old cases on this and the drawer. For the old cases on this and Nothing will discharge the indorser from his engagement but the absolute payment of the money, not even a judgment recovered against the drawer, or any previous indorser. 3 Mod. 86: 2 Show. 441. 494. Neither is the engagement of an indorser discharged by the ineffectual execution against the drawer, or any prior or subsequent indorsor. 2 Black. Rep. 1235: and see 4 Term. Rep. 825.

The engagement of the drawer and indorsors is, however, still but conditional. The holder, in order to entitle himself to call upon them in consequence of it, undertakes to perform certain requisites on his part, a failure in which precludes him from his remedy against them. Where the payment of a bill is limited at a certain time after sight, it is evident the holder must present it for acceptance, otherwise the time of payment would never come; it does not appear that any precise time, within which this presentment must be made, has in any case been ascertained: but it must be done as soon as, under all the circumstances of the case, that can conveniently be done; and what has been said on the presentment of bills and notes payable on demand, seems exactly to apply here. See ante, I. 6; and Roscoe on Bills, 143.

Whether the holder of a bill, payable at a certain time after the date, be bound to present for acceptance immediately on the receipt of it, or whether he may wait till it become due, and then present it for payment, is a question which seems never to have been directly determined: in practice, however, it frequently happens that a bill is negotiated and transferred through many hands without acceptance: and not presented to the drawee till the time of payment, and no objection is ever made on that account. See 5 Burr. 2671: 1 Term Rep. 713.

If, however, the holder in fact presents the bill for acceptance, and that be refused, he is bound to give regular notice to all the preceding parties to whom he intends to resort for non-payment; to the drawer that he may know how to regulate his conduct with respect to the drawee, and make other provision for the payment of the bill; and to the indorsors, that they may severally have their remedy in time against the parties on whom they have a right to call; and it, on account of the holder's delay, any loss accrue by the failure of any of the preceding parties he must bear the loss. 5 Burr. 2670: 1 Term Rep. 712.

It is also the duty of the holder of a bill, whether accepted or not, to present it for payment within a limited time; for otherwise the law will imply that payment has been made; and it would be prejudicial to commerce, if a bill might rise up to charge the drawer at any distance of time, when all accounts might be adjusted between him and the drawee. For the old cases on this subject, see 1 Salk. 127. 132. 133: 1 Show. 155: 1 Ld. Raym. 743: 2 Stra. 829. This time for demand of payment seems, at present, to be regulated by the cases as to notice to preceding indorsors immediately following.

A presentment either for payment or acceptance must be made at seasonable hours; which are the common hours of business in the place where the party lives to whom the presentment is to be made.

To a banker the presentment must be made in the hours of banking business; but in other cases it must be at a reasonable hour: and eight o'clock in the evening was held reasonable in London, though the house was shut up, and nobody there to pay it. 2 Barn. & Adol. 188. By 39 and 40 G. 3. c. 42. bills due on Good Friday are payable on the day before, and to be presented then; and so also as to Christmas Day, and solemn fast days, and thanksgi ving days, by 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 15.

If acceptance or payment be refused, or the drawee of the bill, or maker of the note, has become insolvent, or has absconded, notice from the holder himself must be given to the preceding parties; and in that notice it is not enough to say that the drawee or maker refuses, is insolvent, or has absconded, but it must be added that the holder does not intend to give him credit. The purpose of giving notice is not merely that the indorsor should know that default has been made, for he is chargeable only in a secondary degree; but to render him liable, it must be shown that the holder looked to him for payment, and gave him notice that he did so. See 1 Stra. 441. 515: 2 Black. Rep. 747. as to bills: and 1 Stra. 649: 2 Stra. 1087: 1 Term Rep. 170. as to notes.

What should be considered as a reasonable time within which notice should be given, either of non-acceptance or non-payment, has been subject to much doubt and uncertainty: it was once held, that a fortnight was a reasonable time; but that is now much narrowed. 1 Mod. 27.

With respect to acceptance, it is usual to leave a bill for that purpose with the drawee till the next day, and that is not considered as giving him time; it being understood to be the usual practice; but if on being called on the next day, he delay or refuse to accept according to the tenor of the bill, the rule now established, where the parties to whom notice is to be given reside at a different place from the holder and drawee, is, that notice must be sent by the next post. Under the same circumstances, the same rule obtains in the case of non-payment. 1 Term Rep. 169. So also, in case the drawee or maker has absconded, or cannot be found, notice of these circumsnon-payment, must be sent by the first post.

The great difficulty has been to establish any general rule, where the party entitled to notice resides in the same place, or at a place at a small distance from that in which the holder lives. On this point, as well as on the question of what shall be considered as a reasonable time for making the demand of payment, it has been an object of no little controversy, whether it was the province of the jury or of the judge to decide (see ante, I. 6.); till lately it seems the jury have been permitted to determine on the particular circumstances of each individual case, what time was reasonably to be allowed, either for making demand or giving notice. Doug. 515. (681.)

But it having been found that this was productive of endless uncertainty and inconvenience, the court, on several occasions, have laid it down as a principle, that what shall be considered as a reasonable time in either case is a question of law: juries have, however, struggled so hard to maintain their privilege in this respect, that in two cases they narrowed the time for demand, contrary to the opinion of the court; and, on a second trial being granted, they, in both cases, adhered to their opinion, contrary to the direction of the judge. In one of them, however, application being made for a third trial, the court would have granted it, had not the plaintiff precluded himself by proving his debt under a commission of bankrupt, which had issued against the drawees of the bill between the time of the verdict and the application. See Doug. 515. 1 Term Rep. 171. and the cases there cited. In a third case, where the struggle by the jury was to give a longer time for notice than was necessary, the court adhered to their principle, and granted no less than three trials. 1 Term Rep. 167. 9. Tindal v. Brown. It seems, therefore, fully established, that what shall be reasonable time is a question of law; and generally that a demand must be made, and notice given, as soon as, under all the circumstances, it is possible so to do.

If the parties reside in the same place, notice must be given on the day following that on which the party learns of the dishonour. 1 Stark. 314: 2 Camp. 208. Where the parties reside in different places, it is sufficient to send notice by the next post after the day when the dishonour is known. 6 East, 3: 5 Maule & S. 68: 2 Barn & A. 496: 15 East, 293: 1 Moo. & Malk. 61: 4 Bing. 715.

The reason why the law requires notice is, that it is presumed that the bill is drawn on account of the drawee's having effects of the drawer in his hands; and that if the latter has notice that the bill is not accepted, or not paid, he may withdraw them immediately. But if he have no effects in the other's hands, then he cannot be injured for want of notice; and if it be proved on the part of the plaintiff, that from the time the bill was drawn till the time stances, either in case of non-acceptance or it became due, the drawee never had any effeets of the drawer in his hands, notice to the latter is not necessary in order to charge him, for he must know this fact; and if he had no effects in the drawee's hands, he had no right to draw upon him, and to expect payment from him; nor can he be injured by the nonpayment of the bill, or the want of notice that it has been dishonoured. 1 Term Rep. 410: and see 1 Term Rep. 405.

Yet, though it appear that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the drawee, no action can be maintained against the indorsor, if no notice was given him of the bill being dishonoured; for though the drawer may have received no injury, the indorsor, who must be presumed to have paid a valuable consideration for the bill, probably has. 2 Term Rep.

Though in the case where the drawer has effects in the hands of the drawee, the want of notice cannot be waived by a subsequent promise by the drawer to discharge the bill; vet where he had no effects it may; though it appear that, in fact, he sustained an injury for want of such notice; such a subsequent promise is an acknowledgment that he had no right to draw on the drawee; and if he has in fact sustained damage, it is his own fault. But where damage in such a case has been sustained, and no subsequent promise appears, it may be very doubtful whether the want of notice can be waived. See 2 Term Rep. 713,

In the manner in which notice, either of non-acceptance or non-payment, is given, there is a remarkable difference between inland and foreign bills; in the former no particular form of words is necessary to entitle the holder to recover against the drawer or indorsors the amount of the bill, on failure of the drawee or acceptor; it is sufficient if it appear the holder means to give no credit to the latter, but to hold the former to their responsibility. 1 Term Rep. 170. But in foreign bills other formalities are required; if the person to whom the bill is addressed, on presentment, will not accept it, the holder is to carry it to a person vested with a public character, who is to go to the drawee and demand acceptance, and if he then refuse, the officer is there to make a minute on the bill itself, consisting of his initials, the month, the day, and the year, with his charges for minuting. He must afterwards draw up a solemn declaration, that the bill has been presented for acceptance, which was refused, and that the holder intends to recover all damages which he, or the deliverer of the money to the drawer, or any other, may sustain on account of the non-acceptance: the minute is, in common language, termed the noting of the bill; the solemn declaration, the protest; and the person whose office it is to do these acts, a public notary; and to his protestation all foreign courts give credit. Mal. 264: Mar. 16.

This protest must be made within the regular hours of business, and in sufficient time to | and inland bills of exchange at common law have it sent to the holder's correspondent by seems to have been this. A protest for non-the very next post after acceptance refused; acceptance or non-payment of a foreign bill for if it be not sent by that time, with a letter discharged the drawer and the other parties entitled to notice; and noting alone is not sufficient; there must absolutely be a protest to render the preceding parties liable. Bull. N.P. 271: 2 Term Rep. 713.

But in this case the holder is not to send the bill itself to his correspondent; he must retain it, in order to demand payment of the drawee when it becomes due.

When the bill becomes due, whether it was accepted or not, it is again to be presented for payment within the days of grace, and if payment be refused, the bill must be protested for non-payment, and the bill itself, together with the protest, sent to the holder's correspondent, unless he shall be ordered by him to retain the bill, with a prospect of obtaining its discharge from the acceptor. Beawes.

As this protest on foreign bills must be made on the last day of grace, and immediate notice sent to the parties concerned, it seems established that such a bill is payable, on demand made, at any time that day within reasonable hours; and that the acceptor has not the whole day to pay the bill. 4 Term Rep.

Besides the protest for non-acceptance and non-payment, there may also be a protest for better security; this is usual when a mer-chant, who has accepted a bill, happens to become insolvent, or is publicly reported to have failed in his credit, or absents himself from 'Change before the bill he has accepted becomes due; or when the holder has any reason to suppose it will not be paid; in such cases he may cause a notary to demand better security, and on that being refused, make protest for want of it: which protest must also be sent to the parties concerned by the next post. Mar. 27: 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

Where the original bill is lost, and another cannot be had of the drawer, a protest may be made on a copy, especially where the refusal of payment is not for want of the original bail, but merely for another cause. 1 Show. 164.

The effect of protest for non-acceptance or non-payment, is to charge the drawer or indorsers, not only with the payment of the principal sum, but with interest, damages, and expences; which latter consists usually of the exchange, re-exchange, provision and postage, together with the expenses of the protest. See Stra. 649.

Whenever interest is allowed, and a new action cannot be brought for it, which is the case on bills and notes, the interest is to be calculated up to the time of signing final judgment. 2 Burr. 1086, 1087; and see 2 Term was, and still is, essentially neccessary to of advice, the holder will be construed to have charge the drawer on the default of a drawee; nothing, not even the principal sum, could or can, at this time, be recovered against him without a protest; no other form of notice having been admitted by the custom of merchants as sufficient: but on inland bills, simple notice, within a reasonable time, of the default of the drawec, was held sufficient to charge the drawer, without the solemnity of a protest: the disadvantage arising from thence was this, that notice entitled the holder to recover only the sum in the original bill, which, in many cases, might be a very serious disadvantage: to remedy this inconvenience in some degree, the stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 17. and afterwards the stat. 3 and 4 Anne, c. 9. were passed; the professed intention of which acts was, to put inland bills on the same footing as foreign ones; so far as relates to the recovery of damages, interest, and costs, (i.e. expences) by means of the protest they have done it; but there are several minute particulars, in which. from an attentive perusal of the acts, it will appear they still differ.

To the constitution of a bill of exchange, as has been said before, it is not necessary that the words value received should be inserted; and the want of these in a foreign bill cannot deprive the holder of the benefit of a protest; but that benefit, in case of non-payment, is not given by the statutes to inland bills which want these words, and therefore they cannot be protested for non-payment; and the second act provides that "where these words are wanting, or the value is less than 201., no protest is neccessary either for non-acceptance or non-payment;" the safest construction of which seems to be, that inland bills, without the words value received, or under 201. shall continue as at comman law, and shall not be entitled to the privilege of a protest, either for non-acceptance or non-payment: and it seems now that a protest is in no case necessary on an inland bill. 2 Barn.

An inland bill, payable at so many days after sight, cannot be protested at all; and no inland bill can be protested till after the expiration of three days of grace; notice of which protest is, by the statute, to be sent within fourteen days after the protest. 4 Term Rep. 170.

There appears also to be another difference subsisting between foreign and inland bills of exchange; for where acceptance and payment both are refused on foreign bills, it seems necessary that there should be a protest for each: but under the stat. 3 and 4 Anne, c. 9 it seems that one protest for either, on an inland bill, is sufficient.

On inland bills, where damages, interest, the principal sum is to be recovered; for when and such holder gave the acceptor time upon there is no protest for non-payment, presenta- the bill, he, from that moment, had no demand tion for payment must be made so early on the last day of grace, that the holder may give notice of non-payment by the next post. See

That part of the stat. 3 and 4 Anne, c. 9. which puts notes on the same footing with inland bills, makes no express provision for protesting them for non-payment; but there can be no doubt that the practice under which such a protest is frequently made is founded in justice.

Actions and Remedies on Bills and Notes .- Before the doctrine of bills of exchange was well understood, and the nature and extent of the customs relative to them fully recognized by the courts, the remedy on them was sought in different forms of action, according the opinions which were entertained of the applicability of the several forms to the respective situations of the parties. pl. 13: Morg. Prec. 51. Kesselower v. Tims, v. Robley, Tr. 14 G. 3: 1 H. Black. Rep. 89. B. R. E. 22 G. 3. The conclusion, resulting from all which cases seems to be, that where a privity exists between the parties, there an action of debt, or of indebitatus assumpsit may be maintained; but that where it does not exist, neither of these actions will lie.

A privity exists between the payee and the drawer of a bill of exchange, the payee and drawer of a promissory note; the indorsee and his immediate indorsor of either the one or the other; and perhaps between the drawer and acceptor of a bill: provided that in all these cases, a consideration passed respectively between the parties. If a bill is drawn, payable for value received, debt lies by the drawer against the acceptor. 1 Barn. & C. 674. So by an indorsee against his immediate indorsor. 3 Price, 253: 1 Barn. & C. 681.

But it seems to be considered, than no privity exists between the indorsee and acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, or between an indorsee and a remote indorsor of either.

The action which is now brought on a bill of exchange, is a special action of assumpsit, founded on the custom of merchants.

That custom was not at first recognized by the court, unless it was specially set forth, and therefore it was deemed necessary to set forth, by way of inducement, so much of it as applied to the particular case, and imposed on the defendant a liability to pay. See 1 Wils. 189: 1 Ld. Raym. 21. 175: 3 Mod. 86: 4 Mod. 242.

But when the custom of merchants was recognized by the judges as part of the law of the land, they declared they would take notice of it as such, ex officio, it became unnecessary to recite the custom at full length; a simple allegation, that "the drawer, mentioning him by his name, according to the custom of merchants, drew his bill of exchange, &c." was sufficient. And if the plaintiff, still adhering to former precedents, thought proper to recite the custom in general terms, and did not bring his case within the custom so set forth; yet if, by the law of merchants, as recognized by the court, the case as stated, entitled him to his action, he might recover; and the setting forth of the custom was reckoned surplusage and rejected. See 1 Show. 317: 2 Ld. Raym. 1542.

Whether the drawer of a bill, or the indorsor of a bill or of a note, receiving the bill or the note in the regular course of negotiation before it has become due, can maintain an action on it against the acceptor or maker, in the character of indorsee, seems undecided; but there is a case which clearly shows that a drawer or indorsor cannot maintain an action against the acceptor in the character of indorsee, where the indorsement is after the refusal of payment; because when a bill is returned unpaid, either on the drawer or indorsor, its negotiability is at an end. Beck in the notes.

But if a bill is payable to the drawer's own order, and taken up by him, he may re-issue it. Callow v. Laurance, 3 Maule & S. 95: and see Pownall v. Ferrand, 6 Barn. & C.

The action, therefore, in which the drawer or indorsor, after payment of the money in default of the acceptor, may recover, the first against the acceptor, and the latter against any of the preceding parties, must be brought in their original capacity as drawer or indorsor, and not as indorsee. Vide Simonds v. Parminter, 1 Wils. 185: vide Morg. Prec. 43, 44. 50: 4 Term Rep. 82. 5.

If the drawce, without having effects of the drawer, accept and duly pay the bill without having it protested, he may recover back the money in an action for money paid, laid out, and expended to the use of the drawer. Vide Smith v. Nissen, 1 Term Rep. 269.

Debt lies by the payee against the maker of a promissory note expressed to be for value received. 2 B. & P. 78. And by the drawer against the acceptor of a bill payable to the drawer or his order, expressed to be for value received, 1 Barn. & C. 674.

An action lies by the indorsee against the indorsor upon a bill of exchange, immediately on the non-acceptance by the drawee, though the time for which the bill was drawn be not clapsed. 3 East. R. 481.

Instead of bringing an action on the custom or on the statute, the plaintiff may in many cases use a bill or note, only as evidence in another action; and where the instrument wants some of the requisites to form a good bill or note, the only use he can make of it is to give it in evidence: or if the count on the instrument be defective, he may give it in evidence, in support of some of the other counts for money had and received, or money lent and advanced according to the circumstances of the transaction. Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174: and see 6 Barn. & C.

The holder of the bill or note may sue all the parties who are liable to pay the money; either at the same time, or in succession: and he may recover judgment against all, if satisfaction be not made by the payment of the money before judgment obtained against all; and proceedings will not be stayed in any action against the acceptor without payment of debt and costs in all the actions; but in all actions against the drawer or indorsor, they will be stayed on payment of debt and costs in that action. 4 Term R. 691: Tidd. 586.

But though he may have judgment against all, yet he can recover but one satisfaction: yet though he be paid by one he may sue out execution for the costs in the several actions against the others. 2 Vesey, 115: and see 1 Stra. 515: see ante, IV. and tit. Bankrupt, statute of limitations: and by the express provision of the statute of Queen Anne, all actions on promissory notes must be brought within the same time as is limited by the statute of James, with respect to actions on the case. And it is no good replication to this plea, that it was on account between merchants, where it appears to be for value received. Comb. 190, 392.

2. Manner of Declaring and Pleading.—As the action on a bill of exchange is founded on the custom of merchants, so that on a promissory note is founded on the stats. 3 and 4 Anne, c. 9. In both cases, however, it is necessary that all those circumstances should either be expressly stated, or clearly and inevitably implied, which, according to the characters of the parties to the action, must necessarily concur, in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover. See the new brief forms of declarations on bills and notes in the Rules of Court, T. T. 1831.

An action lies by the indorsee against the indorsor upon a bill of exchange, immediately on the non-acceptance by the drawee, though the time for which the bill was drawn be not elapsed. Ballingalls v. Gloster, 3 East, 481.

In stating the bill on the note, regard must be had to the legal operation of each respectively. 1 Burr. 324, 5. It has been decided that the legal operation of a bill, or of a note, payable to a fictitious payee, is, that it is payable to the bearer, and therefore it is proper, in the statement of such a bill, to allege that the drawer thereby requested the drawee to pay so much money to the bearer; in the statement of such a note, that the maker thereby promised to pay such a sum to the bearer. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183: Minet & al. v. Gibson & al. Id. 485: Confirmed in Dom. Proc: see H. Black. Rep. 569: Collis v. Emett, H. Black. Rep. 313: and more fully as to subject, post, 2. of this division.

Or in such a case, the plaintiff may state all the special circumstances, and if the verdict correspond with them, he will be entitled to recover. See 1 H. Black. Rep. 569.

A bill or note payable to the order of a man, may, in any action by him, be stated as payable to himself, for that is its legal import: or it may be stated in the very words of it, with an averment that he made no order.

If a note purport to be given by two, and be signed only by one, a declaration generally, as on a note by that one who signed it, will be good; for the legal operation of such a note is, that he who signed promised to pay. Semb. 1 Burr. 323.

On a note to pay jointly and severally, a declaration against one in the terms of the note will be good. Burchill v. Slocock, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545. So on a note to pay jointly or severally, (Cowp. 832.) contrary to former determinations.

Inland bills and notes may be stated to

To this action the defendant may plead the have been made at any place where the plaintiff chooses to lay his action, because the action on them is transitory, and may be stated to have arisen any where. In an action against the acceptor, it must be alleged that he accepted the bill, for the acceptance is the foundation of the action, but the manner of acceptance needs not to be alleged. 2 Ld. Raym. 1542; 1 Ld. Raym. 364, 5. 374, 5: 1 Salk. 127. 9: Carth. 459.

If the bill or note was payable to order, and the action by an indorsee, such indorsements must be stated as to show his title; an indorsement by the payee must at all events be stated, because without that, it cannot appear that he made any order, on the existence of which depends the title of the indorsec. If the first indorsement was special, to any person by name, in an action by an indorsee after him, his indorsement must, for the same reason, be stated: so also must all special indorsements.

But if the indorsement was in blank, and the action be against the drawer, acceptor or payee, no other indorsement is necessary to be stated than that of the payee; in an action against a subsequent indorsor, his indorsement at least must be added: in an action on a bill or note payable to bearer, no indorsement need be stated, because it is transferable without indorsement. See ante,

In an action against the drawer or indorsor of a bill, or against the indorsor of a note, it is absolutely necessary, on account of nonpayment of the bill or note, to state a demand of payment from the acceptor of the bill, or the maker of the note, and due notice of refusal given to the party against whom the action is brought: for these circumstances are absolutely necessary to entitle the plaintiff to maintain his action; and a verdict will not help him on a writ of error. The general rule of pleading in this case is, that where the plaintiff omits altogether to state his title or cause of action, it is not necessary to prove it at the trial: and therefore there is no room for presumption that there was actual proof. Rushton v. Aspinall, Doug. 679. (684.) But if the title be only imperfectly stated, with the omission only of some circumstances necessary to complete the title, they shall, after a verdict, be presumed to have been proved; and in some cases no advantage can be taken of the want of them on a general demurrer. Doug. 684. in the notes.

3. The Evidence.—Most part of what might be said as to the proof and defence in actions on bills or notes necessarily arises out of the general doctrine already explained.

The plaintiff must in all cases prove so much of what is necessary to entitle him to his action, and what must be stated in his declaration, as is not, from the nature of the thing and the situation of the parties, necessarily admitted.

In an action against the acceptor, it is a | and all of those to whom an indorsment has general rule that the drawer's hand is admitted; because the acceptor is supposed to be acquainted with the writing of his correspondent; and by his acceptance he holds out to every one who shall afterwards be the holder, that the bill is truly drawn. 1 Ld. Raym. 444: Stra. 946: 3 Burr. 1354: see 1 Bl. 390. But if the drawer indorse, his handwriting to the indorsement must be proved. In an action against the acceptor, therefore, where the acceptance was on view of the bill, whether in writing on the bill, or by parole, it is not necessary to prove the hand-writing of the drawer. That of the acceptor himself must of course be proved; and that of every person through whom the plaintiff, from the nature of the transaction, must necessarily derive his title.

On a bill payable to bearer, there is no person through whom the holder derives his title; in an action against the acceptor, therefore, on such a bill he is only to prove the hand-writing of the acceptor hinself. But in an action against the acceptor of a bill payable to order, the plaintiff must prove the hand-writing of the very payee who must be the first indorsor. Sec 4 Term. Rep. 28. If the indorsement of the payee be general, the proof of his hand-writing is sufficient; if special, that of his indorsee must be proved: but otherwise that of any other of the indorsors is not requisite, though all the subsequent indorsements be stated in the declaration. Any subsequent holder may declare as the indorsee of the first indorsor; but in this case, in order to render the evidence correspondent to the declarations, all the subsequent names must be struck out, either at or before the trial. See ante, III. But the plaintiff, in the case of a transfer by delivery (see ante, III.), may be called upon to prove that he gave a good consideration for the bill or note, without the knowledge of its having been stolen, or of any of the names having been forged. 1 Burr. 542 : Dougl. 633. Peacock v. Rhodes. But a mere notice will not alone put the plaintiff on proof of the consideration; the defendant must first impeach it. 2 Camp. 5. 516: 1 Moo. & M. 240. And though the acceptance be subsequent to the indorsments, yet the necessity of proving the payee's hand-writing is not, by this means, superseded. Say, 233: 1 Term Rep. 654.

In an action by an indorsee against the drawer, the same rules obtain with respect to proof of the hand-writing of the indorsors as in an action against the acceptors. See Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313. That of the drawer himself must of course be proved. It must be also proved that the plaintiff has used due diligence. See ante, IV.

From the rule, that in an action against the drawer or acceptor of a bill payable to order, there must be proof of the signature of the payee being the drawer or first indorsor,—

been specially made, arose the question which long, and greatly, agitated the commercial world, on the subject of indorsements in the name of fictitious payees. A bill payable to the order of a fictitious person, and indorsed in a fictitious name, is not a novelty among merchants and traders. See Stone v. Freeland, B. R. sittings after Easter, 1769, alluded to in 3 Term Rep. 176: see also Peacock v. Rhodes, Dougl. 632: Price v. Neal. 3 Burr. 1354. But in the years 1786, 7, and 8, two or three houses connected together in trade, entering into engagements far beyond their capital, and apprehending that the credit of their own names would not be sufficient to procure currency to their bills, adopted, in a very extensive degree, a practice which before had been found convenient on a smaller scale. So long as the acceptors or drawers could either procure money to pay these bills. or had credit enough with the holder to have them renewed, the subject of these fictitious indorsements never came in question. But, when the parties could no longer support their credit, and a commission of bankrupt became necessary, the other creditors felt it their interest to resist the claims of the holders of these bills; and insisted that they should not be admitted to prove their debts, because they could not comply with the general rule of law requiring proof of the hand-writing of the first indorsor. The question came before the chancellor by petition. He directed trials at law, and several were had; three against the acceptor in the King's Bench, and one against the drawer in the Common Pleas, though not all expressly by that direction. See Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174: Vere v. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183: Minet & al. v. Gibson & al., 3 Term Rep. 483: 1 H. Black. Rep. 569: Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313. From the decisions on these cases, the principal of which was affirmed in the House of Lords, and which have settled that such bills are to be considered as payable to bearer, (see ante, 2, of this division V.) it follows, that proof of the acceptor's hand only is sufficient to entitle the holder to recover on the bill; and in the case of Tatlock v. Harris, where a bill was drawn by the defendant and others on the defendant, it was determined that a bona fide holder for a valuable consideration might recover the amount against the acceptor in an action for money paid or money had and received.

[The principal case above alluded to, as affirmed in the House of Lords is that of Minet & al. v. Gibson & al. already so often mentioned. It is better known by the name of Gibson and Johnson, v. Minet and Fector; and the opinions of the judges in the House of Lords, are very fully and accurately reported in 1 H. Black. Rep. 561: 1 Bro. P. C. 48. The effect of the determination, as there stated, is as follows:

If a bill of exchange be drawn in favour of difference. Birt v. Kershaw, 2 East, 458; a fictitious payee, with the knowledge, as well but see Jones v. Brooke, 4 Taunt. 464. contra, of the acceptor as of the drawer; and the name of such payee be indorsed on it by the drawer with the knowledge of the acceptor, which fic-titious indorsement purports to be to the drawer himself or his order; and then the drawer indorses the bill to an innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration, and afterwards the bill is accepted; but it does not appear that there was an intent to defraud any particular person; such innocent indorsee for a valuable consideration may recover against the acceptor as on a bill payable to bearer. Perhaps also, in such case, the innocent indorsee might recover against the acceptor, as on a bill payable to the order of the drawee; or on a count stating the special circumstances. But in order to be effectual against the acceptor, it must be known to him that the payee of the bill was fictitious. Camp. 130. 180.

Other cases, Master & al. v. Gibson & al. and Hunter v. Gibson & al. were afterwards brought before the House of Lords (June, 1793,) on demurrers to evidence; on which the judges gave their opinion, that it was not | draw, accept, or indorse bills or notes, proof of competent to the defendants to demur; and that on the record, as stated, no judgment could be given. See Bro. P. C. A venire de novo was accordingly awarded, and a new trial had in Hunter v. Gibson, in which a bill of exceptions to evidence was tendered; on this the Court of King's Bench gave judgment for plaintiff, and that judgment was affirmed in dom. proc. See Bro. P. C. tit. Prom. Notes, ca. 2, 3. The whole disclosed a system of a bill negotiation to the amount of a million a year, on fictitious credit, which ended in the bankruptcy of many; but which had at least the good effect of showing that the obligations of law are not so easily eluded as those of honour and conscience.]

In an action by an indorsee against an indorsor, it is not necessary to prove either the hand of the drawer or of the acceptor, or of any indorsor, before him against whom the action is brought; every indorsor being, with respect to subsequent indorsees or holders, a new drawer. 1 Ld. Raym. 174: Str. 444: 2 Burr. 675. Where an action is by one indorsor who has paid the money, proof must be given of the payment. 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

An indorsor on a note, who has received money from the drawer to take it up, is a competent witness for the drawer, in an action against him by the indorsor, to prove that he had satisfied the note; being either liable to the plaintiff on the note, if the action were defeated, or to the defendant for money had and received if the action succeeded. And his being also liable in the latter-case to compensate the defendant for the costs incurred in the action by such non-payment makes no which is the better authority.

In an action by the drawer against the acceptor, where the bill has been paid away and returned, it is necessary to prove the handwriting of the latter, demand of payment from him, and refusal, the return of the bill, and payment by the plaintiff. 10 Mod. 36, 7: 1 Wils. 185: see ante, 1. of this division

In an action on the case by the acceptor against the drawer, the plaintiff must prove the hand-writing of the defendant, and payment of the money by himself: or something equivalent, as his being in prison on execution. 3 Wils. 18.

Where a bill is accepted, or a bill or note is drawn or indorsed by one of two or more partners, on the partnership account, proof of the signature of the partner accepting, drawing, or indorsing, is sufficient to bind all the rest. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175. See Carvick v. Vickery, Doug. 353: 7 East, 210: 13 East, 175.

Where a servant has a general authority to his signature is sufficient against the master; but his authority must be proved, as that it was a general custom for him to do so, &c. See Comb. 450: 12 Mod. 346.

An action on a bill of exchange being by an executor, and upon a debt laid to be due to testator, it was held necessary to prove that the acceptance was in the testator's life-time. 12 Mod. 447.

Where the defendant suffers judgment by default, and the plaintiff executes a writ of inquiry, it is sufficient for the latter to produce the note or bill without any proof of the defendant's hand. See 2 Str. 1149: , Barnes, 233, 4: 2 Black. Rep. 748: 3 Wils. 155; and finally, 3 Term. Rep. 301. Green v. Hearn; in which the court said, that by suffering judgment to go by default, the defendant had admitted the cause of action to the amount of the bill, because that was set out on the record; and the only reason for producing it to the jury on executing the writ of inquiry, was to see whether any part of it had been paid. And now, on such judgment, a writ of inquiry is not necessary: for the court, on application by the plaintiff, will, if no good reason be shown to the contrary, refer it to the proper officer, to compute the damages and costs, and calculate the interest. Ruled Anon. B. R. Hil. 26 G. 3: Rashleigh v. Salmon, H. Black. Rep. C. P. 252.

4. The Defence.—Besides the different subjects of defence, which may be collected from the whole of the general principles here so fully entered into, the most usual are those which arise either from the total want of consideration, or from the illegality of the consideration for which the bill or note was given. See this Diet. tit. Consideration; and Roscoe | B. & C. 466: 1 C. & P. 163; and see 3 Bingh. on Bills.

In general no advantage can be taken of the illegality of the consideration, but as between the persons immediately concerned in the transaction; any subsequent holder of the bill or note, for a fair consideration, cannot be affected by it. But there are cases in which it has been determined, that, by the construction of certain statutes, even the innocent in-dorsee shall not recover against the acceptor of the bill, or drawer of the note. As on stat. 9 Anne, c. 14. § 1. which absolutely invalidates notes, bills, &c. given for money won at play. 2 Stra. 1155. So, on stat. 12 Anne, st. 2. c. 16. § 1. as to securities on usurious contracts. Lowe v. Waller, Doug. 736. (but this is now altered by (58 G. 3. c. 93.) And, reasoning by analogy, against notes given by a bankrupt to procure his certifi-

It has, however, been repeatedly ruled at Nisi Prius, that wherever it appears that a bill or note has been indorsed over, after it is due, which is out of the usual course of trade, that circumstance alone throws such a suspicion on it, that the indorsee must take it on the credit of the indorsor, and must stand in the situation of the person to whom it was payable. See 3 Term Rep. 80. 83.

By stats. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 15. (England), and 9 G. 4. c. 24. (Ireland), bills falling due on Good Friday, Christmas-day, and Fast days, are made payable the day before, and in such cases notice of the dishonour thereof is not necessary to be given until the day after

The acceptor who pays under a forged indorsement by a person who had found a lost bill is liable to the real payee. 3 T. R. 127.

If a bill of exchange with a blank indorsement be stolen and negotiated, an innocent indorsee shall recover upon it of the drawer. 2 Doug. 633.

If a Bank bill payable to A. B. or bearer, be lost, and it is found by a stranger, payment to him would indemnify the Bank; yet A. B. may have trover against the finder, though not against his assignee, for valuable consideration which creates a property. 3 Salk. 71.

Where a bill broker discounts a stolen bill for a stranger upon being merely satisfied with the goodness of the acceptance, the broker is not entitled to recover against the acceptor, if the jury think his suspicions ought

If the possessor of a bill by any accident loses it, he must cause intimation to be made by a notary public before witnesses, that the bill is lost or mislaid, requiring that payment be not made of the same to any person without his privity. And by stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 17. if any inland bill of exchange for five pounds or upwards, shall be lost, the drawer of the bill shall give another bill of the same tenor, security being given to indemnify him in case the bill so lost be found again. The remedy on the statute is in equity. 7 Barn. & C. 95. If the party could recover at law, notwithstanding the loss, equity will not relieve him. 1 Ves. 341: 16 Ves. 430.

If a bill lost by the possessor should afterwards come into the possession of any person paying a full and valuable consideration for it, without knowledge of its having been lost, or grounds for suspecting it, the drawer (and acceptor, if the bill was accepted) must pay it when due to such fair possessor; so that the provision of the statute may, in many cases, be useless to the loser of the bill.—But against the person who finds the bill, the real owner may maintain an action of trover. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 738. See Master v. Miller, 4 T. R. 320: and see 4 Barn. & C. 332: 3

If a bill payable to A. or order get into the hands of another person of the same name as the payee, and such person, knowing he is not the real person in whose favour it was drawn, indorse it, he is guilty of forgery. 4 T. R. 28.

An alteration of the date of the bill of exchange after acceptance, whereby the payment would be accelerated, avoids the instrument, and no action can be afterwards brought upon it, even by an innocent indorsee, for a valuable consideration. 4 T. R. 320; affirmed in Cam. Scac. 5 T. R. 367: 2 H. B. 141: 1 Anstr. 225. And after a bill has been once negotiated an alteration renders it void under the stamp laws. 15 East, 416: 10 East, 431: Roscoe on Bills, 34.

If upon a bill being presented for acceptance the drawee alter it as to the time of payment, and accept it so altered, he vacates the bill as against the drawer and indorsers; but if the holder acquiesce in such alteration and acceptance, it is a good bill as against the holder and acceptor. 1 Taunt. 420.

F., confessing and showing the certainty thereof; that then I, my executors or administrators, having the same bill delivered to me or them, shall and will immediately, upon the receipt of the same, pay, or cause to be paid, unto the said C. BILL OF RIGHTS. The statute 1 W. and M. stat. 2. cap. 2. is so called, as declaring the true rights of British subjects. See title Liberty, where this important act is stated at

BILL OF SALE, is a solemn contract under seal, whereby a man passes the right or interest that he hath in goods and chattels; for if a man promises or gives any chattels without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession, this doth not alter the property, because it is nudum pactum, unde non oritur actio; but if a man sells goods by deed under seal, duly executed, this alters the property between the parties, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession; because a man is estopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Yelv. 196: Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Brown, 111: 6 Co. 18.

But what is chiefly to be considered under this head, is the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 5. by land or Ireland), if any person shall offer, avoid the debt or duty of another, shall (as against the party only, whose debt or duty is so endeavoured to be avoided) be utterly void. except grants made bonu fide, and on a good (which is construed a valuable) consideration."

A. being indebted to B. in 400l. and to C. in 201. C. brings debt against him, and, pending the writ, A. being possessed of goods and chattels to the value of 300l. makes a secret conveyance of them all, without exception, to B. in satisfaction of his debt; but, notwithstanding, continues in possession of them, and sells some of them, and others of them being sheep, he sets his mark on; and resolved that it was a fraudulent gift and sale within the aforesaid statute, and shall not prevent C. of his execution for his just debt; for though such sale hath one of the qualifications required by the statute, being made to the creditor for his just debt, and consequently on a valuable consideration, yet it wants the other; for the owner's continuing in possession is a the possession is the only indicium of the property of a chattel, and therefore this sale is not made bona fide. 3 Co. 80: Mo. 638: 2 Bulst. 226. See Edwards v. Harben, 2 Term R. 587: Kidd v. Rawlinson, 2 Bos. & Pull. 59. But the continuing in possession is not conclusive of fraud. 3 Barn. & Adol. 498: Ry. & Moo. 312.

As the owner's continuing in possession of goods after his bill of sale of them is evidence (though not conclusive) of a fraudulent conindicium of the property of a chattel, which is a thing unfixed and transitory; so there are other marks and characters of fraud; as a general conveyance of them all without any exception; for it is hardly to be presumed that a man will strip himself entirely of all his personal property, not excepting his bedding and wearing apparel, unless there was some secret correspondence and good understanding settled between him and the vendee for a private occupancy of all, or some part of the goods for his support; also a secret manner of transacting such bill of sale, and unusual clauses in it: as that it is made honestly, truly, and bona fide, are marks of fraud and collusion; for such an artful and forced dress and appearance give a suspicion and jealousy of some defect varnished over with it. 3 Co. 81: Mo. 638.

If goods continue in the possession of the vendor after a bill of sale of them, though there is a clause in the bill that he shall account annually with the vendee for them, yet it is a fraud: since if such colouring were admitted, it would be the easiest thing in the world to avoid the provisions and cautions of the aforesaid act. Mo. 638: S. C. 3 B. & Adol. 498.

If A. makes a bill of sale of all his goods, in consideration of blood and natural affection, which it is enacted, "That all fraudulent conveyances of lands, &c. goods and chattels, to conveyance in respect of creditors; for the considerations of blood, &c. which are made | were current in England. the motives of this gift, are esteemed in their sents the gold besantine to have been equivanature inferior to valuable considerations which are necessarily required in such sales, by 13

Eliz. cap. 5.

If A. makes a bill of sale to B. a creditor, and afterwards to C. another creditor, and delivers possession at the time of sale to neither; afterwards C. gets possession of them, and B. takes them out of his possession, C. cannot maint in trespass, because, though the first bill of sale is fraudulent against creditors, and so is the second, yet they both bind A. As therefore B.'s is the elder title, the naked possession of C. ought not to prevail against it.

BISHOPS AND ARCHBISHOPS.—A BISHOP (episcopus, is the chief of the clergy in his diocese, in England, Wales, or Ireland, and is the archbishop's suffragan or assistant.

An Archeisnop (Archiepiscopus) is the chief of the clergy in his province, in England or Ireland, and is that spiritual secular person who hath supreme power under the king in all ecclesiastical causes: and the manner of his creation and consceration, by an archbishop and two other bishops, &c. is regulated by stat. 25 H. S. c. 20. (See post, Bishop.) An archbishop is said to be enthroned, when a bishop is said to be installed; and there are four things to complete a bishop or archbishop, as well as a parson; first, election, which resembles pre-entation; the next is confirmation, and this resembles admission; next, consecration, which resembles institution; and the last is installation, resembled to induction. 3 Salk. 72.

In ancient times the archbishop was bishop all over England, as Austin was, who is said to be the first archbishop here; but, before the Saxon conquest, the Britons had only one his hop, and not any archbishop. 1 Roll. Rep.

328: 2 Roll. 440.

But at this day the ceclesiastical state of England and Wales, is divided into two provinces or archbishopricks, to wit, Canterbury and York; and twenty-four bishopricks (besides the hishoprick of Sodor and Man, the hishop of which is not a lord of parliament., archbishop hath within his province bishops of several dioceses. The archbishop of Canterbury hath under him, within his province, of ancient foundations, Rochester, London, Winchester, Norwich, Lincoln, Ely, Chichester, S. lisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Worcester, Coventry and Litchfield, Hereford, Llandaff, St. David's, Bangor, and St. Asaph; and four founded by King Henry 8, creeted out of the ruins of dissolved monasteries, viz. Gloucester, Bristol, Peterborough, and Oxford. The archbishop of York hath under him four, viz. the bishop of the county palatine of Chester, newly erected by King Henry 8, and annexed ricks created by Hen. 8. in England, out of the revenues of the dissolved monasteries. Burn. E. L. 78.—Thomas Thirlby was the only bishop that ever filled that see. He surrendered the bishoprick to Ed. 6. A. D. 1550, depose, for any just cause, &c. 2 Roll. Ab. 223. 30th March; and, on the same day, it was dissolved, and added again to the bishoprick of London. Rym. Fæd. 15. p. 222. Queen Mary afterwards filled the church with Beneparliament, turned it into a collegiate church,

The archbishop of Canterbury is now styled metropolitanus et primus totius Anglia; and the archbishop of York styled primus et me-tropolitanus Anglia. They are called archbishops in respect of the bishops under them; and metropolitans, because they were conse-crated at first in the metropolis of the pro-4 Inst. 94. Both the archbishops have distinct provinces, wherein they have suffragan bishops of several dioceses, with precedency of all the clergy; next to him the jurisdiction under them. The archbishop hath also his own diocese, wherein he exercises episcopal jurisdiction, as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal; thus having two concurrent jurisdictions, one as ordinary, or the bishop himself within his diocese; the other as superintendant, throughout his whole province, of all ecclesiastical matters, to correct and supply the defects of other bishops.

The archbishop is entitled to present, by lapse, to all the ecclesiastical livings in the disposal of his diocesan bishops, if not filled within six months. (See tit. Advowson.) And the archbishop has a customary prerogative, when a bishop is consecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own, to be provided for such suffragan bishop; in lieu of which it is now usual for the bishop to make over, by deed, to the archbishop, his executors and assigns, the next presentation of such dignity or benefice in the bishop's disposal within that see, as the archbishop himself shall choose; which is therefore called his option, which options are only binding on the bishop himself who grants them, and not on his successors. The prerogative itself seems to be derived from the legatine power formerly annexed, by the popes, to the metropolitan of Canter-

The archbishop of Canterbury hath the privilege to crown all the kings of England; and to have prelates to be his officers; as for instance, the bishop of London is his provincial dean; the bishop of Winchester, his chancellor; the bishop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the bishop of Salisbury, his precentor; the bishop of Worcester, his chaplain, &c. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8. c. 16. § 6. This dispensing power is the foundation of the 'archbishop's granting special licences to marry at any place or time, to hold two livings and the like; and in this also is founded the right he exercises of conferring degrees in prejudice of the two Universities. In Scotland after the Reformation, the titles of archbishop and bishop were introduced in 1572, and bestowed on elergymen ordained members of cathedral churches. By the act of 1592, c. 116. presbyterian church government was established by kirk sessions, presbyteries, provincial synods, and general assemblies. By act 1606, c. 2. bishops were restored; but in 1638 presbytery was a second time introduced. By act 1662, c. 1. presbytery was again displaced by prelacy; and finally by acts 1689, c. 3. and 1690, cc. 5. 29. presbytery was re-established, and has since so continued.

A Bishor is elected by the king's congé d' elire, or licence to elect the person named by the king, directed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twelve days, they incur the penalty of a præmunire, and the king may nominate whom he pleases by letters patent. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. was to avoid the power of the sec of Rome. This election or nomination, if it be of a bishop, must be signified by the king's letterspatent to the archbishop of the province; if it be of an archbishop, to the other archbishop and two bishops, or to four bishops; requiring them to confirm, invest, and consecrate the person so elected, which they are bound to perform immediately. After which the bishop elect shall sue to the king for his temporalities, shall make oath to the king and none other, and shall take restitution of his secular possessions out of the king's hands only. Archbishops and bishops refusing to confirm such election, incur the penalties of a pramunire. This stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. was repealed by Edward 6. but is held to be constructively revived, and to be still in force. It does not, however, apply to the five bishoprics created by Henry 8. subsequent to its passing, which have always been pure donatives in form as well as substance. See 1 Comm. 380. and Coleridge's notes there, but no authorities are cited. On confirmation, a bishop hath jurisdiction in his diocese; but he hath not a right to his temporalities till consecration. The following are some of the popular distinctions between archbishops and bishops. The archbishops have the style and title of Grace, and Most Reverend Father in God by Divine Providence. The bishops, those of Lord and Right Reverend Father in God by Divine Permission. Archbishops are inthroned; bishops installed.

BISHOPRICK. The diocese of a bishop. BISSEXTILE, bissextilis.] Leap year, so called because the sixth day before the calends of March is twice reckoned, making an additional day in the month of February; so that the bissextile year hath one day more than the others, and happens every four years. This intercalation of a day was first invented by Julius Cæsar to make the year agree with the course of the sun. And, to prevent all doubt and ambiguity that might arise thereupon, it is enacted by the statute de anno bissextili, 21 H. 3. that the day increasing in the leap-year, and the day next before, shall be accounted but one day. BLACK ACT, or WALTHAM BLACK ACT. The stat. 9 G. 1. c. 22. now repealed by stat. 7 & 8 G. 4. c. 27. was so called, having been occasioned by some devastations committed near Waltham, in Hampshire, by persons in disguise, or with their faces blacked.

For many of the offences mentioned in the former stat. and which have with amendments been re-enacted by subsequent acts, see tit. Assault, Burning, Cattle, Larceny, Felony, Malicious Injuries, and other appropriate titles.

BLACK ACTS. Acts printed in the old black letter. This term is applied to the acts of the 5 Jameses of Scotland, and those of Mary and James VI.—See tit Statutes.

BLACK BOOK, is a book lying in the Exchequer. See stat. Annals. 154.

BLACK LEAD. By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 37. persons stealing or severing with intent to steal, the ore of any metal or any black lead or black cawke, &c. from any mine, punished as in the case of simple larceny.

BLACK MAIL, Fr. maille, a link of mail, or small piece of metal or money.] Signifies in the north of England in the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, &c. a certain rent of money, corn, or other thing, anciently paid to persons inhabiting upon or near the borders, being men of name and power, allied with certain robbers within the said counties, to be freed and protected from the devastations of those robbers. But by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13. to take any such money or contribution, called black-mail, to secure goods from rapine, is made a capital felony, as well as the offences such contribution was meant to guard against. See also the Scotch acts 1567, c. 21. 1587, c. 102.

It is also used for rents reserved in work, grain, or baser money; which were called reditus nigri, in contradistinction to the blanch farms, reditus albi. See tits. Alba Firma and Blanch Firmes.

BLACK-ROD. The gentleman usher of black-rod is chief gentleman usher to the king; he belongs to the garter, and hath his name from the black rod, on the top whereof sits a lion in gold, which he carrieth in his hand. He is called, in the black book, fol. 255, Lator virgæ nigræ, & hostiarius; and in other places, virgæ bajulus. His duty is, ad portandum virgam coram domino rege ad festum sancti Georgii infra castrum de Windsore; and he hath the keeping of the chapterhouse door, when a chapter of the order of the garter is sitting; and, in the time of par-liament, he attends on the house of peers. His habit is like to that of the register of the order, and garter-king at arms; but this he wears only at the solemn times of the festival of St. George, and on the holding of chapters. The black rod he bears is instead of a mace, and hath the same authority; and this officer hath anciently been made by letters patent under the great seal, he having great power; for to his custody all peers, called in question for any crime, are first committed.

BLACKWELL HALL. The public market of Blackwell Hall, London, is to be kept every Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, at certain hours; and the hall-keepers not to admit any buying or selling of woollen cloth at the said hall upon any other days or hours, on penalty of 100l. Factors selling cloth out of the market, shall forfeit 51. &c. Registers of all the cloths bought or sold, are to be weekly kept: and buyers of cloth, otherwise than for ready money, shall give notes to the sellers for the money payable; and factors are to transmit such notes to the owners in twelve days, or be liable to forfeit double value, &c. BLODEUS, Sax. blod.] Deep red colour; from whence comes bloat and bloated, viz. sanguine and high-coloured, which, in Kent, is called a blousing colour; and a blouse is there a red-faced wench. The prior of Burcester, A. D. 1425, gave his liveries of this colour. Paroch. Antiq. 376.

BLOODWIT, or bloudwit, compounded of the Sax. blod, i. e. sanguis: and wyte, old English, misericordia.] Is often used in ancient charters of liberties for an amercement for bloodshed. Skene writes it bloudveit; and says veit in English is injuria; and that bloudveit is an amerciament or unlow (as the Scotch call it) for wrong or injury, as bloodshed is: for he that hath bloudveit granted him, bath free liberty to take all amercements of courts for effusion of blood. Fleta saith, Quod significat quietantiam misericordiæ pro effusione sanguinis. Lib. 1. c. 47. And according to some writers, blodwite was a customary fine paid as a composition and atonement for shedding or drawing of blood, for which the place was answerable, if the party was not discovered: and therefore a privilege or exemption from this fine or penalty was granted by the king, or supreme lord, as a special favour. So king Henry II. granted to all tenants within the honour of Willingford, Ut quieti sint de Hidagio, & blodewite, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 114. In Scotland bloodwit is a riot wherein blood is spilt.

BLOODY-HAND, is one of the four kinds of circumstances by which an offender is supposed to have killed deer in the king's forest: and it is where a trespasser is apprehended in the forest, with his hands or other parts bloody, though he be not found chasing or hunting of the deer. BOCKLAND, Sax. quasi bookland.] A possession or inheritance held by evidence in writing. See LL. Allueredi, c. 36. Bockland signifies deed land or charter land; and it commonly carried with it the absolute property of the land; wherefore it was preserved in writing, and possessed by the Thanes or nobler sort, as Prædium nobile, liberum & immune a servitiis vulgaribus & servilibus, and was the same as allodium, descendible unto all the sons, according to the common course of nations and of nature, and therefore called gavelkind; devisable only by will, and thereupon termed Terræ Testamentales. Spelm. of Feuds. This was one of the titles which the English Saxons had to their lands, and was always in writing: there was but one more, and that was Folkland, i. e. BOLTING. A term of art used in our inns of court, whereby is intended a private arguing of cases. The manner of it at Gray's Inn is thus: an ancient and two barristers sit as judges; three students bring each a case, out of which the judges choose one to be argued, which done, the students first argue it, and after them the barristers. It is inferior to mooting, and may be derived from the Sax. bolt, a house, because done privately in the house for instruction. In Lincoln's Inn, Mondays and Wednesdays are the bolting days, in vacation time; and Tuesdays and Thursdays the moot days.

BOND. A bond or obligation is a deed whereby the obligor, or person bound, obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators to pay a certain sum of money to another (the obligee) at a day appointed.

I. General Rules as to the Nature and Form of this Security.

II. Who may be Obligors and Obligees.

III. The Ceremonies necessary to constitute a Bond or Obligation.

IV. Of the Condition; and what shall be a Performance or Breach thereof.

V. Of the Discharge and Satisfaction of Bonds; 1. by the Act of the Party; or 2. by the Act of the Law.

VI. Of Actions and Pleadings on Bonds.

I. The Nature and Form of the Security .-If the bond be without a condition, it is called a single one, simplex obligatio; but there is generally a condition added, that if the obligor does some particular act, the obligation shall be void, or else shall remain in full force; as payment of rent, performance of covenants in a deed, or repayment of a principal sum of money borrowed of the obligee, with interest; which principal sum is usually one half of the penal sum specified on the bond. In case this condition is not performed, the bond becomes forfeited, or absolute at law, and charges the obligor while living, and after his death the obligation descends on his heir, who (on defect of personal assets) is bound to discharge it, provided he has real assets by descent as a recompense. So that it may be called, though not a direct, yet a collateral charge upon the lands.

The condition may be either in the same deed, or in another, and sometimes it is included within, and sometimes indorsed upon the obligation; but it is commonly at the foot of the obligation. Bro. Obl. 67. A memorandum on the back of a bond may restrain the same by way of exception. Moor. 67.

This security is also called a specialty; the debt being therein particularly specified in writing, and the party's scal, acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a security of a higher nature than those entered into without the solemnity of a seal.

As to the assignment of bonds, see tit. Assignment.

If the condition of a bond be impossible at the time of making it, or be to do a thing contrary to some rule of law that is merely positive; or if it be uncertain or insensible, the condition alone is void, and the bond shall stand single and unconditional; for it is the folly of the obligor to enter into such an obligation, from which he can never be released. If it be to do a thing that is malum in se, the obligation itself is void; for the whole is an the condition be possible at the time of making it, and afterwards become impossible by the act of God, the act of law, or the act of the obligee himself, there the penalty of the obligation is saved; for no prudeuce or foresight of the obligor could guard against such a contingency. Co. Lit. 206. See post, IV.; and tit. Condition.

On the forfeiture of a bond, or its becoming single, the whole penalty was formerly recoverable at law; but here the courts of equity interposed, and would not permit a man to take more than in conscience he ought, viz. his principal, interest, and expences, in case the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, the damages sustained upon non-performance of covenants, and the like. And this practice having gained some footing in the courts of law (see 2 Keb. 553: Salk. 596, 7: 6 Mod. 11. 60. 101.), the stat. 4 and 5 Ann. c. 16. at length enacted, in the same spirit of equity, that in case of a bond conditioned for the payment of moncy, the payment or tender of the principal sum due, with interest and costs, even though the bond be forfeited, and suit commenced thereon, shall be a full satisfaction and discharge.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity who seeks equity, seems to be the reason why an obligee shall have interest after he has entered up judgment; , for though in strictness it may be accounted his own fault why he did not take out execution, and therefore not entitled to interest; yet, as by the judgment he is entitled to the penalty, it does not seem reasonable that he should be deprived of it, but upon paying him the principal and interest, which incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment. Ab. Eq.

The Court of Chancery will not generally carry the debt beyond the penalty of a bond. Yet where a plaintiff came to be relieved against such penalty, though it was decreed, it was on the payment of the principal money, interest, and costs; and notwithstanding they exceeded the penalty, this was affirmed. FORM of a BOND OF OBLIGATION, with Condition for the Payment of Money.

Know all men by these presents, That I David Edwards, of Lincoln's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, Esquire, am held and firmly bound to Abraham Barker, of Dale Hall, in the county of Norfolk, Esquire, in the penal sum of ten thousand pounds, of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said Abraham Barker, or his certain attorney, executors, administrators, or assigns; for which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal. Dated the fourth day of September, in the forty-sixth year of the reign of our sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland king, defender of the faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and -

The condition of this obligation is such, that if the above bounden David Edwards, his heirs, executors, or administrators, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid unto the above-named Abraham Barker, his executors, administrators, or assigns, the full sum of five thousand pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, with lawful interest for the same, on the fourth day of March next ensuing the date of the above written obligation, then this obligation shall be void, and of none effect, or else shall be and remain in full force and virtue.

Sealed and delivered, being first David Edwards (L.S.) duly stamped, in the presence of A. B.

Obligation, &c.; from whence, and other authorities, which the regularity of modern practice has rendered uninteresting, it appears that the courts always inclined to support the justice of the plaintiff's case, without much regard to mere errors in form, or arising from accident.

II. Who may be Obligors or Obligees.—All persons who are enabled to contract, and whom the law supposes to have sufficient freedom and understanding for that purpose, may bind themselves in bonds and obligations. 5 Co. 119: 4 Co. 124: 1 Roll. Abr. 340.

So though an infant shall be liable for his necessaries, such as meat, drink, clothes, physic, schooling, &c. yet if he bind himself in an obligation, with a penalty for payment of any of those, the obligation is void. So an infant cannot bind fimself in a bond with a penalty conditioned for payment of interest as well as principal. 8 East, Rep. 330. And though the infant confirm it after 21, still it is invalid, unless the confirmation be of as high a nature as the bond. 3 Marsh.

Also, though a person non compos mentis shall not be allowed to avoid his bond, by reason of insanity and distraction, yet may a privy in blood, as the heir, and privies in representation, as the executor and administrator, avoid such bonds; also if a lunatic after office found, enters into a bond, it is merely void. 4 Co. 124. But if an infant, feme covert, &c. who are disabled by law to contract and to bind themselves in bonds, enter together with a stranger, who is under none of these disabilities, into an obligation, it shall bind the stranger, though it be void as to the infant, &c. 1 Roll.

Rep. 41.

If a servant makes a bill in form, "Memorandum, that I have received of A. B. to the use of my master C. D. the sum of 40l. to be paid at Michaelmas following," and thereto sets his seal, this is a good obligation to bind himself; for though, in the beginning of the deed, the receipt is said to be to the use of the master, yet the repayment is general, and must necessarily bind him who sealed; and the rather, because otherwise the obligee would lose his debt, he having no remedy against the master. Yelv. 137. Godbolt.

Infants, idiots, as also feme coverts, may be obligees; and here the husband is supposed to assent, being for his advantage; but if he disagrees, the obligation has lost its force; so that after the obligor may plead non est factum; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the bond is good; for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to his advantage. 5 Co. 119. b: Co. Lit. 3. a. See tit.

An alien may be an obligee; for since he therefore, if in the obligation the obligor be is allowed to trade and traffic with us, it is but reasonable to give him all that security which is necessary in his contracts, and which will the better enable him to carry on his commerce and dealings amongst us. Sole corporations, such as bishops, prebends, parsons, vicars, &c., cannot be obligees, and therefore a bond made to any of these shall enure to them in their natural capacities; for no sole body politic can take a chattel in succession, unless it be by custom; but a corporation aggregate may take any chattel, as bonds, leases, &c. in his political capacity, which shall go in succession, because it is always in being. Cro. Eliz. 464: Dyer, 48.a: Co. Lit. 9. a. 46. a: Hob. 94: 1 Roll. Abr. 515.

If a drunken man gives his bond, it binds him; and a bond without consideration is obligatory, and no relief shall be had against it, for it is voluntary, and as a gift. Jenk. Cent. 109. But see Cole v. Robins, Hill. 2 Ann. per Holt, referred to in Bull. N. P. 172. that on the general issue, defendant may give in evidence that they made him sign the bond when he was so drunk he knew not what he did. A person enters voluntarily into a bond, though there was not any consideration for it; if there be no fraud used in obtaining the same, the bond shall not be relieved against in equity: but a voluntary bond may not be paid in a course of administration, so as to take place of real debts, even by simple contract; yet it shall be paid before legacies. 1 Chan. Cas. 157. An heir is not bound, unless he be named expressly in the bond; though the executors and administrators are. Dy. 13.

It is clearly agreed that two or more may bind themselves jointly in an obligation, or they may bind themselves jointly and seve- date, or hath a false or impossible date; for rally; in which last case the obligee must sue them jointly, or he may sue any one of them at his election; but if they are jointly and not severally bound, the obligee must sue them jointly; also in such case, if one of them dies, his executor is totally discharged, and the survivor and survivors only chargeable. 2 Roll. Abr. 148: Dyer, 19. 310: 5 Co. 10: Dal. 85. pl. 42: 1 Salk. 393: Carth. 61: 1 Lutw. 696.

If three enter into an obligation, and bind themselves in the words following, Obligamus nos et utrumque nostrum per se pro toto et in solido, these make the obligation joint and several. Dyer, 19. b. pl. 114.

III. The Ceremonies to constitute a Bond. -It is said, that there are only three things essentially necessary to the making a good obligation, viz. writing on paper or parchment, sealing, and delivery; but it hath been adjudged not to be necessary that the obligor named Erlin, and he signs his name Erlwin, that this variation is not material, because subscribing is no essential part of the deed, sealing being sufficient. 2 Co. 5. a. Godard's case: Noy. 21. 85: Moor. 28: Stile, 97: 2 Salk. 462: 5 Mod. 281.

And though the seal be necessary, and the usual way of declaring on a bond is, that the defendant by his bond or writing obligatory sealed with his seal, acknowledged, &c.; yet if the word scaled be wanting, it is cured by verdict and pleading over, for all necessary circumstances shall be intended; and if it were not sealed, it could not be his deed or obligation. Dyer, 19. a: Cro. Eliz. 571. 737: Cro. Jac. 420: 2 Co. 5: 1 Vent. 70: 3 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141: 6 Mod. 306.

Also, though sealing and delivery be essential in an obligation, yet there is no occasion in the bond to mention that it was sealed and delivered; because, as Lord Coke says, these are things which are done afterwards. 2 Co. 5.a.

The name of the obligor subscribed, 'tis said, is sufficient, though there is a blank for his christian name in the bond. Cro. Jac. 261. Vide Cro. Jac. 558: 1 Mod. 107. In these cases, though there be a verdict, there shall not be judgment. Where an obligor's name is omitted to be inserted in the bond, and yet he signs and scals it, the Court of Chancery may make good such an accident; and in case a person takes away a bond fraudulently, and cancels it, the obligee shall have as much benefit thereby as if not cancelled. 3 Chan. Rep. 99. 184.—Where a man was bound, and not said to whom, the name was supplied. 3 Lev. 21: 2 Ves. Sen. 100: 2 Jac. & Walk. 1 .- Where the obligatory part omitted the word "pounds," it was supplied. & Barn. & C. 568.

An obligation is good though it wants the the date, as hath been observed, is not of the substance of the deed; but herein we must take notice that the day of the delivery of a deed or obligation is the day of the date, though there is no day set forth. 2 Co. 5. Godard's case; Noy. 21. 85, 86: Hob. 249: Stile, 97: Cro. Jac. 136. 264: Yelv. 193: 1 Salk. 76: see Styles v. Wardle, 4 Barn & C.: Steel v. Mart, 4 Barn. & C. 72.

If a man declare on a bond, bearing date such a day, but does not say when delivered, this is good; for every deed is supposed to be delivered and made on the day it bears date; and if the plaintiff declare on a date, he cannot afterwards reply that it was first delivered at another day, for this would be a departure. Cro. Eliz. 773: 2 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141. Vide. 1 Brownl. 104: 1 Lev. 196.

A plaintiff may suggest a date in a bond, where there is none, or it is impossible, &c. where the parties and sum are sufficiently expressed. 5 Mod. 282. A person shall not be charged by a bond, though signed and sealed, without delivery, or words, or other thing amounting to a delivery. 1 Leon. 140. But a bond or deed may be delivered by words, without any act of delivery; as where the obligor says to the obligee, Go and take the said writing, or take it as my deed, &c. So an actual delivery, without speaking any word, is sufficient: otherwise, a man that is mute could not deliver a deed. Co. Lit. 36. a: Cro. Eliz. 835: Leon. 193: Cro. Eliz. 122.

Interlineation in a bond, in a place not material, will not make the bond void; but if it be altered in a part material, it shall be void. 1 Nels. Abr. 391. And a bond may be void by rasure, &c.; as where the date, &c. is rased after delivery, which goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. If the words in a bond at the end of a condition, That then this obligation to be void, are omitted, the condition will be void, but not the obligation. See farther Bac. Ab. Obligation. (C.)

IV. The Condition .- The condition of a bond was, that A. L. should pay such a sum upon the 25th of December, or appear in Hilary term after in the court of B. R. He died after the 25th of December, and before Hilary term, and had not paid any thing: in this case the condition was not broken for non-payment, and the other part is become impossible by the act of God. 1 Mod. Rep. 265. And when a condition is doubtful, it is always! taken most favourably for the obligor, and against the obligee; but so as a reasonable construction be made as near as can be according to the intention of the parties. Dyer,

If no time is limited in a bond for the payment of money, it is due presently and payable on demand. 1 Brownl. 53. But the judges have sometimes appointed a convenient time for payment, having regard to the dis-tance of a place, and the time wherein the thing may be performed. And if a condition be made impossible in respect to time, as to make payment of money on the 30th of February, &c. it shall be paid presently. Jones, 143: see 1 Leon. 101.

A bond made to enfcoff two persons; if one dies before the time is past wherein it should be done, the obligor must enfeoff the survivor of them, or the condition will be broken; and if it be that B. and others shall enjoy land, and the obligor and B. the obligee do disturb the rest, by this the condition is dic, or the rent, &c. should be discharged, or

If the act be to be done at a certain place, where the obligor is to go, to Rome, &c., and he is to do the sole act without limitation of time, he hath term during life to perform the same: if the concurrence of the obligor and obligee is requisite it may be hastened by the request of the obligee. 6 Rep. 30: 1 Roll. Abr. 437. Where no place is mentioned for performance of a condition, the obligor is obliged to find out the person of the obligee, if he be in England, and tender the money, otherwise the bond will be forfeited; but when a place is appointed he need seek no farther. Co. Lit. 210: Lit. 340. And if, where no place is limited for payment of money due on a bond, the obligor, at or after the day of payment, meets with the obligee, and tenders him the money, but he goes away to prevent it, the obligor shall be excused. 8 Ed. 4.

The obligor, or his servant, &c. may tender the money to save the forfeiture of the bond, and it shall be a good performance of the condition, if made to the obligee, though refused by him; yet if the obligor be afterwards sued, he must plead that he is still ready to pay it, and tender the money in court. Co. Lit. 208.

In the performance of the condition of an obligation, the intention of the parties is chiefly to be regarded: and therefore a performance in substance is sufficient, though it differ in words or some material circumstance; as if one be bound to deliver the testament of the testator, if he plead that he had delivered letters testamentary, it is sufficient. Bro. Condition 156: 17 Ed. 4. 3: 1 Roll. Abr.

If the condition of an obligation be to procure a lawful discharge, this must be by a release, or some discharge that is pleadable, and not by acquittance, which is but evidence. 1 Keb. 739.

If the party who is bound to perform the condition disables himself, this is a breach; as where the condition is, that the feoffee shall reinfeoff, or make a gift in tail, &c. to the feoffor, and the feoffee, before he performs it, make a feoffment or gift in tail, or lease for life or years in præsenti or futuro to another person, or marry or grant a rent-charge, or be bound in a statute or recognisance, or become professed; in all those cases the condition is broken; for the fcoffee has either disabled himself to make any estate, or to make it in the same plight or freedom in which he received its and better the conditions. which he received it; and being once disabled, he is ever disabled, though his wife should

Where the condition is in the conjunctive, regularly both parts must be performed: yet, to supply the intention of the parties, it is held, that if a condition in the conjunctive be not possible to be performed, it shall be taken in the disjunctive; as if the condition be, that he and his executors shall do such a thing, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because he cannot have an executor in his life-time; so if the condition be that he and his assigns shall sell certain goods, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because both cannot do it. A bond given to persons who would be prejudiced by a private act of parliament, in consideration of their withdrawing their opposition to it, is not illegal. Jac. R. 64: 2 Madd. 356: and see Bac. Ab. Obligation (C.) (7th ed.) The obligor cannot plead that the consideration or condition of the bond was in fact different from what is stated, unless he shows fraud; for he is estopped by his deed. 2 Barn. & Adol. 544. But if he shows fraud or illegality, he may so plead. 2 Wils. 247: 9 East, 408: 9 Barn. & C. 462.

V. 1. The Discharge and Satisfaction of Bonds.—Where a lesser sum is paid before it is due, and the payment is accepted, it shall be good in satisfaction of a greater sum; but after the money is due, then a lesser sum, though accepted, shall not be a satisfaction for a greater sum. Thus in debt upon bond conditioned to pay 81. defendant pleaded payment of 51. before the day mentioned in the condition, which the obligee accepted in satisfaction of the bond, and upon demurrer this was adjudged a good plea. Moor, 677. Vide 3 Bulst. 301.—Payment after the day, of a less sum, is not good, as the bond is forfeited, at common law; and there is not any statute to relieve. See Bac. Ab. Accord and Satisfaction. (A.) (7th ed.)

ted in satisfaction of the debt; and upon demurrer, the plaintiff had judgment, because the desendant had pleaded the payment of the 51. generally, without alleging that it was in satisfaction of the debt. It is true, he sets forth, that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt, but it ought likewise to be paid in satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117. Debt upon bond, conditioned, that in consideration the plaintiff had paid 121. to the defendant, he became bound to pay the plaintiff 121. if he lived one month after the date of that bond; and if not paid at that time, then to pay him 14l. if he lived six months after the date of the bond; the defendant pleaded, that after the six months he paid plaintiff 8l., and then gave him another bond in the penalty of 201. conditioned to pay him 10l. on a certain day, in full satisfaction of the other bond, and that the paintiff did accordingly accept the said bond; upon a demurrer to this plea, it was held ill; for admitting that one bond might be given in satisfaction of another, yet it cannot be after the other is forfeited, as it was in this case; because after the forseiture the penalty is vested in the obligee, and a less sum cannot be a satisfaction for a greater. 1 Lut. 464.

It hath been adjudged, that the acceptance of one bond cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of another bond. Cro. Car. 85: Moor, 872: Cro. Eliz. 716. 727: 2 Cro. 579. Thus in debt on a bond of 100l. conditioned for the payment of 52l. 10s. on a certain day, the defendant pleaded that at the day, &c. he and his son gave a new bond of 100l., conditioned for the payment of 52l. 10s. at another day then to come, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction of the old bond; and upon demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff, because the acceptance of a new bond to pay money at another day, could not be a present satisfaction for the money due on the day when it was to be paid on the old bond. Hob. 68. But it is otherwise where the second is not given by the obligor; as in debt upon bond against the defendant as heir, &c. he pleaded that his ancestor, the obligor, died intestate, and that W. R. administered, who gave the plaintiff another bond in satisfaction of the former: there was a verdict for the defendant: and it being moved in arrest of judgment, this distinction was made, that if the obligor, who gave the first bond, had likewise given the second, it would not have discharged the first; but in this case the second bond was not given by him who gave the first, but by his administrator, which had mended the security, because he may be chargeable de bonis propriis; and for that reason the second bond was held to be a discharge of the first. 1 Mod. 225. See Bac. Ab. Accord and Satisfaction. (7th ed.)

be presumed in equity to be satisfied, and be | business, and retain the clerk in the same decreed to be cancelled; and a perpetual injunction granted to stay proceedings thereon. 1 Ch. Rep. 79: Finch. Rep. 78: see Mod. Ca. 22.—But satisfaction may be presumed within a less period, if any evidence be given in aid of the presumption; as if an account between the parties has been settled in the intermediate time, without any notice having been taken of such a demand.—Yet length of time is no legal bar; it is only a ground for the jury to presume satisfaction. 1 Term Rep. 270. And the presumption of payment may be rebutted by evidence that the obligor had not the means of paying. Fladong v. Winter, 19 Ves. 196: see 1 Camp. 217: 2 Moo. & Malk. 44.

If several obligors are bound jointly and severally, and the obligee make one of them his executor, it is a release of the debt, and the executor cannot sue the other obligor. 8 Co. 136: 1 Salk. 300: and vide 1 Jon. 345. But though it be a release in law, in regard it is the proper act of the obligee, yet the debt by this is not absolutely discharged, but it remains assets in his hands, to pay both debts and legacies. Cro. Car. 373: Yelv. 160. See tit. Executor, IV. 8.

If a feme sole obligee take one of the obligors to husband, this is said to be a release in law of the debt, being her own act.

8 Co. 136. a: March. 128.

If one obligor makes the executor of the obligee his executor, and leaves assets, the debt is deemed satisfied, for he has power, by way of retainer, to satisfy the debt; and neither he nor the administrator de bonis non, &c. of the obligee can ever sue the surviving obligor. Hob. 10.

But if two are bound jointly and severally to A. and the executor of one of them makes the obligee his executor, yet the obligee may sue the other obligor. 2 Lev. 73. See tit.

Executor, IV. 8.

an obligation, and the obligee release to one of them, both are discharged. Co. Lit. 232. a. But a covenant not to sue one of several obligors has not this effect. Dean v. Newhall, 8 Term Rep. 168: 6 Taunt. 239.

Three were bound jointly and severally in an obligation, and an action was brought against one of them, who pleaded, that the seal of one of the others was torn off, and the obligation cancelled, and therefore void against all. Upon demurrer it was adjudged, that the obligation, by the tearing off the seal of one of the obligors, became void against all, notwithstanding the obligors were severally bound. 2 Lev. 220: 2 Show. 289: Sed. qu.

If the condition of a bond be, that a clerk shall faithfully serve, and account for all money, &c. to the obligee and his executors, this does not make the obligor liable for money received by the clerk in the service of the executors of the obligee, who continue the employment, with the addition of other business, and an increase of salary. 1 Term Rep. 287.—But such a bond is not discharged by the obligees taking another partner into their house; it is a security to the house of the obligees. 1b. 291. n. And so also as to a similar bond to trustees for an insurance company. It is a security to the existing body of persons, carrying on the same business under the same name, and may be sued on, though the shares are not in the same hands. 12 East, 400. But if the bond is to pay to C. D. and E. all sums which they shall advance, it does not cover advances made after death of C. and the introduction of another party. 3 East, 484: and see 3 Camp. 53. acc.; and 1 New R. 34.

VI. Actions and Pleadings on Bonds.-In a bond where several are bound severally, the obligee is, at his election, to sue all the obligors together, or all of them apart, and have several judgments and executions; but he shall have satisfaction but once; for if it be of one only, that shall discharge the rest. Dyer, 19. 310. Where two or more are bound in a joint bond, and only one is sued, he must plead in abatement, that two more sealed the bond, &c. and aver that they are living, and so pray judgment de billa, &c. And not demur to the declaration. Sid. 420.

If action be brought upon a bond against two joint and several obligors jointly, and both are taken by capias, here the death or escape of one shall not release the other; but the same kind of execution must be taken forth against them: it is otherwise when they are sued severally. Hob. 59.

Also, if two or more be jointly bound, though regularly one of them alone cannot be sued, yet if process be taken out against all, and one of them only appears, but the others stand out to an outlawry, he who appeared If two are jointly and severally bound in shall be charged with the whole debt. 9 Co.

If a bond is made to three, to pay money to one of them, they must all join in the action, because they are but as one obligee.

Yelv. 177.

So if an obligation be made to three, and two bring their action, they ought to show the third is dead. 1 Sid. 238. 420: 1 Vent. 34.

Though there be several obligees, yet a person cannot be bound to several persons severally; and therefore an obligation of 2001. to two, to pay 100l. to the one, and the other 100l. to the other, is a void condition. Dyer, 350. a. pl. 20: Hob. 172: 2 Brownl. 207: Yelv.

If A. bind himself in a sum to B. to pay to C., who is a stranger, a payment to C. is a payment to B., and in an action upon it, the count must be upon a bond payable to B. 1 Sid. 295: 2 Keb. 81.

Robert v. Harnage.

So if A. makes a bond to B. to pay to such person as he shall appoint; if B. does not appoint one, payment to him is a payment to B., and if B. appoint none, it shall be paid to

B. himself. 6 Mod. 228.

If A. by his bill obligatory, acknowledges himself to be indebted to B. in the sum of 10l. to be paid at a day to come, and binds himself and his heirs in the same bill in 201. but does not mention to whom he is bound, yet the obligation is good, and he shall be intended to be bound to B. to whom he acknowledged before the 10l. to be due. 2 Roll. Abr. 148. Franklin v. Turner.

If an infant seal a bond, and be sued thereon, he is not to plead non est factum, but must avoid the bond by special pleading; for this bond is only voidable, and not in itself void. 5 Rep. 119. But if a bond be made by a feme covert, she may plead her coverture, and conclude non est factum, &c. her bond being void. 10 Rep. 119: see Bac. Ab. Obligation (F.): and the note to Thomas & Fraser's Coke's Reports, vol. 5. 119. b. Or plead non est factum, and give coverture in evidence. If a bond depends upon some other deed, and the deed becomes void, the bond is also void.

As to the pleading of performance, the defendant must set forth in what manner he hath performed it. Thus, in debt on a bond, with condition for performance of several things, the defendant pleads that the condition of the said deed was never broken by him, and held an ill plea: because, for saving the bond, it is necessary for the defendant to show how he hath performed the condition; and this sort of pleading was never admitted. 2 Vent. 156.

So if he had pleaded that he performed every thing, it had been ill; for the particulars being expressed in the condition, he ought to plead to each particularly; but if the condition were for performance of covenants in an indenture, performance were generally a good plea. 1 Lev. 302. This must be understood where the covenants are set forth, and appear to be all in the affirmative. For if some are in the affirmative, some in the negative, or any in the disjunctive, the defendant should plead specially.

In debt on an obligation for payment of money, &c. the defendant pleads, that at the time and place he was ready to pay the money, but that nobody was there to receive it; and held ill on a general demurrer, for

In debt on a bond with condition, the defendant pleads a collateral plea, which is insufficient; the plaintiff demurs and hath judgment, without assigning a breach; for the defendant, by pleading a defective plea, by which he would excuse his non-performance of the condition, saves the plaintiff the trouble of assigning a breach, and gives him advantage of putting himself on the judgment of the court, whether the plea be good or not; but if the plaintiff had admitted the plea, and made a replication which showed no cause of action, it had been otherwise; but if the replication were idle, and the defendant demurred, yet the plaintiff should have judgment without assigning a breach. 1 Lev. 55. 84: 3 Lev. 17. 24. This must mean, if the plea was bad in substance.

And in all cases of debt on an obligation with condition (that of a bond to perform an award only excepted), if the defendant plead a special matter, that admits and excuses a non-performance, the plaintiff need only answer, and falsify the special matter alleged; for he that excuses a non-performance admits it, and the plaintiff need not show that which the defendant hath supposed and admitted. Salk. 138.

But if the defendant pleads a performance of the condition, though it be not well pleaded, the plaintiff, in his replication, must show a breach; for then he has no cause of action, unless he show it: and this difference will give the true reason, and reconcile the following cases. 1 Salk. 138: 1 Lev. 55. 84. 226: Saund. 102. 159. 317: 3 Lev. 17. 24: 1 Vent. 114: Cro. Eliz. 320: Yelv. 78.

But by stat. 4 Anne, c. 16. if an action of debt be brought on single bill, or judgment, after money paid, such payment may be pleaded in bar. So if a bond with a condition, upon payment of principal and interest due by the condition, though such payment was not strictly made according to the condition, yet it may be pleaded in bar.

By stat. 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 8. in actions on bonds for performance of covenants, the plaintiff may (which is held must) assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury may assess damages. The defendant paying the damages, execution may be staid: but the judgment to remain to answer any future breach, and plaintiff may then have scire facias against the defendant; and so toties quoties. As to the cases which are and are not within this statute, see Bac, Ab. Obligation. (F.) (7th ed.) Generally it applies to all bonds except those conditioned for payment of a gross sum.

In debt on a bond, the defendant may have several pleas in bar; as if the plaintiff sue as executor, the defendant may plead the release of the testator for part, and for the residue the release of the plaintiff, so he may plead payment as to part, and as to the rest an acquittance. 1 Salk. 180.

But a defendant in an action on a bond cannot plead non est factum, and a tender as to part. 5 Term Rep. 97,

In debt on an obligation the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but must deny the deed by pleading non est factum; for the seal of the party continuing, it must be dissolved eo ligamine quo ligatur. Hard. 332: Hob. 218. In bonds to save harmless, the defendant BOOKS. By stat. 7 A. c. 14. § 10. if any book shall be taken or otherwise lost out of any parochial library, any justice may grant his warrant to search for it; and if it shall be found, it shall, by order of such justice, be restored to the library.

The sole right of printing books, bequeathed to the two Universities of England, the four Universities of Scotland, and the Colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester is secured to them by stat 15 G. 3. c. 53.

From the 7th to the 11th century books were very scarce. To that was chiefly owing the universal ignorance which prevailed during that period. After the Saracens conquered Egypt in the seventh century, the communication with that country (as to Europe, &c.) was almost entirely broken off, and the papyrus no longer in use. So that paper was used, and as the price of that was high, books became extremely rare, and of great value. Vide Robertson's History of Charles the Fifth, 1 vol. 233, 234.

In the eleventh century the art of making paper was invented, the number of manuscripts was thereby increased, and the study of the sciences greatly facilitated. See farther as to Books, tit. Literary Property.

bord, domus.

BORDARII, or BORDIMANNI. These words often occur in Domesday, and some think they mean boors, husbandmen, or cottagers. In the Domesday inquisition they were distinct from the villani; and seemed to be those of a less servile condition, who had a bord or cottage, with a small parcel of land allowed to them, on condition they should supply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other small provisions, for his board or entertainment. Some derive the word bordarii from the old Gall. bords, the limits or extreme parts of any extent; as the borders of a country, and the borderers inhabitants in those parts. Spelm.

BORD-HALFPENY, Sax. bord, a table, and halpeny, or half-penny. Spelm.] A small toll, by custom paid to the lord of the town for setting up boards, tables, booths, &c. in fairs and markets.

BORDLANDS. The demesnes which lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c.

BORDLODE, or BORDAGE. A service required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his house: or it is said to be the quantity of food or provision, which the bordarii, or bordmen, paid for their bord-lands. The old Scots had the term of burd, and meetburd for victuals and provisions; and burden sack, for a sack full of provender: from whence it is probable came our word burden. Spelm.

BORD-SERVICE. A tenure of bord-lands; by which some lands in the manor of Fulham in com. Mid. and elsewhere, are held of the bishop of London, and the tenants do now pay six-pence per acre in lieu of finding provision, anciently, for their lord's board or table. | Litt. § 165; as in Edmunton, &c. BORLASIUS. Borlace.

BOROUGH, Fr. burg. Lat. burgus, Sax. borhoe.] Signifies a corporate town, which is not a city; and also such a town or place as sends burgesses to parliament. Verstegan saith, that burg, or burgh, whereof we make our borough, metaphorically signifies a town having a wall, or some kind of inclosure about it: and all places that, in old time, had among our ancestors the name of borough, were one way or other fenced or fortified. Lit. § 164. But sometimes it is used for villa insignior, or a country town of more than ordinary note, not walled. A borough is a place of safety, protection, and privilege, according to Somner; and in the reign of king Hen. II. burghs had so great privileges, that if a bond-man or servant remained in a borough a year and a day, he was by that residence made a freeman. Glanville. And why these were called free burghs, and the tradesmen in them free burgesses, was from a freedom to buy and sell, without disturbance, exempt from toll, &c. granted by charter. It is conjectured that borhoe, or borough, was also formerly taken for those companies consisting of ten families, which were to be pledges for one another: and we are told by some writers that it is a street or row of houses close to one another. Brac. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10: Lamb. Duty of Const. p. 8. Vide Squire's Anglo-Saxon Government, 236. 247. 251. 254. 258. 262.264. Trading boroughs were first founded in the time of Alfred. Squire, 247. 251.

In Scotland boroughs are divided into royal boroughs and boroughs of barony; the former holding of the king, the latter of a subject. The magistrates of royal boroughs have the same jurisdiction within the borough as sheriffs in their counties.

A borough is now generally understood to be a town, either corporate or not, that sends burgesses to parliament. 1 Comm. 114. and Coleridge'e Note there. See title Burgage. Tenure, Corporation, Parliament.

BOROUGH-ENGLISH. A custom relative to the descent of lands, in some ancient boroughs, and copyhold manors, that estates shall descend to the youngest son; or, if the owner hath no issue, to his younger brother; Kitch.

This is so named, in contradistinction, as it were, to the Norman customs, and is noticed by Glanville, lib. 7. c. 3.

Littleton gives the following reason for this custom. Because the younger son, by reason of his tender age, is not so capable as the rest of his brethren to help himself. Other authors have, indeed, given a much stranger reason for this custom, as if the lord of the fee had anciently a right of concubinage with his tenant's wife on her wedding night; and that therefore the youngest son was most certainly the tenant's offspring. But it does not appear that this custom ever prevailed in England (nor even in Scotland), though that error for a long time prevailed. See this Dict. tit. Mercheta Mulierum.-Possibly this custom of borough-english may be the remnant of the pastoral state of our British and German ancestors, in which the youngest child was necessarily most helpless. See 2 Comm.

This custom goes with the land, and guides the descent to the youngest son, although there be a devise to the contrary. 2 Lev. 138. If a man, seised in fee of lands in borough-english, makes a feoffment to the use of himself and the heirs male of his body, according to the course of the common law, and afterwards die seised, having issue two sons, the youngest son shall have the lands by virtue of the custom, netwithstanding the feoffment. Dyer, 179.

If a copyhold in borough-english be surrendered to the use of a person and his heirs, the right will descend to the youngest son according to the custom. 1 Mod. 102. And a youngest son shall inherit an estate in tail in borough-english. Noy, 106. But an heir at common law shall take advantage of a condition annexed to borough-english land; though the youngest son shall be entitled to all actions in right of the land, &c. 1 Nels. Ab. 396. And the eldest son shall have tithes arising out of land borough-english; for tithes of common right are not inheritances descendible to an heir, but come in succession from one clergyman to another. Ibid. 347.

Borough-english land being descendible to the youngest son, if a younger son dies without issue male, leaving a daughter, such daughter shall inherit jure repræsentationis. 1 Salk. 243. It hath been adjudged where a man hath several brothers, the youngest may inherit lands in borough-english: yet it is said where a custom is, that land shall go to the youngest son, it doth not give it to the youngest uncle, for customs shall be taken strictly; and those which fix and order the descents of inheritance, can be altered only by parliament. Dyer, 179: 4 Leon. 384: Jenk. Cent. 220.

By the custom of borough-english, the widow shall have the whole of her husband's lands in | common phrase to-boot, i. e. compensationis dower, which is called her free-bench; and this is given to her the better to provide for the younger children, with the care of whom she is entrusted. Co. Lit. 33. 111: F. N. B. 150: Mo. pl. 566.

Borough-english is one of those customs of which the law takes particular notice; there is no occasion to prove that such custom actually exists, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. 1 Comm. 76. the extension of the custom to the collateral line must be specially pleaded. Robinson Gavelk. 38. 43. 93. And as borough-english may be extended by special custom, so may it be restrained; and therefore the customary descent may be confined to fee-simple. BOTE, Sax.] A recompense, satisfaction, or amends. The Saxon bote is synonymous to the word estovers. See tit. Common of Estovers. House-bote is a sufficient allowance of wood to repair, or burn in the house; which latter is sometimes called fire-bote. Ploughbote and cart-bote, are wood to be employed in making and repairing all instruments of husbandry: and hay-bote or hedge-bote, is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. 2 Comm. 35. Hence also comes man-bote, compensation, or amends for a man slain, &c. In king Ina's laws it is declared what rate was ordained for expiation of this offence, according to the quality of the person slain. Lamb. cap. 99. From hence, likewise, we have our void. Atlas, 2 Hagg. 48.

BOTELESS. In the charter of H. 1. to Tho. archbishop of York, it is said, that no judgment or sum of money shall acquit him that commits sacrilege; but he is in English called boteless, viz. without emendation. Lib. Albas penes Cap. de Suthnet. int. Plac. Trin. 12 Ed. 2. Ebor. 48. We retain the word still in common speech; as it is bootless to attempt such a thing; that is, it is in vain to attempt it.

BOTILER OF THE KING (pincerna regis), is an officer that provides the king's wines, who (according to Fleta), may by virtue of his office, choose out of every ship ladened with sale wines, one cask before the mast, and one behind. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 21. This officer shall not take more wine than he is commanded, of which notice shall be given by the steward of the king's house, &c. on pain of forfeiting double damages to the party grieved; and also to be imprisoned and ransomed at the pleasure of the king. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 21: see tit. Customs. As to butlerage and prisage, see Bac. Ab. Smuggling. (C.) (7th

BOTTOMRY, or ottomree, fænus nauticum.] Is generally where a person lends money to a merchant, who wants it to traffick, and is to be paid a greater sum at the return of a certain ship, standing to the hazard of the voyage; and in this case, though the interest be greater than that allowed by law, it is not usury. See this subject more fully treated under tit. In-

The Court of Admirality has an established jurisdiction over bottomry bonds, which are founded upon sea-risks, and defeasible by the destruction of the ship in the course of her voyage: but where a bond was not defeasible by any such casualty, and remained in full force whether the ship sunk or swam, the Admiralty Court doubted its jurisdiction to proceed upon it.

In bottomry-bonds, which are contracts in the nature of mortgages of ships, the lender and not the borrower is to run the risk, in consideration of the exorbitant interest allowed as the pretium periculi. A bond reserving maritime interest, but excluding sea-risk, is

By stat. 34 G. 3. c. 61. bakers are prohibited from carrying on their trade during Sundays, except at certain hours.

Under these statutes, bread deficient in weight or quality may be seized by justices, mayors, &c.; and bread is to be marked by the bakers according to its quality, W. for wheaten, and H. for household.

The 51 H. 3. st. 1. mentioned under this title, has been repealed.

With respect to bakers exercising their trade on a Sunday, see Sunday.

The latest act, imposing regulations as to the baking of bread where an assize is set, is the 5 G. 4. c. 50; where there is none, the 59 G. 3. c. 36: 1 and 2 G. 4. c. 50.

BREAD of TREET, or TRITE, panis tritici.] Is bread mentioned in the stat 51 H. 3. of assise of bread and ale, wherein are particularised wastel-bread, cocket-bread, and bread of treet, which answer to the three sorts of bread mentioned in the statute of Anne, called white, wheaten, and household bread. In religious houses they heretofore distinguished bread by these several names, panis armigerorum, panis conventualis, panis puerorum, et panis famulorum. Antiq. Not. BREAKING OF ARRESTMENT, is an action wherein it is narrated, that though arrestment was laid on, payment, nevertheless, was made; the pursuer, therefore, concludes, that the breaker should refound him, and besides should be punished according to law.

BRIBERY, from the Fr. briber, to devour or eat greedily.] Is a high offence, where a person, in a judicial place, takes any fee, gift, reward, or brocage for doing his office, or by colour of his office, but of the king only.

Inst. 145: Hawk. P. C. i. c. 67.

Taken more largely, it signifies the receiving, or offering, any undue reward, to or by any person concerned in the administration of public justice, whether judge, officer, &c. to influence his behaviour in his office: and sometimes it signifies the taking or giving a reward for appointing another to a public office. 3 Inst. 9: 4 Comm. 139. To take a bribe of money, though small, is a great fault; and judges' servants may be punished for receiving bribes. If a judge refuse a bribe offered him, the offerer is punishable. Fortescue, cap. 51.

Bribery in inferior judicial or ministerial offices is punished by fine and imprisonment, which may also be inflicted on those who offer a bribe, though not taken. 4 Comm. 140: 3 Inst. 147. Bribery in a judge was anciently looked upon as so heinous an offence, that it was sometimes punished as high treason; and it is at this day punishaable with forfeiture of office, fine, and imprisonment. Blackstone says that Chief Justice Thorpe was hanged for this offence in the reign of Edward III.; but this is denied by Lord Coke. 3 Inst. 145: and see Rot. Parl. 10 R. 2. st. 24, for his pardon.—And by a stat. 11 H. 4. all judges and officers of the king, convicted of bribery, shall forfeit treble the bribe, be punished at the king's will, and be discharged from the king's service for ever. 4 Comm. 140. cites 3 Inst. 146.-In the reign of King James I. the earl of Middlesex, lord treasurer of England, being impeached by the commons for refusing to hear petitions referred to him by the king, till he had received great bribes, &c., was by sentence of the lords, deprived of all his offices, and disabled to hold any for the future, or to sit in parliament; also he was fined fifty thousand pounds, and imprisoned during the king's pleasure; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. & 7; but the fine was remitted on the accession of Charles I. and the proceeding appears to have been instigated rather by revenge than justice. BRIDGE, pons.] A building of stone or wood erected across a river, for the common case and benefit of travellers. Public bridges, which are of general convenience, are of common right to be repaired by the whole inhabitants of that county in which they lie. Hale's P. C. 143: 13 Co. 33: Cro. Car. 365.

The inhabitants of a county are bound to repair every public bridge within it; unless, when indicted for the non-repair of it, they can show by their plea that some other person is liable; and every bridge in a highway is, by stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5 deemed a public bridge for this purpose. 1 East R. 192.

Where a particular district rebuilt a footbridge over a more convenient part of the stream, and converted it into a bridge for horses, earts, and carriages; as the district was not bound by custom to build or repair such a bridge, but a foot-bridge only, and as they built quite a different bridge in a different place, which proved of common public utility to the county, the county, and not the district, are bound to repair it. Burr. 2594: Blackst. 685.

But a corporation aggregate, either in respect of a special tenure or certain lands, or in respect of a special prescription; also any other person, by reason of such a special tenure, may be compelled to repair them. Hale's P. C. 143: Dalt. c. 14: 6 Mod. 307.

A tenant at will of a house which adjoins to a common bridge, although he is not bound as between landlord and tenant to repair the house, yet if it becomes dangerously ruinous to the necessary intercourse of the bridge, the tenant is bound by reason of his possession, to repair it so far as to prevent the public being prejudiced. *Ld. Where the inhabitants of a county are indicted for not repairing a bridge, they must set forth who ought to repair the same, and traverse that they ought. 1 Vent. 256. Unless, perhaps, where the real question is, whether it be a public or a common bridge.

A vill may be indicted for a neglect in not repairing a bridge; and the justices of peace in their sessions may impose a fine for defaults. And any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land charged to repairs of a bridge, may be made defendants to an indictment for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the fine assessed by the court for the default of the repairs, who are to have their remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share of the charges. 6 Mod. 307.

If a manor is held by tenure of repairing a bridge or highway, which manor afterwards comes into several hands, in such case every tenant of any parcel of the demesnes and services is liable to the whole charge, but shall have contribution of the rest; and this though the lord may agree with the purchasers to discharge them of such repairs, which only binds the lord, and doth not alter the remedy which the public hath. 1 Danv. Ab. 744: 1

So if a manor, subject to such charge, comes into the hands of the crown, yet the duty upon it continues; and any person claiming afterwards under the crown, the whole manor, or any part thereof, shall be liable to an indictment or information, for want of due repairs. 1 Salk. 358.

If part of a bridge lie within a franchise. those of the franchise may be charged with the repairs for so much: also, by a special tenure, a man may be charged with the repairs of one part of a bridge, and the inhabitants of a county are to repair the rest. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 77. § 2: Raym. 384, 385.

Where the king enlarges the boundaries of a city by annexing part of the county to the county of the city, the inhabitants of the county of such city are bound to repair bridges lying in the said enlarged boundaries, though such bridges were at the time of the making of the stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. within the county at large. Stra. 177. And the true ground of this decision appears to have been, that the statute lays no absolute charge till the bridge is in decay: so that when the statute was made, though the bridges were within the county at large, yet, as they were not in Indictments for not repairing of bridges will not lie but in case of common bridges on they will lie for a bridge on a common footway. Mod. Cas. 256. Not keeping up a ferry, being a common passage for all the king's people, is indictable, as well as not keeping up bridges. 1 Salk. 12.

By stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. all householders dwelling in any county or town, whether they occupy lands or not: and all persons who have land in their own possession, whether they dwell in the same county or not, are liable to be taxed as inhabitants towards the repairs of a public bridge. Where it cannot be discovered who ought to repair a bridge, it must be presented by the grand jury in quarter sessions; and after inquiry, and the order of sessions upon it, the justices may send for the constables of every parish, to appear at a fixed time and place, to make a tax upon every inhabitant, &c.; but it has been usual, in the levying of money for repairs of bridges. to charge every hundred with a sum in gross, and to send such charge to the high constables of each hundred, who send their warrants to the petty constables, to gather it, by virtue whereof they assess the inhabitants of parishes in particular sums, according to a fixed rate, and collect it; and then they pay the same to the high constables, who bring it to the sessions.

This method of raising money was long observed; but by stat. 1 Ann. c. 18. justices in sessions, upon presentment made of want of reparations, are to assess every town, parish, &c. in proportion, towards the repairs of a bridge; and the money assessed is to be levied by the constables of such parishes, &c.; and being demanded, and not paid in ten days, the inhabitants shall be distrained; and when the tax is levied, the constables are to pay it to the high constable of the hundred, who is to pay the same to such persons as the justices shall appoint, to be employed according to the order of the justices, towards repairing of the bridge: and the justices may allow any person concerned in the execution of the act, 3d. per pound out of the money collected. All matters relating to the repairing and amending of bridges, are to be determined in the county where they lie, and no presentment or indictment shall be removed by certiorari. And by this statute, the evidence of the inhabitants of those places where the bridges are in decay, shall be admitted at any trial upon an information or indictment. &c.

By the common law, as declared and defined by stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. where the inhabitants of a county are liable to the repair of a public bridge, they are also liable to repair 300 feet of the highway at each end of the bridge. R. v. Inhabitants of the West Rid-contractors for performance; which contracts ing of Yorkshire, 7 East R. 388. affirmed in arc to be entered with the clerk of the peace.

error, 5 Taunt. 284.

The inhabitants of a county are only bound to repair bridges over such waters as answer the description of flumen vel cursus aque, that is, water flowing in a channel between banks, more or less defined, although such channel may be occasionally dry; and therefore, where the road by which a bridge was approached passed between meadows, which were occasionally flooded by rain, and for convenient way to the bridge a raised causeway had been made, having arches or culverts at intervals for the passage of the flood water, which were equally necessary to the safety of the main bridge and the causeway; it was held that the inhabitants of the county were not bound to repair such arches, being at the distance of more than 300 feet from the main bridge. 1 Barn. & Adol. 289.

The county or riding is liable to the repair of a bridge built by trustees under aturnpike act, there being no special provision for exonerating them from the common law liability, or transferring it to others, though the trustees were enabled to raise tolls for the support of the roads. 2 East R. 342.

The county is liable to repair a bridge built in the highway and used by the public above 40 years, though originally erected for the convenience of an individual. 2 E. R. 356. n. See R. v. Buckinghamshire inhabitants, 12 East R. 192.

A new and substantial bridge of public utility, built within the limits of one county, and adopted by the public, must be repaired oy the inhabitants of that county, although it be built within 300 feet of an old bridge, repairable by the inhabitants of another county, who were bound in consequence under the stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. to maintain such 300 feet of road, though lying in the other county.

R. v. Inhabitants of Devon, 14 East R. 377.

By 14 G. 2. c. 33. the justices at their general sessions may purchase or agree with persons for any piece of land, not above one acre, near to any county bridge, in order to enlarge or more conveniently rebuild it; and the ground shall be paid for out of the moncy raised by statute 12 G. 2. c. 29. for better assessing, collecting, and levying of county rates, &c. See tit. County Rates.

By the said stat. 12 G. 2. c. 29. § 14. when any public bridges, &c. are to be repaired at the expence of the county, the justices at their general or quarter sessions, after presentment made by the grand jury of their want of reparation, may contract with any person for rebuilding or repairing the same, for any term not exceeding seven years, at a certain annual sum. They are to give public notice of their intention to make such contracts, which are to be made at the most imprisonment. reasonable prices, and security given by the Quarter sessions may widen and improve or alter the situation of county bridges, &c. Id. § 2. Tools and materials provided by the quarter sessions vested in the surveyor. Id. § 3. Inhabitants of counties may sue for damage done to bridges in the name of surveyors. Id. § 4. What sort of bridges inhabitants of counties shall be liable to repair. Id. § 5. Acts shall not extend to bridges repaired by tenure. § 7.

No persons are compellable to make a new bridge but by act of parliament: and the inhabitants of the whole county cannot, of their own authority, change a bridge from one place to another.

If a man has toll for men and cattle passing over a bridge, he is to repair it; and toll may be paid in these cases, by prescription, or statute.

An action will not lie by an individual against the inhabitants of a county for an injury sustained from a county bridge being out of repair. Russell v. Men of Devon, 2 T. R. 667.

An indictment for not repairing a county bridge may be removed by certiorari at the instance of the prosecutor, notwithstanding the general words of the stat. 1 Ann. c. 18. § 5. that no such indictment shall be removed by certiorari. 6 T. R. 194; affirmed in error. 3 Boss. & Pull. 345. And many instances have occurred where informations and indictments for such offences have been so removed by the prosecutor, some of which happened soon after the passing of the stat. 6 T.R. 194. And so also a certiorari to remove such indictment, may be granted where others than the inhabitants of a county are bound to repair the bridge, the stat. of Anne extending only to bridges where the county is charged to repair: for when a private person or parish is charged, and the right will come in question, the act of W. and M. had allowed the granting a certiorari. Stra. 900.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 13. if any person shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down or in anywise destroy any public bridge, or do any injury with intent, and so as thereby to render such bridge, or any part thereof, dangerous or impassable, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not less than four years, and if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the court shall so think fit) in addition to such masters of London-bridge, chosen by the citizens, who have certain fees and profits belonging to their office, and the care of the said bridge, &c. Lex. Londin. 283.

BRIEF, brevis.] An abridgement of the client's case, made out of the instruction of counsel, on a trial at law; wherein the case of the party is to be briefly but fully stated, the proofs must be placed in due order, and proper answers made to whatever may be objected against the client's cause, by the opposite side; and herein great care is requisite, that nothing be omitted to endanger the cause.

An attachment has been granted against a party and his attorney for surreptitiously getting possession of the brief of a counsel on the other side, and applying the same to an improper purpose in his defence. See Bateman v. Conway, 1 Bro. P. C. 519. 8vo. ed.

Though a brief is not of itself evidence against the party for whom it is prepared, yet as a discovery of the secrets and merits of his case may be productive of perjury, or subornation of perjury, and thereby obstruct the justice of the court in which the suit is depending, the obtaining of it in a surreptitious manner is an offence highly deserving censure and punishment. Id.

Briefs, or licences to make collection for repairing churches, restoring loss by fire, &c.

See tit. Church-wardens, III. 1.

BRIGA, Fr. brigue.] Debate or contention. BRIGANDINE, Fr. Lat. lorica.] A coat of mail or ancient armour, consisting of many jointed and scale-like plates, very pliant and easy for the body. This word is mentioned in stat. 4 and 5 P. &. M. c. 2. and some confound it with kaubergeon; and others with in sailing.

BRIGANTES. The ancient name for the inhabitants of Yorkshire, Lancashire, bishoprick of Durham, Westmorland, and Cumber-Blount.

BRIGBOTE, or BRUG-BOTE, Sax. brig, pontus, and bote, compensatio.] The contributles,] which, by the old laws of the Anglo-Saxons, might not be remitted; but, by degrees, immunities were granted by our kings, even against this duty; and then to be quit of brig-bote signified to be exempt from tribute or contribution towards the mending or re-edifying of bridges. v. Brigbote and Burgbote.

BRISTOL. A great city, famous for trade: the mayor, burgesses, and commonalty of the city of Bristol are conservators of the river Avon, from above the bridge there, to Kingroad, and so down the Severn to the two islands called Holmes; and the mayor and justices of the said city may make rules and orders for preserving the river, and regulating pilots, masters of ships, &c. Also for the government of their markets: and the streets are to be kept clean and paved; and lamps or lights hung out at night. Stat. 11 and 12 W. 3. c. 23. No person shall act as a broker in the city of Bristol till admitted and licensed by the mayor and aldermen, &c. on pain of forfeiting 500l., and those who employ any such, to forfeit 50l. &c. by stat. 3 G. 2. c. 31. By the stat. 22 G. 2. c. 20. the stat. 11 and 12 W. 3. is rendered more effectual, so far as it relates to the paving and enlightening the streets; and divers regulations are made in relation to the hackney-coachmen, halliers, draymen, and carters, and the markets, and sellers of hay and straw, within the said city, and liberties thereof.

BROCAGE, brocagium.] The wages or hire of a broker, which is also termed brokerage. 12 R. 2. c. 2.

BROCELLA. This word, as interpreted by Dr. Thoroten, signifieth a wood: and is said to be a thicket or covert of brushes and brush-wood; from the obsolete Lat. brusca. terra bruscosa et brocia, Fr. broce, brocelle: and hence is our brouce of wood, and brousing of cattle.

BROCHA, Fr. broche.] An awl, or large packing-needle. A spit in some parts of England is called a broche; and from this word comes to pierce or broach a barrel.

BROCHIA. A great can or pitcher. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 1. c. 6. Where it seems that he intends saccus to carry dry, and brochia liquid things.

BRODEHALFPENY, or BROADHALF-

PENY. See Bordhalfpeny.

BROKERS, broccatores, broccarii et auxionarii.] Are those that contrive, make, and conclude bargains and contracts between mer- kings in the forest of Burnwood, in com. chants and tradesmen, in matters of money and merchandize, for which they have a fee or reward. These are Exchange brokers; and by the stat. 10 R. 2. c. 1. they are called broggers: also broggers of corn is used in a proclamation of queen Elizabeth, for badgers. Baker's Chron. fol. 411. The original of the word is from a trader broken, and that from the Sax. broc, misfortune, which is often the true reason of a man's breaking: so that the name of broker came from one who was a broken trader by misfortune; and none but such were formerly admitted to that employment; and they were to be freemen of the city of London, and allowed and approved by the lord mayor and aldermen, for their ability and honesty.

By the stat. 6 Ann. c. 16. they are to be annually licensed in London by the lord mayor and aldermen, who administer an oath, and take bond for the faithful execution of their offices: if any persons shall act as brokers, without being thus licensed and admitted, they shall forfeit the sum of 500l., and persons employing them 50l.; and brokers are to register contracts, &c. under the like penalty: also brokers shall not deal for themselves on pain of forfeiting 2001.: they are to carry about them a silver medal, having the king's arms, and the arms of the city, &c. and pay 40s. a year to the chamber of the city. See I Merw. R. 156: 1 Holt's Ca. 431: 2 Stark. Ca. 14.

Brokers embezzling any money, goods or securities intrusted to them, declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by 14 years' transportation or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, by stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29 § 49. which see at length under tit. Embezzlement.

BUGGERY, or Sodomy, comes from the Italian bugarone or buggerare, and it is defined to be a carnal copulation against nature; and this is either by the confusion of species, that is to say, a man or woman with any animal; or of sexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 3 Inst. 58: 12 Co. Rep. 36. This sin against God, nature, and the law, it is said, was brought into England by the Lombards. Rot. Parl. 50 E. 3. numb. 58. In ancient times, according to some authors, it was punishable with burning, though others say with burying alive: but at this day it is a felony excluded clergy, and punished as other felonies, by stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 15.

It is felony both in the agent and patient consenting, except the person on whom it is committed be a boy under the age of discretion (which is generally reckoned at fourteen), when it is felony only in the agent. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 670. and see stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 18.

This, says Blackstone, is a crime which ought to be strictly and impartially proved, and then as strictly and impartially punished. But it is an offence of so dark a nature, so easily charged, and the negative so difficult to be proved, that the accusation should be clearly made out; for, if false, it deserves a punishment inferior only to that of the crime itself.

BUILDINGS. If a house new built, ex- ginning so to do, any church, chapel, house, ceeds the ancient foundation, whereby that is &c., or any building or erection used in carthe cause of hindering the lights or air of rying on any trade or manufacture, or any another house, action lies against the builder. Hob. 131. In London a man may place ladders or poles upon the ground, or against houses adjoining for building his own, but he may not break ground: and builders of houses ought to have licence from the mayor and aldermen, &c. for a board in the streets, which are not to be incumbered. Cit. Lib. 30. 146. In new building of London it was ordained, that the outsides of the buildings be of brick or stone, and the houses for the principal streets to be four stories high, having, in the front, balconies, &c. by stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3.

The laws for regulating of all buildings in the cities of London and Westminster, and other parishes and places in the weekly bills of mortality, the parishes of St. Mary-le-bone, and Paddington, St. Pancras, and St. Luke, at Chelsea, for preventing mischiefs by fire, are reduced into one act by stat. 14 G. 3. c. 78. The regulations of this law are very minute and technical. See tit. Fire.

The building act, 14 G. 3. c. 78., was amended by the 50 G. 3. c. 75. (local) which permits John's Patent Tessera to be used in the covering of houses and buildings within the places therein mentioned.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 44, if any person shall start or rip, cut, or break with intent to steal, any glass or woodwork belonging to any building, or any lead, iron, copper, brass or other metal, or any utensil or fixture whatever, made of metal or other material, fixed in or to any building, such offender shall be guilty of felony, and may be punished as in the case of simple larceny. And by § 14. persons breaking and entering any building, and stealing therein, such building being within the curtilage of a dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, but not being part thereof (for the purposes of burglary and house-breaking as described in the two former sections of the stat.), shall be guilty of felony, and may be transported for life, or imprisoned not excecding four years, and (if a male) whipped in addition to such imprisonment.

By 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 2. persons unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to any house, &c., or to any building or erection used in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof, are guilty of felony, and shall suffer death. By § 3. persons by force entering into any house, shop, building, or place, with intent to destroy any silk, woollen, linen, or cotton goods in the loom, or any machinery belonging to those manufacturers, are guilty of felony, and may be transported for life, or imprisoned not exceeding four years, and (if a male) whipped in addition to such imprisonment. By § 7. persons riotously and tumultuously assembling, and with force demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or bebranch thereof, or any staith building, or erection used in conducting the business of any mine, shall be guilty of felony, and shall suffer death.

BULL, bulla.] A brief or mandate of the pope or bishop of Rome, from the lead, or sometimes gold seal affixed thereto, which Mat. Paris, anno 1237, thus describes: In bulla domini papæ stat imago Pauli a dextris crucis in medio bullæ figurata et Petri a sinistris. These decrees of the pope are often mentioned in our statute, as 25 Ed. 3: 28 H. 8. cap. 16: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. and 13 Eliz. cap. 2. They were heretofore used, and of force, in this land: but by the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 16. it was enacted, that all bulls, briefs, and dispensations had or obtained from the bishop of Rome, should be void. And by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2. (see stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1.) if any person shall obtain from Rome any bull or writing, to absolve or reconcile such as forsake their due allegiance, or shall give or receive absolution by colour of such bull, or use or publish such bull, &c. it is high treason. By 7 Ann. c. 21. § 1, 2, 3, this extends to Scotland. See Rome, Papist.

BULL AND BOAR. By the custom of some places, a parson may be obliged to keep a bull and a boar for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves, pigs, &c. 1 Roll. Ab. 559: 4 Mod. 241: see tit. Cattle.

BULLIO SALIS. As much salt as is made at one wealing or boiling; a measure of salt supposed to be twelve gallons. Mon. Ang.

BULLION. Sec tits. Coin, Money. also Gold.

BULTEL. The bran or refuse of meal after dressed: also the bag wherein it is dressed is called a bulter, or rather boulter. The word is mentioned in the statute de assissa panis et servisiæ, anno 51 H. 3. Hence comes bulted or boulted bread, being the BUNDLES. A sort of records of the Chancery, lying in the office of the Rolls; in which are contained, the files or bills and answers, of hab. cor. cum causa; certiorari's; attachments, &c. scire facias's; certificates of statute-staple; extents and liberates; supersedeas's; bails on special pardons; bills from the Exchequer of the names of sheriffs; letters patent surrendered; and deeds cancelled; inquisitions; privy seals for grants; bills signed by the king; warrants of escheators; customers, &c.

BURGAGE TENURE. See tit. Tenures,

TENURE IN BURGAGE, is described by Glanvil (lib. 7. c. 3.) and is expressly said by Littleton, § 162. to be but tenure in socage: and lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements are held by a rent certain. Litt. § 162,

It is indeed only a kind of town-socage: as common socage, by which other lands are holden, is usually of a rural nature. A borough is usually distinguished from other towns by the right of sending members to parliament (see tit. Borough): and where the right of election is by burgage-tenure, that alone is a proof of the antiquity of the bo-Tenure in Burgage, or Burgage Tenure, therefore, is, where houses, or lands which were formerly the site of houses, in an ancient borough, are held of some lord in common socage by a certain established rent. 2 Comm. 82.

The free socage in which these tenements are held seems to be plainly a remnant of Saxon liberty: which may also account for the great variety of customs affecting many of these tenements so held in ancient burgage, the principal and most remarkable of which is, that called Borough-English. See that title.

Other special customs there are, in different burgage-tenures: as in some, that the wife shall be endowed of all her husband's tenements, and not of the third part only, as at common law. Litt. § 166. In others that a man might (previous to stat. H. 8.) dispose of his tenements by will. Litt. § 167. Though this power of disposal was allowable in the Saxon times—a pregnant proof that these liberties of socage tenure were fragments of Saxon liberty. 2 Comm. 84. By the Reform Act, 2 W. 4. c. 45, the right of voting in respect of burgage tenements in cities and towns being counties of themselves, is preserved in perpetuity; in respect of burgage tenements in boroughs, the right is preserved to the individual voter so long as he personally shall remain qualified as an elector-subject of course to regulation under the act.

BURGAGE HOLDING, in Scotch law, is the tenure by which royal boroughs hold of the sovereign. The service is watching and warding, and is done by the burgesses within the territory of the borough, whether expressed in the charter or not. Scotch Dict.

BURG. A small walled town, or place of privilege, &c. See Borough.

BURGBOTE, from burg, castellum, and bote, compensatio.] Is a tribute or contribution towards the building or repairing of castles, or walls of a borough or city: from which divers had exemption by the ancient charters of the Saxon kings. Rastal. burgbote significat quietantiam reparationis murorum, civitatis vel burgi. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47: Spelm. v. Burghbote.

BURGESSES, burgarii et burgenses.] Properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; but this name is usu-

it is where the king or other person is ally given to the magistrates of corporate towns

In Germany, and other countries, they confound burgess and citizen; but we distinguish them, as appears by the stat. 5 R. 2. c. 4. where the classes of the commonwealth are thus enumerated, count, baron, banneret, chivaleer de countee; citizein de citee; burgess de burgh. See Co. Lit. 80. Those are also called burgesses who serve in parliament for any borough or corporation. See tit. Parliament. Burgesses of our towns are called, in Domesday, the homines of the king, or of some other great man; but this only shows whose protection they were under, and is not any infringement of their civil liberty. BURGLARY, Burgi latrocinium; by our ancient law called hamesecken, as it is in Scotland to this day. 4 Comm. 233.] A felony at common law, in (1.) breaking and entering (2.) the mansion house of another, or the walls or gates of a walled town, or a church, (see Sacrilege,) (3.) in the night, (4.) to the intent to commit some felony within the same; whether the felonious intent be executed or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1. 10: 4 Comm. 224.

By § 11 of stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. it is enacted, "That every person convicted of burglary shall suffer death as a felon. And it is thereby declared that, if any person shall enter the dwelling-house of another with intent to commit felony, or, being in such dwellinghouse shall commit any felony, and shall in either case break out of the said dwellinghouse in the night time, such person shall be deemed guilty of burglary." By § 13. of the same stat. it is enacted, "That no building, although within the same curtilage with the dwelling-house, and occupied therewith, shall be deemed to be part of such dwelling-house for the purpose of burglary, unless there shall be a communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediately, or by means of covered and enclosed passage leading from the one to the other.

By stat. 7 G. 4. c. 64. § 28 a certain com- after having committed a felony in it. This pensation is allowed to persons active in apprehending offenders guilty of burglary; and by § 30. if any man be killed in endeavouring to apprehend such offender, such compensation may be paid to the wife or child, father or mother.

It seems the plainest method to consider the subject according to the four parts of the above definition; and (5.) to add something on the punishment of this offence.

1. There must be both a breaking and an entry to complete this offence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 3.

Every entrance into the house by a trespasser is not a breaking in this case, but there must be an actual breaking. As, if the door of a mansion-house stand open, and the thief enters, this is no breaking. So it is if the window of the house be open, and a thief, with a hook or other engine, draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, because there is no actual breaking of the house. But if the thief breaketh the glass of the window, and with a hook or other engine, draweth out some of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the house. 3 Inst. 64. But the following acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the casement, or breaking the glass window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched. 1 Hal. P. C. c. 552.

Having entered by a door which he found open, or having lain in the house by the owner's consent, unlatching a chamber-door, or coming down the chimney. 1 Hawk. P. C.

If thieves pretend business to get into a house by night, and thereupon the owner of the house opens his door, and they enter and rob his house, this is burglary. Kel. 42.

So if persons designing to rob a house, take lodgings in it, and then fall on the landlord and rob him; or where persons intending to rob a house, raise a hue and cry, and prevail with the constable to make a search in the house, and having got in by that means, with the owner's consent, bind the constable, and rob the inhabitants; in both these instances they are guilty of burglary, for these evasions rather increase the crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c.

Where a servant opened his lady's chamber, which was fastened by a spring lock, with a design against her honour, this was held burglary. East, P. C. 488.

If a person be within the house, and steal goods, and then open the house on the inside, and go out with the goods, this is burglary, though the thief did not break the house. Inst. 64. But this was not admitted to be law with any certainty; and therefore it was by stat. 12 A. st. 1. c. 7. created a burglary Vol. I.-36 statute is now repealed, but its provisions reenacted by stat. 7 & 8 G. 4. c. 29. noticed be-

Any the least entry, either with the whole, or with but part of the body, or with any instrument or weapon, will satisfy the word entered in an indictment for burglary: as if one do put his foot over the threshold, or his hand, or a hook, or pistol within a window, or turn the key of a door which is locked on the inside, or discharge a loaded gun into a house, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 7. But that the discharging the loaded gun is a sufficient entry seems very doubtful from what is said in Leach, 452. and East, P. C. 490.

Where it appeared that the prisoner had thrown up the sash of a window, and introduced between that and an inside shutter an instrument to force open the shutter, it was held that this did not constitute burglary, unless it appeared that the hand, or some part of it, was within the window. Rex v. Rust,

1 Ry. & M. 183.

Where a person raised the sash of a window, which was before partly open, so as to admit himself into a house, this was held not to be a breaking of the house. Rex v. Smith, Ry. & M. 178.

Breaking an outer window, and introducing the hand between the glass of the window and an inner shutter, is a sufficient breaking and entering. C. C. R. 341.

So breaking a window of a shop, and introducing the finger so far as that the fore part of the finger was seen on the shop side of the glass. C. C. R. 499.

Lifting up a large iron grating placed over a cellar, and opening a window in a passage leading from that cellar, is a sufficient break-

C. C. R. 355.

So pulling down a sash of a window, though it has no fastening, and is only kept in its place by the pulley-weight; and that although there is an outer shutter to the window, which is not put to. C. C. R. 451.

But where thieves had bored a hole through the door, with a centre-bit, and part of the chips were found in the inside of the house, yet as they had neither got in themselves, nor introduced a hand or instrument for the purpose of taking the property, the entry was ruled incomplete. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 7. in note.

When several come with a design to commit burglary, and one does it while the rest watch near the house, here his act is, by interpretation, the act of all of them. And, upon a like ground, if a servant confederating with a rogue, let him in to rob a house, it has been determined by all the judges, upon a special verdict, that it is burglary both in the servant and the thief. Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. i. 38. § 9. and n.

2. It is certainly a dangerous, if not an into break out of a house in the night time, curable fault to omit the word dwelling house in an indictment for burglary in a house, der the same roof also. Leach's Huwk. P. C. But it seems not necessary or proper, in an i. c. 38. § 16. in n. indictment for burglary in a church, which, by all the ancient authorities, is taken as a distinct burglary. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 10. and the authorities there cited.

If a man hath two houses, and resides, sometimes in one of the houses, and sometimes in the other, if the house he doth not inhabit is broken in by any person in the night, it is burglary. Poph. 52.

A chamber in an inn of court, &c. where one usually lodges, is a mansion-house; for every one hath a several property there. But a chamber where any person doth lodge as an inmate, cannot be called his mansion; though, if a burglary be committed in his lodgings, the indictment may lay the offence to be in the mansion-house of him that let them. Inst. 65: Kel. 83. If the owner of the house breaks into the rooms of his lodgers, and steals their goods, it cannot be burglary to break into his own house, but it is felony to steal their goods. Wood's Inst. 378. But see contra, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 13, 14, 15.

If the owner live under the same roof with the inmates, there must be a separate outer door, or the whole is the mansion of the owner: but if the owner inhabit no part of the house; or even if he occupy a shop, or a cellar in it, but do not sleep therein, it is the mansion of each lodger, although there be but one outer door. Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 15. in n. There being only one door, in common to all the inhabitants, makes no difference, where the owner does not sleep in any part of the house, for, in that case, each apartment is a separate mansion. Id. ib. § 14. n.

Chambers in inns of court, &c. have separate outward doors, which are the extremity of obstruction, and are enjoyed as separate property, as estates of inheritance for life, or during residence.-So a house divided into separate tenements, with a distinct outward door to each, will be separate houses. Id. ib. § 13. n.

Part of a house divided from the rest, having a door of its own to the street, is a mansion-house of him who hires it. Kel. 84.

To break and enter a shop, not parcel of the mansion-house, in which the shop-keeper never lodges, but only works or trades there in the day-time, is not burglary, but only larceny; but if he, or his servant, usually or often lodge in the shop at night, it is then a mansion-house, in which a burglary may be committed. 1 H. H. P. C. 557. 558.—But see stat. 13 G. 3. c. 38. respecting burglary in the work-shops of the plate-glass manufactory, which is made single felony, and punishable with transportation for seven years.-If the shop-keeper sleep in any part of the building, however distinct that part is from the shop, it may be alleged to be his mansion-

A lodger in an inn hath a special interest in his chamber, so that if he opens his chamber-door, and takes goods in the house, and goes away, it seems not to be burglary. And where A. enters into the house of B. in the night, by the doors open, and breaks open a chest, and steals goods, without breaking an inner door, it is no burglary by the common law, because the chest is no part of the house; though it was felony, ousted of clergy, by statute 3 W. & M. c. 9.; and if one break open a counter or cupboard, fixed to a house, it is burglary. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 554.

All out-buildings, as barns, stables, warehouses, &c. adjoining to a house, are looked upon as part thereof, and consequently burglary may be committed in them. And if the warehouse, &c. be parcel of the mansionhouse, and within the same, though not under the same roof, or contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein. But an out-house occupied with, but separated from, the dwellinghouse by an open passage, eight feet wide, and not within or connected by any fence, inclosing both, is not within the curtilage or homestall. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. 6 12. n.: 4 Comm. 225.

3. In the day-time there is no burglary.— As to what is reckoned night, and what day, for this purpose, anciently the day was accounted to begin only at sun-rising, and to end immediately upon sun-set; but the better opinion seems to be, that if there be day-light, or crepusculum, enough begun or left to discern a man's face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moon-light; the malignity of the offence not so properly arising from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night, when sleep has disarmed the owner, and rendered his castle defenceless. 4 Comm. 224: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1.

4. The breaking and entry must be with a felonious intent, otherwise it is only a trespass; and it is the same whether such intent be actually carried into execution, or only demonstrated by some attempt, of which the jury is to judge. And therefore such breaking and entry, with intent to commit a robbery, a murder, a rape, or any other felony, is burglary. Nor does it make any difference, whether the offence were felony at common law, or only created so by statute. 4 Comm. 227: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 18, 19.

One of the servants of the house opened his lady's chamber-door, which was fastened with a brass bolt, with design to commit a rape; and it was ruled to be burglary, and the defendant was convicted and transported. Stran-

481: Kel. 67.

A servant embezzled money intrusted to his care; left ten guineas in his trunk; quitted his master's service; returned; broke and entered the house in the night, and took away the ten house; provided the owner does not sleep un- guineas, and adjudged no burglary. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 18. n. Sed vide 1 Show.

5. Every man's house is considered as his castle, as well for defence against injury and violence, as for repose. 4 Co. 92.-To violate this security is considered of so atrocious a nature, that the alarmed inhabitant, whether he be an owner or a mere inmate (Cro. Car. 544), is by stat. 24. H. 8. c. 5. expressly permitted to repel the violence by the death of the assailants, without incurring the penalties even of excusable homicide.

The house wherein a woman lives apart from her husband, must be laid in an indictment for burglary to be the house of the husband, although he has never been in it. C. C. R. 491. And this although she may be living in a state of adultery. C. C. R. 517.

BURIALS. Formerly persons dying were to be buried in woollen on pain of 5l.; stat. 30. Car. 2. c. 1; but this provision is repealed by 54 G. 3. c. 108. 34 G. 3. c. 11. repeals the duty imposed by 23 G. 3. c. 67: 25 G. 3. c. 75. on the registry of burials, &c. See Re-

The burial of persons found felo de se, is, by stat. 4 G. 4. c. 52. directed to take place, without any marks of ignominy, privately in the parish church-yard, between the hours of nine and twelve at night, under the direction of the coroner.

The rector of a parish agreed verbally, in consideration of a sum of money, to allow one to erect a vault, and have the exclusive use thereof. The money was paid, and the vault constructed; but the rector subsequently caused the vault to be opened, and buried a corpse there. The grantee brought an action on the case for the disturbance. The action was held not to be maintainable, a rector having no power to grant the exclusive use of a vault. He may exercise a discretion in each particular instance, when application is made for leave to bury in the church. There must, as in the case of a pew, be either a faculty or a prescription to support such right. At all events, such right is not grantable by parol. Bryan v. Whistler, 8 B. & C. 188.

The court will not grant a mandamus to compel a rector to bury a parishioner in a vault, or in any particular part of a church-yard. 1 Barn. & Adol. 122. And a party has no right to be buried in an iron coffin without an increased fee being paid. 2 Hagg. C. R. 333: 3 Phill. R. 335.

But the word bursarii did not only signify the bursars of a convent or college; but formerly stipendiary scholars were called by the name of bursarii, as they lived on the burse or fund, or public stock of the University. BUTTONS. By stat. 10 W. 3. c. 2. no person shall make, sell, or set on, any buttons law: guilds and fraternities of trades, by letmade of wood only, and turned in imitation of other buttons, under penalty of 40s. a dozen. A shank of wire being added to the button makes no difference. Ld. Raym. 712.

By the said stat. W. 3. no person shall make, sell, or set on, buttons made of cloth, or other stuffs of which clothes are usually made, on penalty of 40s.

By stat. 8 Ann. c. 6. no taylor, or other person, shall make, sell, set on, use, or bind, on any clothes, any buttons or button holes of cloth, &c. on pain of 5l. a dozen .- By this act no power is given to make distress.

Stat. 4 G. 1. c. 7. is said in Burn's Justice (title Buttons) to be a loose, injudicious, ungrammatical act, and which, by its garb may seem to have been drawn up by taylors, or button-makers. This act imposes (indistinctly enough) 40s. a dozen on all such buttons and button holes, with an exception of velvet; it seems levelled against the taylors only; but clothes with such buttons and button holes exposed to sale, are to be forfeited and seized.

By stat. 7 G. 1. st. 1. c. 12. no person shall use, or wear, on any clothes (velvet excepted) any such buttons or button holes, on pain of 40s. a dozen, half to the witness on whose oath they are convicted; an application of the penalty deservedly reprobated as nearly singular, and on a principle not reconcileable to the usual rules of evidence.—This statute is also incorrect, particularly in making no disposal of a moiety of the penalty, in case of conviction or confession by the party.

These acts are seldom enforced, and do not seem very consistent with general policy. See title Taylors. 36 G. 3. c. 60, regulates the making and vending of mental buttons.

BY-LAWS, bilagines, from the Sax. by, pagus, civitas, and lagen, lex, i. c. the laws of erties. Nuelm. voce Billagines. Or perhaps laws made obiter, or by the by.] Certain orders and constitutions of corporations, for the governing of their members: of courts-leet and courts-baron; commoners or inhabitants in vills, &c. made by common assent, for the good of those that made them, in particular cases, whereunto the public law doth not extend; so that they lay restrictions on the parties, not imposed by the common or statute ters patent of incorporation, may likewise make by-lars, for the better regulation of trade among themselves, or with others. Kitch. 45, 72: 6 Rep. 63.

In Scotland those laws are called laws of birlaw, or burlaw, which are made by neighbours elected by common consent in the birlaw-courts, wherein knowledge is taken of complaints betwixt neighbour and neighbour; which men so chosen are judges and arbitrators, and styled birlaw-men. And birlaws, according to Skene, are leges rusticorum, laws made by husbandmen, or townships, concerning neighbourhood amongst them. Skene, p. 33.

The power of making by-laws, being included in the very act of incorporating a corporation; and most by-laws being made by corporations, it seems more regular to consider the nature and effect of them under that See tit. Corporations.

In this place therefore we shall chiefly consider, I, who may make by-laws; and 2, the general requisites of them.

1. The inhabitants of a town, without any custom, may make ordinances or by-laws, for repairing of a church, or highway, or any such thing, which is for the general good of the public; and in such cases, the greater part shall bind all: though if it be for their own private profit, as for the well ordering of their common, or the like, they cannot make hy-laws without a custom to warrant it; and if there be a custom, the greatest part shall not bind the rest in these cases, unless it be warranted by custom. 5 Rep. 63 .- A custom to make a hy-law, may be alleged in an ancient city or borough.-So in an upland town, which is neither city nor borough. 1 Inst. 110. b: Cro. Car. 488: Hob. 212.

The free-holders in a court-leet may make hy-laws relating to the public good, which shall bind every one within the leet. 2 Danv. 457; Mo. 579. 584. And a court-baron may make by-laws, by custom, and add a penalty for the | if it be unreasonable for any particular, shall non-performance of them .- So, by custom, the tenants of a manor may make by-laws, for the good order of the tenants. 1 Roll. Ab. 366. l. 35: Mo. 75: Hob. 212 .- So may the homage. 1 Roll. Ab.: Dy. 322. (a.) But not without a custom. Sav. 74.—And a custom that the steward with the consent of the homage may make them, is not good. 3 Lev. 49.

2. All by-laws are to be reasonable; and ought to be for the common benefit, and not private advantage of any particular persons; and must be consonant to the public laws and statutes, as subordinate to them. And by stat. 19 H. 7. c. 7. by-laws made by corporations are to be approved by the lord chancellor, or chief justices, &c. on pain of 40l.

A by-law may be reasonable, though the penalty be to be paid to those who make the by-law. 1 Salk. 397. And generally it shall be reasonable, if it be for the public good of Carth. 482. the corporation.

By-laws made in restraint of trade are not favoured, but the distinction between such as are made to restrain, and those made to regulate trade seems very nice. See tit. Corporation; and Bac. Ab. By-laws. (B.)-Under a general power to make by-laws, a by-law cannot be made to restrain trade. 1 Burr. 12.—Therefore, a by-law that no person not being free of the pewterer's company shall exercise the trade of a pewterer, within the city of London, is void without proof of a special custom to support it. Chamberlain of London v. Compton, 7 Dow. & Ry. 597: and see Clark v. Le Cren, 9 Barn. & C. 52. The custom must correspond with the by-law. See 1 B. & Adol. 92.

The common council of London have, by custom, a right to make ordinances for regulating carts worked within the city for hire, restraining their number, licensing them, and regulating the manner in which they shall be licensed. A by-law was made in common council that 420 of such carts, and no more, should, by the governors of Christ's Hospital, be licensed to work within the city. Held that such by-law was supported by the custom, and that the discretionary power of licensing was rightly and ex necessitate delegated by the common council to a smaller body. 2 Barn. & Adol. 465.

A custom that no foreign tradesman shall use or exercise a trade in a town, &c. will warrant that which a grant cannot do; and where custom has restrained, a by-law may be made that upon composition foreigners may exercise a trade. Carter, 120: see 4

Burr. 1951.

So by-laws may regulate, but not totally restrain a private right, as in cases of common, &c. See Com. Dig. title By-law, (B. 2.) and

(C. 4.)

If a by-law impose a charge without any apparent benefit to the party, it will be void. R. Raym. 328.—And a by-law being entire, Claus. 38 H. 3.

be void for the whole. 2 Vent. 183.

A by-law imposing a fine on every master, warden, or assistant of a company who shall not attend all courts to be holden, is valid. 7 Barn. & C. 838.

A by-law cannot impose an oath, nor impower any person to administer it. Stra. 536.

Where by-laws are good, notice of them is not necessary; because they are presumed for the better government and benefit of all persons living in those particular limits where made, and therefore all persons therein are bound to take notice of them. 1 Lutw. 404: Cro. Car. 498: 5 Mod. 442: Salk. 142: Carth. 484.

If a by-law does not mention how the penalty shall be recovered, debt lies for it. Roll. Ab. 366. l. 48: see 5 Co. 64: Hob. 279. -Or action on the case on assumpsit. 2 Lev. 252.—It seems that a by-law to levy the penalty by distress, sale, or imprisonment, is void unless by custom. See Com. Dig. title By-law, (D. 2.) (E. 1, 2.) See 2 Maul. & S.

The Court of King's Bench will not enter into a question on the validity of a by-law, on the return of a hab. cor. eum causa, from any corporation except the city of London, where it always doth; but the plaintiff must de-clare there, and the defendant may demur if he has objections to the by-law. 2 Burr.

CALENDS, calenda.] Among the Romans was the first day of every month, being spoken of it by itself, or the very day of the new moon, which usually happen together; and if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the last day of the foregoing month; as pridie calend. Septemb. is the last day of August. If any number be placed with it, it signifies that day in the former month, which comes so much before the month named; as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September: for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the sixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends

A ing, and be numbered backwards from the first day of the said following months. Hopton's Concord, p. 69. In the dates of deeds, the day of the month, by nones, ides, or ead calends, is sufficient. 2 Inst. 675: see Ides.

CANDLES AND CHANDLERS. If any wax-chandlers mix with their wares any thing deceitfully, &c. the candles shall be forfeited. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8. Tallow-chandlers and wax-chandlers are by stat. 24 G. 3. st. 2. c. 41. to take out annual licences. And by stat. 25 G. 3. c. 74. makers of candles shall be only such persons as are rated to the parish rates. These duties of excise on candles, and the various regulations to enforce them, form one of the numerous branches of the excise laws, and depend on a variety of statutes. See 27 G. 3. c. 13: 32 G. 3. c. 7. &c., and a provision in one law is not much known, though generally interesting, viz. "during the continuance of the duties upon candles, no person shall use in the inside of his house any lamp, wherein any oil or fat (other than oil made of fish within Great Britain) shall be burned for giving light, on pain of 40s." Stat. 8 Ann. c. 9. § 18. makers of candles are not to use meltinghouses without making a true entry, on pain of 100l. and to give notice of making candles to the excise officer for the duties, and of the number, &c. or shall forfeit 50l. CANDLEMAS-DAY. The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, being the second day of February, instituted in memory and honour of the purification of the virgin in the temple of Jerusalem, and the presentation of our blessed Lord. It is called Candlemas, or a Mass of candles, because before mass was said that day, the Romish Church consecrated and set apart, for sacred use, candles for the whole year, and made a brance of the divine light, wherewith our Saviour illuminated the whole church at his presentation in the temple.

This festival is no day in court, for the judges sit not; and it is the grand day in that term of all the inns of court, whereon the judges anciently observed many ceremonies, and the societies seemed to vie with each other in sumptuous entertainments, accompanied with music, and almost all kinds

CANON. A law or ordinance of the church, from the Greek word, canon, a rule.

THE CANON LAW consists partly of certain rules taken out of the Scripture; partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church; partly of the ordinance of the general and provincial councils; and partly of the decrees of the popes in former ages. And it is contained in two principal parts, the decrees and the decretals: the decrees are ecclesiastical constitutions made by the pope and cardinals, and were first gathered by Ivobishop of Carnat, who lived about the year 1114, but afterwards perfected by Gratian, a Benedictine monk, in the year 1149, and allowed by Pope Eugenius to be read in schools and alleged for law. They are the most ancient, as having their beginning from the time of Constantine the Great, the first Christian emperor of Rome.

The decretals are canonical epistles written by the pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the suit of one or more persons for the ordering and determining of some matter of controversy, and have the authority of a law; and of these there are three volumes, the first whereof was compiled by Raymundus Barcinius, chaplain to Gregory the Ninth, and at his command, about the year 1231. The second volume is the work of Boniface the Eighth, collected in the year 1298. And the third volume, called the Clementines, was made by Pope Clement the Fifth, and published by him in the council of Vienna, about the year 1308. And to these may be added some novel constitutions of John the Twenty-second, and some other bishops of Rome.

As the decrees set out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities and decrees of ecclesiastical persons with their | England," not contrary to the statutes of the manner of election, ordination, &c. so the decretals contain the law to be used in the ecclesiastical courts; and the first title in every of them is the title of the Blessed Trinity, and of the Catholic faith, which is followed 16, not being noted), perhaps because its conwith constitutions and customs, judgments and determinations, in such matters and causes, as are liable to ecclesiastical cognizance, the lives and conversation of the clergy, of matrimony and divorces, inquisition of criminal matters, purgation, penance, excommunication, &c. But some of the titles of the canon law are now out of use, and belong to the common law; and others are introduced, such as trials of wills, bastardy, defamation, &c.

Trials of tithes were anciently in all cases had by the ecclesiastical law; though at this time this law only takes place in some particular cases.

At the dawn of the Reformation, it was enacted by stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. (revived and confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 1.) that a review should be had of the canon law; and that until such review should be made, all canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial, being then already made and not repugnant to the law of the land or the king's prerogative, should continue to be used and exercised; and as no such review has yet been perfected, upon this statute now depends the authority of the canon law in England. 1 Comm. 83. Introd. § 3.

A modern editor of the Commentaries observes, that it is questionable whether this is correctly stated. Sections 2 and 7 of the stat. 29 H. S. appear to relate only to such canons, constitutions, and ordinances, as had been theretofore made by the clergy of this realm; § 2. empowered the king to appoint thirty-two commissioners, to view, search and examine the said canons, &c.; and § 7. provides that such canons, &c. "being already made," which be not contrariant or repugnant to the laws, statutes, and customs of this realm, nor to the hurt of the king's prerogative, "shall now still be used and executed as they were before the making of this act, until such time as they be viewed, searched, or otherwise ordereded and determined" by the said thirtytwo persons. It does not appear, therefore, that this statute authorised even the temporary use of the Roman ecclesiastical law. By stat. 35 H. 8. c. 16. (not entered on the statute-roll in Chancery, printed in the authentic edition of the statutes of the realm from the original act in the Parliament Office), the provisions of the act 25 H. 8. were re-enacted to be executed during the king's life, and the commissioners were farther empowered to set in order and to establish "all such laws ecclesiastical as shall be thought convenient to be used and set forth:" and till their op doing, all canons, &c. "or other ecclesiastical laws or jurisdiction spiritual as be yet accustomed in the church of courts, see this Dict. tit. Courts. The follow-realm or the king's prerogative, should continue in force and use.

By stat. 1 and 2 P. & M. c. 8. the act 25 H. 8. c. 19. was repealed (the act 35 H. 8. c. tinuance was limited to the king's life. But in a general clause of the act I and 2 P. & M. c. 8 & 8. (record edition above quoted), all clauses of every other act made in the 20th of H. 8. against the supreme authority of the pope, or see of Rome, or containing any other matter of the same effect only as is repealed in any of the statutes aforesaid, "shall be ntterly void, frustrate, and of none effect."

By stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1. several acts of H.8. as to ecclesiastical matters, among which the act 25 H. 8 c. 19. is specified, are revived. The act 35 H. 8. c. 16. is not specified; but the reviving clause above referred to especially provides, that the branches, sentences, and words of all the acts so revived shall extend to the queen, "her heirs and successors."

In the case of Middleton v. Croft, Str. 1060. the act 35 H. 8. c. 16. is considered as a subsisting statute.

As for the canons enacted by the clergy under Jac. 1. A. D. 1603, and never confirmed in parliament, it has been solemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the constitution, that where they are not merely declaratory of the ancient canon law, but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity, whatever regard the clergy may think proper to pay them. Stra. 1057.

Lord Hardwicke cites the opinion of Lord Holt, and declares it is not denied by any one, that is very plain all the clergy are bound by the canons, confirmed by the king only; but they must be confirmed by the parliament to bind the laity. 2 Atk. 605. Hence if the archbishop of Canterbury grants a dispensation to hold two livings distinct from each other more than thirty miles, no advantage can be taken of it by lapse, or otherwise, in the temporal courts; for the restriction to thirty miles was introduced by a canon made since the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 2. Black. Rep. 968.

There are four species of courts in which the canon laws (and the civil laws also, see tit. Civil Laws) are permitted, under different restrictions, to be used. 1. The courts of the archbishops and bishops, and their derivative officers; usually called in our law courts Christian or the Ecclesiastical Courts. 2. The military courts, or Courts of Chivalry. 3. The Courts of Admirality. 4. The Courts of the two Universities. In all the reception of those laws in general, and the different degrees of that reception are grounded entirely upon custom, corroborated, as to the Universities by act of parliament, ratifying those charters which confirm their customary laws. 1 Comm.

ing particulars relate to them all, and to this | word is used stat. 28 H. S. c. 3. See Mon. Angl.

1. The courts of common law have the superintendency over these courts; to keep them within their jurisdictions, to determine wherein they exceed them, to restrain and prohibit such excess; and in case of contumacy, to punish the officer who executes, and in some cases the judge who enforces the sentence so declared to be illegal. See tits. Jurisdiction, Prohibition.

2. The common law has reserved to itself the exposition of all such statutes as concern either the extent of these courts, or the matters depending before them; and therefore, if the courts either refuse to allow those acts of parliament, or will expound them in any other sense than what the law puts on them, the courts at Westminster will grant prohibitions to restrain and controul them. See tit Stat-

3. An appeal lies from all these courts to the king in the last resort; which proves that the jurisdiction exercised in them is derived from the crown of England, and not from any foreign potentate, or intrinsic authority of their own. See stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

From these three strong marks and ensigns of superiority, it appears beyond a doubt that the canon (and civil) laws, though admitted in some cases by custom in some courts, are only subordinate, et leges sub gravior lege; and that thus admitted, restrained, new-modelled, and amended, they are by no means a distinct independent species of laws, but inferior branches of the customary or unwritten laws of England, properly called the King's ecclesiastical, military, maritime, or academical laws. 1 Comm. 84.

CANON RELIGIOSORUM. wherein the religious of convents had a fair transcript of the rules of their order, which were frequently held among them as their local statutes; and this book was therefore called Regula and Canon. The public books of the religious were the four following. 1. Missale, which contained all their offices of devotion. 2. Martyrologium, a register of their peculiar saints and martyrs, with the place and time of passion. 3. Canon or Regula, the institutions and rules of their order. 4. CAPACITY, capacitas.] An ability, or fitness to receive: and in law it is where a man, or body politic, is able to give or take lands, or other things, or to sue actions. Our law allows the king two capacities, a natural and a politic; in the first, he may purchase lands to him and his heirs; in the latter, to him and his successors. An alien born hath sufficient capacity to sue in any personal action, and is capable of personal estate; but he is not capable of lands of inheritance. See title Alien. Persons attainted of treason or felony, idiots, lunatics, infants, feme coverts without their husbands, &c. are not capable to make any deed of gift, grant, or conveyance, unless it be in some special cases. CAPE, Lat. A writ judicial, touching plea of lands or tenements; so termed, as most writs are of that word in it which carries the chief intention or end thereof: and this writ is divided into cape magnum and cape parvum, both of which concern things immoveable. Terms de Ley.

This, and the three following, are now abolished, with real actions. See Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

CAPE MAGNUM, or the grand cape. A writ that lies before appearance to summon the tenant to answer the default, and also over to the demandant: and in the Old Nat. Brev. it is defined to be, where a man hath brought a pracipe quod reddat of a thing touching plea of land, and the tenant makes default at the day to him given in the original writ, then this writ shall go for the king to take the land into his hands; and if the tenant come not at the day given him thereby, he loseth his land, &c. See Reg. Jud. fol. 1: Bract. lib. 3. tract. 3. c. 1.

CAPE PARVUM, or petit cape. Where the tenant is summoned in plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded; if at the day given him he prays the view, and having it granted makes default, then this writ shall issue for the king, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 162. The difference between the grand cape and petit cape is, that the grand cape is awarded upon the tenant's not appearing or demanding the view in such real actions, where the original writ does not mention the particulars demanded; and the petit cape is after appearance or view granted: and whereas the grand cape summons tenant to answer for the default, and likewise over to the demandant, petit cape summons the tenant to answer the default only; and therefore it is called peti cape; though some it hath its name, not because it is of small force, but by reason it consists of few words. CAPIAS. A writ or process formerly of two sorts; one whereof in the court of C. P. is called capias ad respondendum, before judgment, where an original is sued out, &c. to take the defendant and make him answer the plaintiff: and the other a writ of execution, after judgment, being of divers kinds, as capias ad satisfaciendum, capias utlagatum, &c. But since the Act for Uniformity of Process, 2 W. 4. c. 39., which renders the process of all courts alike, there is only one writ of capias used as mesne process, which is applicable where the defendant is to be held to bail

"In all personal actions, where it is intended to arrest and hold any person to special bail, who may not be in the custody of the marshal of the Marshalsea, of the Court of King's Bench, or of the warden of the Fleet prison, the process is required, by the fourth section of the act, to be by writ of capias, according to the form contained in the schedule, and marked No. 4." 2 W. 4. c. 39. § 4.

The writ is directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the defendant resides; or in the cinque ports, to the constable of Dover castle; or in Berwick, to the mayor and bailiffs of Berwick-upon-Tweed; commanding the sheriff, or other officer, to whom it is directed, that he omit not by reason of any liberty in his bailiwick, but that he enter the same, and take the defendant (stating the county and place of his residence, or supposed residence,) if he shall be found in his bailiwick, and him safely keep, until he shall have given the said sheriff, &c. bail, or made deposit with him, according to law, in an action on promises (or of debt, &c.), at the suit of the plaintiff, or until the defendant shall, by other lawful means, be discharged from his custody; and that, on execution thereof, the said sheriff do deliver a copy thereof to the order to give effect to the last-mentioned prodefendant; and requiring the defendant to execution thereof on him, inclusive of the day of such execution, he shall cause special bail to be put in for him, in the court where the action is brought, to the said action: and that in default of his so doing, such proceedings may be had and taken, as are mentioned in the warning thereunder written, and indorsed thereon. And farther commanding the said sheriff, &c. that immediately after the execution thereof, he do return the writ to the said court together with the manner in which he shall have executed the same. and the day of the execution thereof; or that, if the same shall remain unexecuted, then that he do so return the same at the expiration of four calendar months from the date thereof, or sooner if he should be thereto required, by order of the said court, or by any

The writ of capias, as well as the distringas, into the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, is required by a general rule of all the courts, to be directed to the chancellor of the county palatine of Lancaster, or his deputy, or to the bishop of Durham or his chancellor; and commands the former, that by his writ under the seal of the said county palatine, to be duly made and directed to the sheriff of the said county palatine, he command the said sheriff (or if in Durham, that the bishop, by his writ, under the seal of his bishoprick, to be duly made and directed to the sheriff of the county of Durham, cause the said sheriff to be commanded), that he omit not by reason of any liberty in his bailiwick, but that he enter the same and take the defendant, &cc. (as in common cases): and that he farther command him, that on execution thereof, he do deliver a copy thereof to the said defendant and that the said writ do require the said defendant to take notice, &c.; and that he farther command the said sheriff, that immediately after the execution thereof, he do return that writ, &c. To the writ of capias, a memorandum, warning, and indorsements, are required to be subscribed or indorsed. See Tidd on the Act for Uniformity of Process. And so many copies thereof, together with every memorandum or notice subscribed thereto, and all indorsements thereon, as there may be persons intended to be arrested thereon, or served therewith, are required to be delivered therewith to the sheriff, or other officer or person to whom the same may be directed, or who may have the execution and return thereof; and who shall, upon or forthwith after the execution of such process, cause one such copy to be delivered to every person upon whom such process shall be executed by him, whether by service or arrest: and shall indorse on such writ the true day of the execution thereof, whether by service or arrest. In vision, there is a general rule of all the courts, CAPIAS. 9K7 that "the sheriff or other officer or person to tion he must remain in custody till he does. whom any writ of capias shall be directed, or who shall have the execution and return thereof, shall, within six days at the least, after the execution thereof, whether by service or arrest, indorse on such writ the true day of the execution thereof; and in default thereof shall be liable, in a summary way, to make such compensation for any damage which may result from his neglect, as the court or a judge shall direct. Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the plaintiff, or his attorney, to order the sheriff or other officer or person to whom the writ shall be directed. to arrest one or more only of the defendants therein named, and to serve a copy thereof on one or more of the others; which order shall be duly obeyed by such sheriff, or other officer or person; and such service shall be of the same force and effect as the service of the writ of summons hereinbefore mentioned, and no other. See 2 W. 4. c. 39: Tidd, ubi supra. See farther tits. Arrest, Bail, Process, Sheriff, Outlawry.

A CAPIAS is also in use in criminal cases .-The proper process on an indictment for any petty misdemeanor, or on a penal statute, is a writ of venire facias, which is in the nature of a summons to cause the party to appear. And if by the return to such venire, it appears that the party hath lands in the county whereby he may be distrained, then a distress infinite shall be issued from time to time till he appears. But if the sheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then upon his non-appearance a writ of capias shall issue, which commands the sheriff to take his body, and have him at the next assises; and if he cannot be taken upon the first capias, an alias and a pluries shall issue. But on indictments for treason or felony, a capias is the first process; and for treason or homicide, only one shall be allowed to issue, or two in the case of other felonies, by stat. 25 E. 3. c. 14; though the usage is to issue only one in any felony; the provisions of this statute being in most cases found impracticable. 2 H. P. C. 195. And so in the case of misdemeanors, it is now the usual practice for any judge of the court of K. B. upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. But in this as in civil cases, if he absconds, and it is thought proper to pursue him to an outlawry, a greater exactness is necessary. 4 Comm. . 318. See titles Arrest, Outlawry.

CAPIAS AD SATISFACIENDUM (shortly termed a CA. SA.) A judicial writ of execution which issues out on the record of a judgment, where there is a recovery in the courts at Westmin. ster, of debt, damages, &c. And by this writ the sheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him safely to keep, so that he have his body in court at the return of the writ, to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. Vide 1 Lill. Abr.

When the body is taken upon a ca. sa. and the writ is returned and filed, it is an absolute and perfect execution of the highest nature against the defendant, and no other execution can be afterwards had against his lands or goods; except where a person dies in execution; then his lands and goods are liable to satisfy the judgment, by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. See Roll. Abr. 904.

Properly speaking this writ cannot be sued out against any but such as were liable to be taken upon the capias mentioned in the preceding article. 3 Rep. 12: Mo. 767. The intent of it is to imprison the body of the debtor, till satisfaction be made for the debt, costs, and damages: this writ therefore doth not lie against any privileged persons, peers, or members of parliament; nor against executors or administrators; (except on a devastavit returned by the sheriff, 1 Lill. 250.) nor against such other persons as could not be originally held to bail, nor against parsons for penalties for non-residence, while they hold a benefice out of which they can be levied in three years by sequestration. 57 G. 3. c. 99.

This writ may be sued out (as may all other executory process) for costs, against a plaintiff as well as a defendant, where judgment is had against him.

In case two persons are bound jointly and severally, and prosecuted in two courts, whereupon the plaintiff had judgment, and execution by ca. sa. against one of them; if he after have an elegit against the other, and his lands and goods are delivered upon it, then he that is in prison shall have audita querela. Mob. 2. 57. Where one taken on a ca. sa. escapes from the sheriff, and no return is made of the writ, nor any record of the award of the capias; the plaintiff may bring a scire fac. against him, and on that what execution he will. Roll. 904. And if the defendant rescue himself, the plaintiff shall have a new capias, the first writ not being returned. Ib. 901.

If a defendant cannot be taken upon a ca. sa. in the county where the action is laid, there may issue a testatum ca. sa. into another county; and so of the other writs. See title are clearly explained.

CAPIAS UTLAGATUM is a writ that lies against a person who is outlawed in any action, by which the sheriff is commanded to apprehend the body of the party outlawed, for not appearing upon the exigent, and keep him in safe custody till the day of return, and then present him to the court, there to be dealt with for his contempt; who, in the Common Pleas, was in former times to be committed to the Fleet, there to remain till he had sued out the king's pardon, and appeared to the action. 249. And if he does not then make satisfac- And by a special capias utlagatum (against the body, lands, and goods in the same writ) the king by knight's service, and not in cathe sheriff is commanded to seize all the defendant's lands, goods, and chattels, for the contempt to the king; and the plaintiff (after an inquisition taken thereon, and returned into the Exchequer) may have the lands extended, and a grant of the goods, &c. whereby to compel the defendant to appear; which when he doth, if the reverse be outlawry, the same shall be restored to him. Old Nat. Br. 154. When a person is taken upon a capias utlagatum, the sheriff is to take an attorney's engagement to appear for him, where special bail is not required; and his bond with sureties to appear, where it is required. Stat. 4 and 5 W. & M. c. 18. See Outlawry.

CAPIAS PRO FINE. Anciently, when judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff, in any action in the king's courts, it was considered that the plaintiff be arrested for his wilful delay of justice, or capiatur be taken till he paid a fine to the king, considering it as a public misdemeanor coupled with the private injury. But now in cases of trespass, ejectment, assault, and false imprisonment, it is provided by stat. 5 and 6 W. & M. c. 12. that no writ of capias shall issue for the fine, nor any fine be paid: but the plaintiff shall pay 6s. 8d. to the proper officer, and be allowed it against the defendant among his other costs. See tit. Judgment: also tit. Fines for Offences.

CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM. A writ lying (where a distress taken is driven out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot make deliverance in replevin) commanding the sheriff to take as many beasts of the distrainer, &c. Reg. Orig. 82. 83. See tits, Distress, Replevin, Withernam.

CAPITA, Distribution per.] i. e. to every man an equal share of personal estate, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis. See tit. Executor, V. 8. CAPITA, Succession per.] Where the claimants are next in degree to the ancestor, in their own right, and not by right of representation. See tit. Descent.

CAPITAL FELONIES. By stat. 4 G. 4. c. 28. the court before whom any offender may be capitally convicted, may in all cases (except murder) abstain from pronouncing sentence of death, and may instead thereof order sentence of death to be recorded against such offender. See Felony.

CAPITE, from caput, i. e. Rex, unde tenere in capite, est tenere de rege, omnium terrarum capite.] TENURE IN CAPITE was an ancient tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately as of the crown, whether by knight's service, or in socage. This tenure was likewise called tenure holding of the person of the king: and a person might hold of the king, and not in capite; that is, not immediately of the crown, but by means of some honour, castle, or manor belonging to it.

pite; because it might be held of some honour in the king's hands descended to him from his ancestors, and not immediately of the king, as of his crown. Kitch. 120: Dyer. 44: F. N. B. 5.

The very ancient tenure in capite was of two sorts; the one principal and general, and the other special or subaltern; the principal and general was of the king, as caput regni, et caput generalissimum omnium feodorum, the fountain whence all feuds and tenures have their main original: the special was of a particular subject, as caput feudi, seu tersa illius, so called from his being the first that granted the land in such manner of tenure: from whence he was stiled capitalus dominus, &c. But tenure in capite is now abolished; and by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. all tenures are turned into free and common socage; so that tenures hereafter to be created by the king are to be in common socage only; and not by capite, knight's service, &cc. Blount. See tit. Tenures.

CAPITILITIUM. Poll-money. Dict.

CAPITITICM. A covering for the head. It is mentioned in the stat. 1 H. 4. and other old statutes, which prescribe what dresses shall be worn by all degrees of persons.

CAPITULI AGRI. The head-lands, lands that lie at the head or upper end of the lands or furrows. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 137.

CAPITULA RURALIA. Assemblies, or chapters held by rural deans and parochial clergy within the precinct of every distinct deancry; which at first were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and more solemnly once a quarter. Cowel.

CAPTAIN, capitaneus.] One that leadeth or hath the command of a company of soldiers: and is either a general, as he that hath the governance of the whole army; or special, as he that leads but one band. There is also another sort of captains, qui urbium præfecti sunt, &c. Blount.

CAPTION, captio.] That part of a legal instrument, as a commission, indictment, &c. which shows where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found, or executed. Thus when a commission is executed, the commissioners subscribe their names to a certificate, declaring when and where the commission was executed. These kinds of captions relate chiefly to business of three kinds, i. e. to commissions to take fines of lands, to take answers in chancery, and depositions of witnesses: on the taking of a fine it is thus:-Taken and acknowledged the --- day of, &c. at, &c. The word caption is also used (rather vulgarly) for an arrest. See tit. Indictment.

CAPTIVES. An act was made for relief of captives, taken by Turkish, Moorish, and other pirates, and to prevent taking of others in time to come. Stat. 16 and 17 Car. 2. c.

CARRAT. A weight of four grains in diamonds, &c. And this word it is said was formerly used for any weight or burden.

CARRETA. A carriage, cart, or wain load; a Careta fæni is used in an old charter for a load of hay. Kennet's Gloss.

CARRELS. Closets, or apartments for privacy and retirement.—Three pews or carrels, where every one of the old monks, after they had dined, did resort, and there study. Davies Mon. of Durham, p. 31.

CARRICK, or CARRACK, carrucha.] ship of great burden so called of the Italian word carico or carco, which signifies a burden or charge: it is mentioned in the statute 2 R. 2. c. 4. They were not only used in trade, but also in war. See Walsingh. in Hen. 5. fol. 394.

CARRIER. A person that carries goods for others for his hire.

- I. Their Liability under stat. 1 W. 4. c.
- II. Who are to be considered as Carriers: and generally how chargeable in other Cases.
- III. For what Defaults answerable; and the Exceptions in their favour in such Cases.
- IV. What Circumstances must in such Cases concur to charge them.
- I. Their Liability under stat. 1 W. 4. c. 68.—The act 1 W. 4. c. 63. " for protection of mail coach-contractors, stage-coach proprietors, and other common carriers, against loss of parcels, the value of which shall not be declared by the owners," has put an end, in many instances, to the controverted questions on this branch of law. But it may yet be necessary to recur to the general principles and determinations on cases arising previously to that act, as operating on future cases not comprehended within its operation.

The act provides that such carriers shall not be liable for any loss or injury to any parcel containing money, or gold, or silver, or plate, jewellery, watches, trinkets, Bank notes, order or securities for money, stamps, maps, deeds, pietures, engravings, glass, china, silk, furs, or lace, carried or sent with or without any passenger, exceeding 10l. value; unless the value be declared, and an increased rate of carriage paid to the person receiving the parcels for the carrier. § 1. Notice of amount of such charge shall be put up in the carrier's warehouse; by which notice the party sending the parcel shall be bound. § 2. Receipts shall be given by the carrier, who, on needect or plied. Cro. Jac. 262. So if a man who is refusal of notice receipt shall remain liable as at common law, and shall refund the increased charge. § 3. Carriers shall not be exempted from any liability at common law, as to any goods, except under regulations of this act. § 4. Any one proprietor or carrier is rendered personally liable § 5. Act shall not affect special contracts. § 6. Persons receiving the value of things lost shall also receive back the extra charges for carriage. § 7. The act shall not protect any felonious taking. § 8. Carriers shall not be concluded by the declared value, but the real value shall be proved in case of loss. § 9. In all actions against carriers for loss, money may be paid into court § 10.

II. Who are to be considered as Carriers, and generally how chargeable.-All persons carrying goods for hire, as masters and owners of ships, lightermen, stage-coachmen, (but not hackney coachmen in London), and the like, come under the denomination of common carriers; and are chargeable on the general custom of the realm for their faults or miscarriages. See 1 Com. Rep. 25: Bull. N. P. 70.—And as to the duty and engagement of a carrier, see tit. Bailment, 5. and V.

In an action on the case upon the custom of the realm against the defendant, master of a stage coach, the plaintiff set forth, that he took a place in the coach for such a town, and that in the journey the defendant, by negligence, lost the plaintiff's trunk; upon Not guilty pleaded, the evidence was, that the plaintiff gave the trunk to the man who drove the coach, who promised to take care of it, but lost it; and the question was, whether the master was chargeable; and adjudged that he was not, unless the master takes a price for the carriage of the goods as well as for the carriage of the person, and then he is within the custom as a carrier; that a master is not chargeable for the acts of his servant but when they are done in execution of the authority given by the master; then the act of the servant is the act of the master. 1 Salk. 282. But by the custom and usages of stages, every passenger pays for the carriage of goods above a certain weight; and there the coachman shall be charged for the loss of goods beyond such weight. 1 Com. Rep. 25.

If a common carrier loses goods he is intrusted to carry, a special action on the case lies against him, on the custom of the realm : and so of a common carrier by boat. 1 Roll. Rep. 6. An action will lie against a porter, carrier, or bargeman, upon his bare receipt of the goods if they are lost by negligence. 1 Sid. 36. Also a lighterman spoiling goods he is to carry, by letting water come to them, action on the case lies against him on the common custom. Palm. 528.

If one be not a common carrier, and takes hire, he may be charged on a special assumpsit; for where hire is taken, a promise is im-not a common carrier, and who is not to receive a premium, undertakes to carry goods safely, he is answerable for any damages they may sustain through this neglect or default.-This was the express point determined in Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Com. Rep. 133. &c. See tit. Bailment.

Where a carrier, entrusted with goods, opens the pack, and takes away and disposes of part of the goods, this, showing an intent of stealing them, will make him guilty of felony. H. P. C. 61. And it is the same if the carrier receives goods to carry them to a certain place, and carrieth them to some other place, and not to the place agreed. 3 Inst. 367. That is, if he do it with intent to defraud the owner of them. If a carrier, after he hath brought goods to the place appointed, take them away privately, he is guilty of felony; for the possession which he received from the owner being determined, his second taking is in all respects the same as if he were a mere stranger. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 5. See Larceny, &c.

If a common carrier, who is offered his hire, and who has convenience, refuse to carry goods, he is liable to an action, in the same manner as an inn-keeper who refuses to entertain a guest, or a smith who refuses to shoe a horse. 2 Show. Rep. 327. But a carrier may refuse to admit goods into his warehouse at an unseasonable time, or before he is ready to take his journey. Ld. Raym, 652.

A common carrier may have action of trover or trespass for goods taken out of his possession by a stranger; he having a special property in the goods, and being liable to make satisfaction for them to the owner; and where goods are stolen from a carrier, he may bring an indictment against the felon as for his own goods, though he has only the possessory, and not the absolute property; and the owner may likewise prefer an indictment against the felon. Kel. 39.

By stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1. carriers are not to travel on the Lord's Day. The driver of a van for baggage is within this act. Ex parte Middleton, 3 Barn. & C. 164. But not the driver of a stage coach for passengers. Sandi-man v. Breach, 7 Barn. & C. 96.

By the stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12. the justices are annually to assess the price of land-carriage of goods to be brought into any place within their jurisdiction, by any common carrier, who is not to take more, under the penalty of 5l. And by the stat. 21 G. 2. c. 28. § 3. a carrier is not to take more, for carrying goods from any place in London, than is settled by the justices for the carrying goods from London to such a place, under the

The provisions of the 3 W. & M. c. 12. and 21 G. 2. c. 28. § 3., mentioned under this title, II. for settling the rates on the carriage of goods, are repealed.

III. For what Defaults answerable; and the Exceptions in their favour .- At common law a carrier is liable by the custom of the realm to make good all losses of goods entrusted to him to carry, except such losses as arise (1.) from the act of God, or inevitable accident; or (2.) from the act of the king's enemies-to which may be added (3.) the default of the party sending them. 1 Inst. 89: Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909: Esp. N. P.

619: 5 Term. Rep. 389.

1. Where the defendant's hoy in coming through London bridge, was by a sudden gust of wind driven against the arch and sunk, the owner of the hoy was held not to be liable, the damage having been occasioned by the act of God, which no care of the defendant could provide against or foresee .-But in this case it was held that if the hoyman had gone out voluntarily in bad weather, so that there was a probability of his being lost, he would have been liable. Amies v. Stephens, 1 Stra. 128.

Upon this ground of its being the act of God, if a bargeman in a tempest, for the safety of the lives of his passengers, throws overboard any trunks or packages of value, he is not liable for the loss. 1 Roll. Rep. 79: and see Bulst. 280. and 1 Vent. 190: 1 Wils. 281.

The defendant having lodged his wagon in an inn, an accidental fire broke out, which consumed it-he was adjudged liable; and it was held that negligence does not enter into the grounds of this action; for though the carrier uses all proper care, yet in case of a loss he is liable. Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term. Rep. 27. And though he limits his liability by a notice, yet he is liable for the value of the goods in case of gross negligence. 4 Barn. & A. 21: 4 Bing. 218: 3 Brod. & Bing. 177: 1 Moo. & Malk. 154.

But where a common carrier, between two places (Stourport and Manchester), employed to carry goods from one place to the other, to be forwarded from thence to a third place (Stockport); carried them to Stourport, there put them in his warehouse, in which they were destroyed by an accidental fire, before he had an opportunity of forwarding them; in this case the carrier was held not to be liable, the keeping them in the warehouse in this case being not for the convenience of the carrier, but of the owner. 4 Term Rep. K. B. 581.

The owners of vessels on the navigation between A. and C. having given public notice in any case, except the loss were occasioned by the want of care in the master, nor even in such case beyond 10 per cent. unless extra freight were paid: the master of one of the ships took on board the plaintiff's goods to be carried from A. to B. (an intermediate place between A. and C.) and to be delivered at B. The vessel passed by B. without delivering the plaintiff's goods there, and sunk before her arrival at C. without any want of care in the master: held that the owner of the vessel was responsible for the whole loss in an action on the contract. Ellis. v. Turner, 8 Term Rep.

A carrier who undertakes for hire to carry goods is bound to deliver them at all events, except damaged or destroyed by act of God, or of the king's enemies: even though it be expressly found that the goods were destroyed without any actual negligence of the carrier.

Term Rep. 27.

2. If a carrier is robbed he shall be liable for the loss; not on the ground that he may charge the hundred under the statute of Winchester, but because if it were otherwise he might, by collusion with robbers, defraud the owner of the goods: and so in other cases, where the grounds are the same. 4 Roll. Ab. 333: 1 Salk. 143.

But if a carrier be robbed of goods, either he or the owner may bring an action against the hundred to make it good. 2 Saund.

Where in the case of a master of a ship it appeared there was a sufficient crew for the ship, but that at night eleven persons boarded the ship as pirates under the pretence of pressing, and plundered her of the goods, it was adjudged the master (the ship being infra corpus comitatus) was liable, for superior force shall not excuse him. Morse v. Slue, 1 Vent. 109: 2 Lev. 69: 1 Mod. 85: Barclay v. Higgins, E. 24 G. 3. cited 1 Term Rep. 33. Where the declaration stated that the carrier undertook to carry goods from London and safely deliver them at Dover, and the contract proved was, to carry and deliver safely (fire and robbery excepted), the variance was held fatal. Latham v. Ruttley, 2 Barn. & C.

3. In an action against a carrier, for negligently carrying a pipe of wine, which by that means burst, and the wine was spilt, it was good evidence for the defendant that the loss happened while he was driving gently, and arose from the wine being in a ferment; so that the loss was occasioned by its being sent in that state. Bull. N. P. 74. So if a carrier's wagon is full, and yet a person forces goods on him, and they are lost, the carrier is not liable. Lovert v. Hobbs, 2 Show. 127.

4. But the following exemptions by statute have been found necessary for the security of owners of ships.

By stat. 7 G. 2. c. 15. no owners of any ship shall be liable to answer any loss by reason of embezzlement by the master or mariners, of any gold, silver, or other goods shipped on board, or for any act done by the master or mariners, without the owner's privity; beyond the value of the ship and freight.

By stat. 26 G. 3. c. 86. no owners of any ship shall be subject to make good any loss by reason of any robbery, embezzlement, secreting, or making away with any gold, silver, jewels, diamonds, precious stones, or other goods from on board; or for any act or for-iciture done or occasioned without the knowledge of such owner, beyond the value of the ship and freight, although the masters or mariners shall not be concerned in, or privy to, such robbery, &c.

These acts do not impeach any remedy for fraudulent embezzlement, and if several proprietors or freighters sustain such loss, and the value of the ship and freight is not sufficient to make full compensation, the loss shall be averaged amongst them.

No owner shall be subject to answer for loss happening by fire on board ship. Stat. 26 G. 3. c. 86.

No master or owners shall be subject to answer for any loss of gold, silver, diamonds, &c. by reason of any robbery, &c. unless the shipper of such goods insert the true nature, quality, and value of the gold, &c. in his bills of lading. Stat. 26 G. 3. c. 86.

Previous to this last statute it was determined, that the owner of a ship was not liable beyond the value of a ship and freight, under stat. 7 G. 2. c. 16. in the case of a robbery (of dollars) in which one of the mariners was concerned, by giving intelligence, and afterwards sharing the spoil; Sutton v. Mitchell, 1 Term Rep. 18. where it was said, the statute was made to protect the owners against all treachery in the master or mariners. And see 53 G. 3. c. 159. extending the provisions of the former acts.

A carrier by water contracting to carry goods for hire impliedly promises that the vessel shall be tight and fit for the purpose, and is answerable for damage arising from leakage. And this, though he had given notice "that he would not be answerable for any damage unless occasioned by want of ordinary care in the master or crew of the vessel, in which case he would pay 10 per cent. upon such damage, so as the whole did not exceed the value of the vessel and freight." loss happening by the personal default of the carrier himself (such as the not providing a sufficient vessel) is not within the scope of such notice, which was meant to exempt the carrier from losses by accident or chance, &c.; even if it were competent to a common carrier to exempt himself by a special exceptance from the responsibility cast upon him by the common law for a reasonable reward to make good all losses not arising from the act of God, or the king's enemies. Lyon v. Melle, 5 East, 428.

Where no lien exists at common law, it can only arise by contract with the particular party, either expressed or implied; it may be implied either from previous dealings between the same parties upon the footing of such a lien, or even from a usage of the trade so general as that the jury must reasonably pre-sume that the parties knew of and adopted it in their dealing. But whereas in the case of a common carrier claiming a lien for his general balance, such a lien is against the policy of the common law and custom of the realm, which only gives him a lien for the carriage price of the particular goods, there ought to be very strong evidence of a general usage for such a lien to induce a jury to infer the knoweldge and adoption of it by the particular parties in the contract; and the jury having negatived such a general usage, though proved to have been frequently exercised by the defendant and various other common carriers throughout the north for ten or twelve years before, and in one instance, so far back as thirty years, and not opposed by other evidence, the court refused to grant a new trial. Rushforth v. Hadfield, 7 East, 224.

A parcel containing Bank notes, stamps, and a letter, was sent by a common carrier from one stamp distributor to another. By 12 G. 3. c. 81. § 6. it is provided that the prohibition to send letters otherwise than by the post shall not extend to letters sent by any common carrier with the goods which the letter concerns. In an action against the carrier, the Court of King's Bench held that the circumstance of the letter accompanying the stamps was evidence that it related to them; and that the defendant, not having proved the letter to relate to any other subject, was liable for the value of the parcel. Bennet v. Clough, 1 Barn. & Ald. 461.

IV. What circumstances must concur in order to charge them.—In order to charge the carrier, three circumstances are to be observed.

1. The goods must be lost while in the possession of the carrier himself, or in his sole care.—Therefore where the plaintiffs, the East India Company, sent their servants with the goods in question on board the vessel, who took charge of them, and they were lost, defendant was held not to be liable. 1 Stra. 690.

2. The carrier is liable only so far as he is paid, for he is chargeable by reason of his re-

One brought a box to a carrier, in which there was a large sum of money, and the carrier demanded of the owner what was in it; he answered it was filled with silks, and such like goods; upon which the carrier took it and was robbed: and adjudged, that the carrier was liable to make it good: but a special acceptance, as provided there is no charge of money, would have excused the carrier. 1 Vent. 238: 4 Rep. 83.

A person delivered to a carrier's book-keeper | against a carrier, see title Bailment, 5 .- That two bags of money sealed up, to be carried a carrier may retain goods for his hire, see from London to Exeter, and told him that it 1 Ld. Raym. 166. 752. was 2001. and took his receipt for the same, with promise of delivery for 10s. per cent. carriage and risk: though it be proved that there was 400l. in the bags, if the carrier be robbed he shall answer only for 2001., because there was a particular undertaking for the carriage of that sum and no more, and his reward, which makes him answerable, extends no farther. Carth. 486.

A. sends goods to B., who says, he will warrant they shall go safe; he is liable for any damage sustained by them, notwithstanding A. sends one of his own servants in B's cart to look after them. 2 B. & P. 416.

3. Under a special or unqualified acceptance the carrier is bound no farther than he undertakes.

For where the owner of a stage-coach puts out an advertisement "That he would not be answerable for money, plate, or jewels above the value of 5l. unless he had notice, and was paid accordingly;" all goods received by that coach are under that special acceptance; and if money or plate be sent by it without notice, and being paid for it, if lost, the coach owner is Gibbon v. Payton, 4 Burr. 2298: Izett v. Mountain, 4 East, 371: Nicholson v. Willan, 5 East, 507. Not even to the extent of the 5l. or the sum paid for booking. Clay v. Willan, H. Black. Rep. 298 .- In these cases a personal communication is not necessary to constitute a special acceptance.-Advertisements, notices in the warehouse, and handbills, which it is probable the plaintiff saw, or which he might have seen, are sufficient.

From these cases and the opinion of Lord Mansfield, it seems safest, that in all instances of sending things of value by a carrier, the carrier should have notice and be paid accordingly. See ante, II. 4. and the stat. 1 W. 4.

4. A delivery to the carrier's servant is a delivery to himself, and shall charge him; but they must be goods, such as it is his custom to earry, not out of his line of business. Salk.

5. Where goods are lost which have been put on board a ship, the action may be brought, either against the master or against the owners. 2 Salk. 440.—If one owner only is sued, he must plead it in abatement, that there are other partners; for he shall not be allowed to give it in evidence, and nonsuit the plaintiff. 5 Burr. 2611: see ante, II. 4.

6. It is not necessary in order to charge the carrier that the goods are lost in transitu, while immediately under his care; for he is bound to deliver them to the consignee, or send notice to him according to the direction; and though they are carried safely to the inn, yet if left there till they are spoiled, and no notice given to the consignee, the carrier is liable. 3 Wils. 429: 2 Bl. Rep. 916.

CARTS. By the stat. 2 W. & M. st. 2. c. 8. § 19, 20. and 18 G. 2. c. 33. the wheel of every cart or dray for the carriage of any thing from and to any place where the streets are paved, within the bills of mortality, &c. shall contain six inches in the felly, not to be shod with iron, nor be drawn with above two horses, under the penalty of 40s.—By the stat. 18 G. 2. c. 33. they may be drawn with three horses and not more, and the wheels being of six inches breadth, when worn, may be shod with iron, if the iron be of the full breadth of six inches, made flat, and not set on with roseheaded nails: and no person shall drive any cart, &c. within the limits aforesaid, unless the name of the owner, and number of such cart, &c. be placed in some conspicuous place of the eart, &c. and his name be entered with the commissioners of hackney-coaches, under the penalty of 40s.: and every person may seize and detain such cart till the penalty be paid.—By the stats. 1 G. 1. st. 2. c. 57: 24 G. 2. c. 43. the driver of any such cart, &c. riding upon such cart, &c. not having a person on foot to guide the same, shall forfeit 10s.; and by stats. 24 G. 2. c. 43. the owner so guilty shall forfeit 20s. and any person may apprehend the offender.

On changing property new owners' names to be affixed, 30 G. 2. c. 22. § 2. and to be entered with the commissioners of hackneycoaches. And see stat. 24 G. 3. st. 2. c. 27. to compel the entry of all carts driven, within five miles of Temple Bar.

CARVAGE. See post, Carucate. CARUCA, Fr. charrue.] A plough; from the old Gallic carr, which is the present Irish word for any sort of wheeled carriage; hence charl and car, a ploughman or rustic.

CARUCAGE, carucagium.] A tribute imposed on every plough, for the public service: and as hidage was a taxation by hides, so carucage was by carucates of land. Mon. Angl.

tom. 1. f. 294.

CARUCATE, or CARVE OF LAND, carucata terræ.] A plough land; which in a deed of Thomas de Arden, 19 E. 2. is declared to be one hundred acres, by which the sub jects have sometimes been taxed; whereupon the tribute so levied was called carvagium, or carucagium. Bract. lib. 2. c. 26. But Skene says, it is as great a portion of land as may be tilled in a year and a day by one plough; which also is called hilda, or hida terræ, a word used in the old British laws. And now by stat. 7 and 8 W. 3. c. 29. a ploughland, which may contain houses, mills, pasture, meadow, wood, &c. is 50l. per annum.

Littleton, in his chapter of tenure in socage, saith, that soca idem est quod carucata, a soke silver of every knight's fce, towards the marriage of his sister Isabella to the Emperor.

Stow's Annals, p. 271.

Rastal, in his exposition of words, says carvage is to be quit, if the king shall tax all the land by carves; that is, a privilege whereby a man is exempted from carvage. The word carve is mentioned in the stat. 28 Ed. 1. of wards and reliefs, and in Magna Charta, c. 5. And A. D. 1200, on peace being made between England and France, King John lent the King of France thirty thousand marks; for which carvage was collected in England, viz. 3s. for each plough. Spelm. v. Carua. Kennet's Gloss.: 2 Inst. 69. and n.

CARUCATARIUS. He that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure. Paroch. Antiq. p.

CASK. Action on. See title Action.

CASK. An uncertain quantity of goods; and of sugar contains from eight to eleven hundred weight. There are also casks for liquors, of divers contents; and by stat. 25 Eliz. c. 11. none were to transport any wine casks, &c. except for victualling ships, under a certain penalty.

CASSOCK, or CASSULA. A garment belonging to the priest, quasi minor cassa. See Tassale.

CASTEL, or CASTLE, castellum.] A fortress in a town; a principal mansion of a nobleman. In the time of Hen. 2. there were in England 1115 castles; and every castle belonged to a manor; but during the civil wars in this kingdom these castles were demolished, so that generally there are only the ruins or remains of them at this day. 2 Inst. 31. CASTELLAIN, castellanus.] The lord, owner, or captain of a castle, and sometimes the constable of a fortified house. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 2. c. 16: 3 Ed. 1. c. 7. It hath likewise been taken for him that hath the custody of one of the king's mansion houses, called by the Lombards curtes, in English courts; though they are not castles or places of defence. 2 Inst. 31. And Manwood, in his Forest Laws, says, there is an officer of the forest called castellanus.

CASTELLARIUM, CASTELLARII.-The precinct or jurisdiction of a castle.—Et unum toftum juxta castellarium. Mon. Angl.

tom. 2. f. 402. CASTELLORUM OPERATIO. Castlework, or service and labour done by inferior tenants, for the building and upholding of castles of defence; towards which some gave their personal assistance, and others paid their contributions. This was one of the three necessary charges, to which all lands among our Saxon ancestors were expressly subject. And after the conquest an immunity from this burthen was sometimes granted. As King Hen. 2. granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford.—Ut sunt quieti de operationibus castellorum. Paroch, Antiq. p. 114. It was unlawful to build any castle without leave holdings. Scotch Dict.

Hen. III. took carvage, that is, two marks of of the king, which was called castellatic. Du Fresne.

> CASTIGATORY for scolds. A woman indicted for being a common scold, if convicted. shall be sentenced to be placed on a certain engine of correction, called the tre bucket. tumbrel, tymborella, castigatory, or, cucking stool, which in the Saxon language signifies the scolding stool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking stool, because the residue of the judgment is, that when she is so placed therein, she shall be plunged in the water for her punishment. 3 Inst. 219: 4 Comm. 169.-It is also termed goginstole and cokestole, and by some is thought corrupted from choaking stool. Though this punish-ment is now disused, a former editor of Jacob's Dict. (Mr. Morgan) mentions that he remembers to have seen the remains of one, on the estate of a relation of his in Warwickshire, consisting of a long beam, or rafter moving on a fulcrum, and extending to the centre of a large pond, on which end the stool used to be placed.

At Banbury in Oxfordshire, this punishment has been used towards common whores, within the memory of persons now (1793) living; and the pool for the purpose yet retains the name of the cucking pool, but the engine was not long since removed. See Lamb. Eiren.

lib. 1. c. 12.

In Domesday-book it is called Cathedra Stercoralis, and was used by the Saxons for the same purpose, and by them called scealfing stole. It was anciently also a punishment inflicted on brewers and bakers transgaessing the laws, who were ducked in stercore, in stinking water. CASTING VOTE. See Parliament, VII. CASTLE-WARD. Castlegardum, vel wardum castri.] An imposition laid upon such persons as dwelled within a certain compass of any castle, towards the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle. Magna Charta, c. 15. 20: 32 Hen. 8. c. 48. It is sometimes used for the circuit itself, which is inhabited by those that are subject to this service. Castle guard rents were paid by persons dwelling within the liberty of any castle for the maintaining of watch and ward within the same. By stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 24. § 2. these and other rents in the Duchy of Lancaster, payable to the king, were vested in trustees to be sold.

CASTER, and CHESTER. The names of places ending in these words are derived from the Lat. Castrum; for this termination at the end was given by the Romans to those places where they built castles.

CASUAL EJECTOR. In In ejectment, Richard Roe or other nominal defendant, who continues such until appearance by or for the tenant in possession. See title Eject-CASUALTY OF WARDS. Are the mails and duties due to the superiors in ward-

CASU CONSIMILI. Is a writ of entry granted where tenant by the courtesy, or tenant for life, aliens in fee or in tail, or for another's life; and is brought by him in reversion against the party to whom such tenant so aliens to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life-time. It takes its name from this, that the clerks of the Chancery did, by their common assent, frame it to the likeness of the writ called in casu proviso, according to the authority given them by the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 24. which statute, as often as there happens a new case in Chancery something like a former, yet not specially fitted by any writ, authorises them to frame a new form, answerable to the new case, and as like the former as they may. 7 Rep. 4: see Fitz. Nat. Br. fo. 206: Terms de Ley: see 3 Comm. 51.

CASU PROVISO. A writ of entry, given by the statute of Gloucester, c. 7. where a tenant in domer aliens in fee or for life, &c. and it lies for him in reversion against the alienee. F. N. B. 205. This writ, and the writ of casu consimili, supposes the tenant to have aliened in fee, though it be for life only: and a casu proviso may be without making any title in it, where a lease is made by the demandant himself to the tenant that doth alien; but if an ancestor lease for life, and the tenant alien in fee, &c. the heir in reversion must have this with the title included therein. F. N. B. 206, 207.

These two writs are now abolished. See

Limitations of Actions, II. 1.

CASUS OMISSUS. Is where any particular thing is omitted out of, and not provided against by a statute, &c.

CATALS. Catalla. Goods and chattels.

See Chattels.

CATALLIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRICTIONIS. Anciently a writ that lay where a house was within a borough, for rent going out of the same; and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, &c. by way of distress for rent. Old. Nat. Br. 66. This writ is now obsolete.

CATALIS REDDENDIS. An ancient writ which lay where goods being delivered to any man to keep till a certain day, are not, upon demand, delivered at the day. It may be otherwise called a writ of detinue; and is answerable to actio depositi in the civil law. See Reg. Orig. 139: and Old Nat. Br. 63.

CATAPULTA. A warlike engine to shoot darts; or rather a cross-bow.

CATASCOPUS. An archdeacon. Du

Cange.

CATCHLAND. In Norfolk there are some grounds which it is not known to what parish they certainly belong, so that the minister who first seizes the tithes does by that right of pre-occupation enjoy them for that year; and the land of this dubious nature is there called catchland, from this custom of seizing the tithes. Cowel.

CATCHPOLE. See Cachepollus. Sheriff's officers are commonly so called.

CATHEDRAL, ecclesia cathedralis.] The church of the bishop, and head of the diocese: wherein the service of the church is performed with great ceremony. See title Church.

CATHEDRATICK, cathedraticum.] A sum of 2s. paid to the bishop by the inferior clergy, in argumentum subjectionis et ob honorem cathedræ. Hist. procurat. et Synodals, p. 82.

CATHOLICS; usually termed ROMAN CATHOLICS. See title Roman Catholics.

CATZURUS. A hunting horse. Tenures,

CATTLE. As to buying and selling cattle, &c .- No person shall buy any ox, cow, calf, &c. and sell the same again alive in the same market or fair, on pain of forfeiting double the value. Stats. 3 and 4 E. 6. c. 19: 3 C. 1. c. 49. § 8.—And the said act 3 and 4 E. 6. c. 19. is not repealed by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 71. which repeals the general forestalling act of 5 and 6 E. 6. c. 14. and other subsequent acts enforcing the same, but hath no reference to any preceding act.—By stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40. no salesman, broker, or factor employed in buying cattle for others, shall buy and sell for himself, in London, or within the bills of mortality, on penalty of double the value of the cattle bought or sold.

By stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1. no drovers are to travel with cattle on Sundays, on penalty of 20s.

By stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 67. several wholesome regulations are made, to prevent the cruelties of drovers and others, in driving cattle in London, Westminster, and the bills of mortality, by which a fine from 20s. to 5s. is imposed on them for misbehaviour; or one month's imprisonment; and power is given to the lord mayor and aldermen of London, to make regulations to further the purposes of the act, and which was accordingly done.

As to killing, maining, and stealing cattle.

—By 7 and 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. § 25. any person who shall steal any horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, or any bull, cow, ox, ram, heifer, or calf, or any ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb, or wilfully killing any such cattle, with intent to steal the carcase or skin, or any part of the animal, shall be guilty of a capital felony.

By 7 and 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. § 16. any person who unlawfully and maliciously shall kill, maim, or wound any cattle, shall be guilty of felony, punishable by transportation for life, or years, or imprisonment, whipping, &c.

By the 3 G. 4. c. 71., wantonly or cruelly abusing cattle renders the offender liable, on conviction before a magistrate, on the oath of one witness, to a penalty not exceeding 5l. or less than 10s., or in default of payment three month's imprisonment.

By § 2. the complaint must be made within ten days after the offence; and by § 3. the order of the magistrate is final.

By § 5. if the justice be of opinion that the order the complainant to pay not exceeding 20s. to the other party for his trouble and ex-

And by 7 Geo. 4. c. 64. § 28. the court may order compensation to persons who have been active in the apprehension of persons charged with horse-stealing, bullock-stealing, or sheep-stealing, or accessaries before the fact thereto.

The stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. provides that every person keeping a slaughter-house for cattle not killed for butcher's meat, shall take out licenses and be subject to an inspector; and shall not slaughter, but at certain times.

&c. &c. See title Horses.

CAVEAT. A process in the spiritual court to stop the institution of a clerk to a benefice, or probate of a will, &c. When a caveat is entered against an institution, if the bishop afterwards institutes a clerk, it is void; the caveat being a supersedeas: but a caveat has been adjudged void when entered in the life-time of the incumbent. Though if it is entered "dead or dying," it will last good one month; and if the incumbent dies, till six months after his death. So a caveat entered against a will, stands in force for three months; and this is for the caution of the ordinary, that he do no wrong: though it is said the temporal courts do not regard these sorts of caveats. 1 Roll. Rep. 191: 1 Nels. Abr. 416, 417.

CAVERS. Offenders relating to the mines in Derbyshire, who are punishable in the bergmote, or miners' court.

CAULCEIS. See stat. 6 H. 6. c. 5. respecting sewers. Ways pitched with flint or other stones. See Calcetum.

CAURCINES, Caursini.] Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themselves the Pope's merchants, but driving no other trade than letting out money; and having great banks in England, they differed little from Jews, save, (as history says) that they were rather more merciless to their debtors. Cowel says they have their name from Caorsium, Caorsi, a town in Lombardy, where they first practised their arts of usury and extortion; from whence spreading themselves, they carried their cursed trade through most parts of Europe, and were a common plague to every nation where they The then bishop of London excommunicated them: and King Hen. 3. banished them from this kingdom in the year 1240. But being the pope's solicitors and money changers, they were permitted to return in the year 1250; though in a very short time after, they were driven out of the kingdom again for their intolerable exactions. Mat. Paris, 403.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI, is a writ which lies where a woman gives land to a man in fee simple, &c. to the intent he should marry her, and he refuseth to do it in any reasonable time, being thereunto complaint is frivolous or vexatious, he may required. Reg. Orig. 66. If a woman make a feofiment to a stranger of land in fee to the intent to infeoff her, and one who shall be her husband; if the marriage shall not take effect, she shall have the writ of causa matrimonii prælocuti, against the stranger, notwithstanding the deed of feoffment be absolute. New Nat. Br. 456. A woman infeoffed a man upon condition that he should take her to wife, and he had a wife at the time of the feoffment; and afterwards, the woman for not performing the condition, entered again into the land; and her entry was adjudged lawful, though upon a second feoffee. Lib. Ass. anno 40 Ed. 3. The husband and wife may sue the writ causa matrimonii pralocuti against another who ought to have married her; but if a man give lands to a woman to the intent to marry him, although the woman will not marry him, &c. he shall not have his remedy by writ causa matrimonii prælocutis. New Nat. Br. 455.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICES QUARE. A writ directed to a mayor of a town, &c. who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to show cause why he so delays the performance of CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA. A writ that lies against a bishop, who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of the church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66. And if a man be excommunicated, and taken by a writ of significavit, and after offers caution to the bishop to obey the church, and the bishop refuseth it; the party may sue out this writ to the sheriff to go against the bishop, and warn him to take caution, &c.; but if he stands in doubt whether the sheriff will deliver him by that writ, the bishop may purchase another varit directed to the sheriff reciting the case and the end thereof; Tibi præcipimus, quod ipsum A. B. a prisona prædict. nisi in præsenti tua cautionem pignorat ad minus eidem episc. de satisfaciend. obtulerit nullatenus deliberas absqua mandato nostro seu ipsius episcopi in hac parte, speciali, &c. When the bishop hath taken caution, he is to certify the same in the Chancery, and thereupon the party shall have a writ unto the sheriff to deliver him. New Nat. Br. 142.

CEAPGILDE. From Saxon ceap pecus, cattle; and gild, i. e. solutio.] Hence it is solutio pecudis; from this Saxon word gild, it is very probable we have our English word yield; as yield or pay. Cowel. CELER LECTI. The top, head, or tester of a bed. Hist. Elien. apud Whartoni, Angl.

Sax. par. 1. p. 673.

CELLERARIUS. The butler in a monastery: in the Universities they are sometimes called manciple, and sometimes caterer, and steward.

CENDULÆ. Small pieces of wood laid in of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor form of tiles, to cover the roof of a house.

Pat. 4 Hen. 3. p. 1. m. 10.

CENEGILD. An expiatory mulct, paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelm.

CENELLÆ. Acorns from the oak. In our old writings persona cenellarum is put for the pannage of hogs, or running of swine, to feed on acorns.

CENNINGA. Notice given by the buyer to the seller, that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appear and justify the sale: it is mentioned in the laws of Athelstan, apud Brompton, cap. 4.

CENSARIA. A farm, or house and land, let ad censum at standing rent; it comes from the Fr. cense, which signifies a farm.

CENSARII. Farmers. Blount.

CENSUALES. A species or class of the oblati, or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i. e. those, who to procure the protection of the church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services. Robert. Hist. Emp. C. vol. 1. 271, [272: Potgiesserus de Statu Servorum, lib. 1. c. 1. § 6, 7.

CENSURE, from Lat. census.] A custom

CENSURE, from Lat. census.] A custom called by this name, observed in divers manors in Cornwall and Devon, where all persons residing therein above the age of sixteen are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11d. per poll, and 1d. per ann. ever after; and these thus sworn are called censers. Survey of the Duchy of Cornwall.

CENTENARII. Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of an hundred, and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211.

There were anciently inferior judges, so called in France, who were set over every hundred freemen, and were themselves subject to the count or comes. 1 Comm. 115.

CEPI CORPUS. A return made by the sheriff, upon a capias, or other process to the like purpose, that he hath taken the body of the party. F. N. B. 26.

CEPPAGIUM. The stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 41.

CERTAINTY, is a plain, clear, and distinct setting down of things so that they may be understood. 5 Rep. 121. A convenient certainty is required in writs, declarations, pleadings, &c. But if a writ abate for want of it, the plaintiff may have another writ: it is otherwise if a deed become void, by uncertainty, the party may not have a new deed at his pleasure. 11 Rep. 25. 121: Dyer, 84. That has certainty enough, that may be made certain; but not like what is certain of itself. 4 Rep. 97. See generally tit. Pleading—and particularly tits. Deed; Will:

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULÆ. A writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the lord chancellor a statute staple taken before him, where the party himself detains it, and refuseth to bring in the same. Reg. Orig. 152. There is the like writ to certify a statute merchant; and in divers other cases. Ibid. 148. 151, &c.

CERTIFICATE. A writing made in any court to give notice to another court of any thing done therein; which is usually by way of transcript, &c. And sometimes it is made by an officer of the same court, where matters are referred to him, or a rule of court is obtained for it; containing the tenor and effect of what is done.

By 7, 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 11. persons convicted of felony, having been previously convicted of felony, may be transported for life, &c. upon a certificate of the clerk of the court or other officer, having the custody of the records of the court when the offender was first convicted; and the uttering a false certificate is made felony, and the offender subjected to seven years' transportation.

By 7 G. 4. c. 64. § 22. the expences of attending (in cases of felony) before the magistrates, and a compensation for trouble and loss of time therein may be allowed, and are to be ascertained by the magistrate's certificate granted before the trial in court.

If a question of mere law arises in the course of a cause in chancery (as whether by the words of a will, an estate for life or in tail is created, or whether a future interest devised by a testator, shall operate as a remainder, or an executory devise), it is the practice of that court to refer it to the opinion of the judges of the court of K. B. or C. P. upon a case stated for the purpose; wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is submitted to their decision, who thereupon hear it solemnly argued by counsel on both sides, and certify their opinion to the chancellor. And upon such certificate, the decree is usually founded. 3 Comm. 453.

It is much to be regretted that in these cases the judges give no reasons for their certificate, which much lessens the value of the judgments in such cases.

The Trial by Certificate, is allowed in such cases, where the evidence of the person certifying is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. Thus, 1. The question whether one were absent with the king in his army out of the realm, in time of war, might be tried by the certificate of the marshal of the king's host under seal. Litt. § 102.—2. If in order to avoid an outlawry it be alleged the defendant was in prison, &c. at Bourdeaux or Calais, this, when those places belonged to the crown of England, was allowed to be tried by the certificate of the mayor. 9 Rep. 31: 2 Ro. Ab. 583. And therefore by parity of reason, it should now hold that in similar cases arising at Jamaica, &c. the trial should be by certificate from the governor. 3 Comm. 334.

toms of the city of London shall be tried by tices or others, and obtained letters-patent to the certificate of the mayor and aldermen, certified by the mouth of the recorder, upon a surmise from the party alleging it, that it should be so tried; else it must be tried by the country, as it must also if the corporation of London be a party, or interested in the suit. 1 Inst. 74: 4 Burr. 248: Bro. Ab. 1: Trial, pl. 96; Hob. 85. But see 1 Term Rep. 423. If the recorder has once certified a custom, the court are in future bound to take notice of it. Doug. 380.

4. In some cases the Sheriff of London's certificate shall be the final trial; as if the issue be whether the defendant be a citizen of London, or a foreigner, in case of privilege pleaded to be sued only in the city courts. 1 Inst. 74. Of a nature somewhat similar to which is the trial of the privilege of either University when the chancellor claims cognizance of the cause; in which case the charters confirmed by parliament, allow the question to be determined by the certificate of the chancellor under seal. But in case of an issue between two parties themselves, the trial shall be by jury. 2 Ro. Ab. 583.—3 Comm.

5. In matters of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as marriage, general bastardy, excommunication, and orders, these and other like matters, shall be tried by the bishop's certificate. See tits. Bastardy, &c. Ability of a clerk presented, admission, institution and deprivation of a clerk shall also be tried by certificate from the ordinary or metropolitan. 2 Inst. Show. P. C. 88: 2 Ro. Ab. 583, &c. But induction shall be tried by a jury; being the corporal investiture of the temporal profits. Dy. 229. Resignation of a benefice may be tried either way, but seems most properly to fall within the bishop's cognizance. 2 Ro. Ab. 583: 3 Comm. 336.

6. The trial of all customs and practices of the courts shall be by certificate from the proper officer of those courts respectively; and what return was made on a writ by a sheriff or under-sheriff, shall be only tried by his own certificate. 9 Rep. 31: 3 Comm. 336.

As to certificates in cases of Costs, of Bankrupts, or relative to the settlement of the Poor, see those titles in this Dict.

CERTIFICATION, i.e. Assurance. Scotch Dict.

CERTIFICATION, is when the judge doth ascertain the party called, and not comparing what he will do in that case. Scotch

CERTIFICATE OR CERTIFICATION OF ASSISE, certificatio assisæ novæ disseisinæ, &c.] A writ anciently granted for the re-examining or re-trial of a matter passed by assise before justices: used where a man appearing by his bailiff to an assise, brought by another, lost the day; and having something more to plead for himself, which the bailiff did not, or might

It was called a certificate, because therein mention is made to the sheriff. that upon the party's complaint of the defective examination, as to the assise passed, the king had directed his letters-patent to the justices for the better certifying of themselves. whether all points of the said assise were duly examined. Reg. Orig. 200: F. N. B. 181. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 13: Horn's Mirr. lib. 3.—This writ is now entirely superseded by the remedy afforded by means of new trials. See 3 Comm. 389.

CERTIORARI. This is an Original Writ. issuing out of the court of Chancery or K. B. directed in the king's name to the judges or officers of the inferior courts, commanding them to certify, or to return the records of a cause depending before them; to the end the party may have the more sure and speedy justice before the king, or such justices as he shall assign to determine the cause. See F.

N. B. 145, 242,

This writ is either returnable in the King's Bench, and then hath these words, "send to us;" or in the Common Bench, and then has "to our justices of the bench;" or in the Chancery, and then hath "in our Chancery,"

On this subject we may briefly consider, I. In what cases this writ is grantable, or not. -2. In what manner.-3. The effect of it when granted: and,-4. Of the return, with the form of that and the writ.

1. A writ of certiorari may be had at any time before trial, to certify and remove indictments, with all the proceedings thereon from any inferior court of criminal jurisdiction, into the court of K. B. the sovereign ordinary court of justice in causes criminal. And this is frequently done for one of four purposes: 1. To consider and determine the validity of appeals and indictments, and the proceedings thereon; and to quash or confirm them accordingly.-2. To have the prisoner or defendant tried at the bar of the courts, or before justices of Nisi Prius where it is surmised that a partial or insufficient trial will probably be had in the inferior court.—3. To plead the king's pardon in the court of K. B. 4. To issue process of outlawry against the offender in those countries or places where the process of inferior judges will not reach him. 2 H. P. C. 210. 4 Comm. 430.

Such certiorari is granted of course on the application of the crown; but the defendant must lay some ground for it. R. v. Eaton, 2 Term Rep. 89.

A certiorari lies in all judicial proceedings, in which a writ of error does not lie; and it is not plead for him, desired a farther examina- a consequence of all inferior jurisdictions, erected by act of parliament to have their prosecution be malicious or attended with opproceedings returnable in K. B. Ld. Raym. 469. 580.

But without laying a special ground before the court, it cannot be sued out to remove proceedings in an action from the courts of the counties palatine. Doug. 749 .- It does not lie to judges over and terminer to remove a recognizance of appearance. Lucas, 278.-Nor to remove a poor's rate. Sira. 932. 975: See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 23. in n.

A certiorari will lie to remove an ejectment from an inferior court. Doe d. Sadler, v. Dring. 1 B. & C. 253.

An ejectment brought in an inferior court on a lease executed and sealed on the premises which were within the jurisdiction of that court, may be removed into K. B. by certiorari, if there be any ground for believing that it cannot be impartially tried in the inferior court. Patterson v. Eades, 3 B. & C. 550.

A certiorari lies to justices of the peace and others, even in such cases, which they are empowered by statute finally to hear and determine; and the superintendancy of the court of K. B. is not taken away without express words. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27, § 22, 23.

If an order of removal be confirmed at the sessions, and both orders be removed into B. R. by certiorari on a case reserved, and that court disapprove of the orders, for want of jurisdiction of the removing magistrates, appearing on the face of the original order; the court will quash both orders, without remitting back to the sessions to quash the original order, for the purpose of enabling them to give maintenance according to stat. 9 G. 1. c. 7. § 9. and at any rate they will not admit an application for amending their judgment for quashing both orders made in the term subsequent to the judgment so pronounced. Rex v. Moor-Chrichell Parish, 2 East, 222.

The court refused to grant a certiorarl to a defendant pending an appeal to the sessions by him. 2 Term. Rep. 196. n.

That a certiorari does not lie to remove any other than judicial acts. See Cald. 309: Say. 6.

Where a certiorari is by law grantable for an indictment at the suit of the king, the court is bound to award it, for it is the king's prerogative to sue in what court he pleases; but it is at the discretion of the court to grant or not, in case of private prosecutions, and at the prayer of the defendant: and the court will not grant it for the removal of an indictment before justices of gaol-delivery, without some special cause; or where there is so much difficulty in the case, that the judge desires it may be determined in B. R., &c. Burr. 2456. Also on indictments of perjury, forgery, or for heinous misdemeanors, the court will not generally grant a certiorari to remove at the instance of the defendant. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 27, 28. But see 2 Ld. Raym. 1452.

But in particular cases, the court will use pressive circumstances. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 28. n.

Where issue is joined in the court below, it is a good objection against granting a certiorari; and if a person doth not make use of this writ till the jury are sworn, he loses the benefit of it. Mod. Ca. 16. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. After conviction, a certiorari may not be had to remove an indictment, &c. unless there be special cause; as if the judge below is doubtful what judgment is proper to be given when it may. See Stra. 1227: Burr. 749. And after conviction, &c. it lies in such cases where writ or error will not lie. 1 Salk. 149. The court, on motion in an extraordinary case, will grant a certiorari to remove a judgment given in an inferior court; but this is done where the ordinary way of taking out execution is hindered in the inferior court. 1 Lill. Abr. 253.

In common cases a certiorari will not lie to remove a cause out of an inferior court, after verdict. It is never sued out after a writ of error. but where diminution is alleged: and when the thing in demand does not exceed 5l. a certiorari shall not be had, but a writ of error or attaint. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 23. See stat. 12 G. 1. c. 29. A certiorari is to be granted on matter of law only; and in many cases there must be a judge's hand for it. I Lill. Certioraris to remove indictments, &c. are to be signed by a judge; and to remove orders, the fiat for making out the writ must be signed by some judge. 1 Salk. 150.

Certiorari lies to the courts of Wales; and the cinque ports, counties, palatine, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 24, 25. The courts of Wales and the county palatine of Chester are now abolished by 1 W. 4. c. 70. § 14.

Things may not be removed from before justices of peace, which cannot be proceeded in by the court where removed; as in case of refusing to take the oaths, &c. which is to be certified and inquired into, according to the statute. 1 Salk. 145. And where the court which awards the certiorari cannot hold plea on the record, there but a tenor of the record shall be certified; for otherwise, if the record was removed into B. R. as it cannot be sent back, there would be a failure of right afterwards. 1 Danv. Ab. 792. But a record sent by certiorari into C. R. may be sent after by mittimus into B. B. Ibid. 789. And a record into B. R. may be certified into chancery, and from thence be sent by mittimus into an inferior court, where an action of debt is brought in an inferior court, and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff hath recovered in B. R. and the plaintiff replies Nul tiel record, &c. 1 Saund. 97. 99.

The court of B. R. will grant a new certiorari to affirm a judgment, &c. though generally one person can have but one certiorari. Cro. Jac. 369.

A certiorari may not be had to a court sutheir discretion to grant a certiorari; as if perior, or that has equal jurisdiction, in which the defendant be of good character, or if the case day is given to bring in the record, &c. perior, or that has equal jurisdiction, in which Besides the statutes hereafter mentioned, there are several which restrain, and many which absolutely prohibit a certiorari; in order to avoid frivolous and unfounded delays in justice. For a complete list of these, if needed, the student should consult the statutes. The following seem to have deserved a short mention in this place.

By stat. 12 Car. 2. cc. 23, 24. no certiorari shall be allowed in certain cases of transgression of the Excise Laws.

Certiorari granted to remove an indictment against an excise officer from the sessions, on the motion of the attorney-general, without any affidavit. 4 T. R. 161.

By stat. 13 G. 3. c. 78. (which see at large tit. Highways) no presentment, &c. of any lighway shall be removed from the sessions, until it be traversed, except the right to repair be the question.—Or by stat. 5 and 6. W. & M. c. 11. may come in question—but this means on the part of the defendant only, for on the part of the prosecution it lies before.—No other proceedings under the highway act may be removed by certiorari. See 3 Barn. & C. 698: 5 Barn. & C. 816. But if the sessions manifestly exceed their authority in making orders, they may be removed into K. B. by certiorari and quashed. Leach's Hawk, P. C. ii. c. 27. § 37. and n.

Also by stat. 1 Ann. c. 18. concerning the repair of bridges no certiorari shall be allowed: but it may, at the instance of the prosecutor notwithstanding the general words. 6 T. R. 194.—Nor by stat. 12 G. 2 c. 29. for assessing county rates. Nor on stat. 19 G.2. c. 21. against cursing and swearing.—Nor on stat. 25 G. 2. c. 36. against bawdy-houses; but this does not restrain the crown from removing the indictment by certiorari. 5 T. R. 626.—Nor on 29 G. 2 c. 40. against stealing lead, iron, &c .- Nor on 30 G. 2. c. 21. for preserving fish in the Thames. Nor on 30 G.2. c. 24. for restraining gaming in public-houses.—Nor on 31 G. 2.c. 29. for regulating bread.—Nor on 2 G. 3. c. 30. for preventing thefts in bumb-boats.-Nor to remove any conviction or adjudication under stat. 7, 8 G. 4. c. 29. (See § 73.)

For a long detail of further matter on the subject of certiorari, see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27.

By stats. 5 and 6 W. & M. c. 11. and 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 33. certiorari may be granted in vacation-time by any of the judges of B. R. and security is to be found before it is allowed. No certiorari is to be granted out of B. R. to remove an indictment, or presentment, before justices of peace at the sessions before trial, unless motion be made in open court, and the party indicted find security by two persons in 201. each to plead to the indictment in B. R. &c. And if the defendant prosecuting the certiorari be convicted, the court of B. R. shall order costs to the prosecutor of the indictment. In case af certiorari granted in vacation, the name of the judge and party applying to be indorsed on the writ. See tit. Habeas Corpus.

If on a certiorari to remove an indictment the party do not find manucaptors in the sum of 20l. to plead to the indictment and try it according to the statute, it is no supersedeas Mod. Ca. 33. And a procedendo may be granted where bails not put in before a judge, on a certiorari. As to costs, see 1 Wils. 139. 1 Burr. 54: 2 Term Rep. 47.

No judgment or order to be removed by certiorari, without sureties found to the amount of 50l. Stat. 5 G. 2. c. 19.

The 12th section of the stat. 38 G. 3.c.52. providing that no indictment shall be removed into the next adjoining county, except the person applying for such removal shall enter into a recognizance in 40l. for the extra costs, and does not relate to indictments sent by B. R. to be tried in the next adjoining county, after a removal thither by certiorari. Rex v. Nottingham, 4 East, 208.

Certiorari, to remove convictions, orders or proceedings of justices, to be applied for within six calendar months, and upon six days' notice to the justices. Stat. 13 G. 2. c. 18. See Stra. 991: 4 T. R. 211: 8 T. R. 219. And the six days' notice must be given before making the motion for a rule to show cause why such certiorari should not be granted. 5 T. See further 1 Maul. & Selw. Rep. R. 279. 631. 734. The provisions of this statute do not apply to indictments at the sessions, but only to proceedings of a lower denomination; therefore a certiorari to remove an indictment from the sessions may be sued out without giving the six days' previous notice. 1 E.R. See also this Dict. tit. Sessions.

The certiorari to remove a conviction of a glass-maker, by stat. 13 G. 2. c. 18. § 5. is not taken away from the crown, though it is from the defendant; the act being levelled against vexatious delays. 15 E. R. 339.

It is said, a certiorari to remove an indictment is good, although it bear date before the taking thereof: but on a certiorari the very record must be returned, and not a transcript of it; for if so, then the record will still remain in the inferior court. 2 Lill. 253. B. R. the very record itself of indictments is removed by certiorari; but usually in chancery, if a certiorari be returnable there, it removes only the tenour of the record; and therefore, if it be sent from thence into the King's Bench, they cannot proceed either to judgment or execution, because they have but such tenour of the record before them. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 215. In London a return of the tenour only is warranted by the city charters. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 26.76. Where justices, to whom a certiorari was directed, signed the return, but did not seal it, or add their description as justices, the court sent back the return to be amended. 6 Barn. § C. 640.

On a certiorari to remove a record out of an inferior court, the style of their court, and, against a magistrate for returning to a writ of power to hold plea, and before whom ought to certiorari, a conviction of a party in another be shown on their certificate. Jenk. Cent. 114. 232.

A certiorari to remove an order of bastardy should be applied for in six months. Rex v. Howlett, 1 Wils. 35.

If a certiorari be prayed to remove an indictment out of London or Middlesex, three days' notice must be given the other side, or the certiorari shall not be granted. Raym.

3. After a certiorari is allowed by the inferior court, it makes all the subsequent proceedings, on the record that is removed by it, erroneous. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 62. 64. But if a certiorari for the removal of an indictment before justices of peace be not delivered before the jury be sworn for the trial of it, the justices may proceed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 64.—And the justices may set a fine to complete their judgment after a certiorari delivered. Ld. Raym. 1515. See ante 1.

A certiorari removes all things done between the teste and return. Ld. Raym. 835. 1805. -And as it removes the record itself out of the inferior, court, therefore, if it remove the record against the principal, the accessary cannot be tried there. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. 8 54.—And if the defendant be convicted of a capital crime, the person of the defendant must be removed by habeas corpus, in order to be present in court, if he will move in arrest of judgment.-And herein the case of a conviction differs from that of a special verdict. Burr. 930.

Although on a habeas corpus to remove a person, the court may bail or discharge the prisoner, they can give no judgment upon the record of the indictment against him, without a certiorari to remove it; but the same stands in force as it did, and new process may issue upon it. 2 H. H. P. C. 211. If an indictment be one, but the offences several, where four persons are indicted together, a certiorari to remove this indictment against two of them, removes it not as to the others; but as to them the record remains below. 2 Hale's Hist. 214.

If a cause be removed from an inferior court by certiorari, the pledges in the court below are not discharged; because a defendant may bring a certiorari, and thereby the plaintiff may lose his pledges. Skin. Rep. 244. 246. A certiorari from K. B. is a supersedeas to restitution in a forcible entry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 62.

4. The return of a certiorari is to be under seal: and the person to whom a certiorari is directed may make what return he pleases, and the court will not stop the filing of it, on affidavit of its falsity, except where the public good requires it: the remedy for a false return is action on the case, at the suit of the party injured; and information, &c. at the suit of seal up, and send them both together with the the king. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 70.

The court refused a criminal information and more formal shape, than that in which it was first drawn up, and of which a copy had been delivered to the party convicted; the conviction returned being warranted by the facts. 1 E. R. 186.

If the person to whom the certiorari is directed do not make a return, then an alias, then a pluries, vel causam nobis significes quare, shall be awarded, and then an attachment. Cromp. 116.

FORM OF A CERTIONARI, TO CERTIFY THE RE-CORD OF A JUDGMENT.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the Mayor and Sheriffs of our city of E. and to every of them, in our court at the Guildhall there, greeting: Whereas A. B. hath lately in our said court in the said city, according to the custom of the same court, impleaded C. D. late of, &c. in an action of debt upon demand of thirty pounds; and thereupon, in our said court before you, obtained judgment against the said C. for the recovery of the said debt: and we, being desirous for certain reasons, that the said record should by you be certified to us, Do command you, that you send under your seals the record of the said recovery, with all things touching the same, into our court before us at Westminster, on the day, &c. plainly and distinctly, and in as full and ample manner as it now remains before you, together with this writ, so that we on the part of the said A. may be able to proceed to the execution of the said judgment, and do what shall appear to us of right ought to be done. Witness, &c.

The return of certiorari may be thus-First, on the back of the writ indorse these or similar words " The execution of this writ appears in a schedule to the same writ annexed." Which schedule may be in the following form, on a piece of parchment (not paper, 1 Barn. K. B. 113.), by itself, and filed to the Middlesex .- I, A. B. one of the keepers of the peace and justices of our lord the king, assigned to keep the peace within the said county, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors in the same county committed by virtue of this writ to me delivered, do under my seal certify unto his Majesty in his court of King's Bench, the indictment, of which mention is made in the same writ, together with all matters touching the said indictment. In witness whereof I, the said A. B. have to these presents set my seal. Given at --- in the said county, the - day of -, in the - year of the reign of -

Then take the record of the indictment. and close it within the above schedule, and certiorari.

CERT-MONEY, quasi certain money.]

Head-money paid yearly by the resiants of year's rent in arrear, and shall descrt the deseveral manors to the lords thereof, for the mised premises, leaving the same uncultivated certain keeping of the leet; and sometimes to the hundred: as the manor of Hook, in Dorsetshire, pays cert-money to the hundred of Egerdon. In ancient records this is called certum letæ. See Common Fine.

CERVISARII. The Saxons had a duty called drinclean that is retributio potus, payable by their tenant; and such tenants were in Domesday called cervisarii, from cervisia, ale, their chief drink: though cervisarius vulgarly signifies a beer or ale brewer.

CERURA. A mound, fence, or inclosure. Cart. priorat. de Thelesford, MS.

CESSAT EXECUTIO. In trespass against two persons, if it be tried and found against one, and the plaintiff takes his execution against him, the writ will abate as to the other; for there ought to be a cessat executio till it is tried against the other defendant. 10

E. 4. 1. See tit. Execution, &c.

CESSAVIT. A writ which lies (by the stats. of Gloucester, 6 E. 1. c. 4. and Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 21. 41.) when a man who holds lands by rent or other services, neglects or ceases to perform his services for two years together; or where a religious house hath lands given it, on condition of performing some certain spiritual service, as reading prayers, or giving alms, and neglects it; in either of which cases if the cesser or neglect shall have continued for two years, the lord or donor and his heirs shall have a writ of cessavit to recover the land itself. F. N. B. 208.—In some instances relating to religious houses, called Cessavit de Cantaria.

By the stat. of Gloucester, the cessavit does not lie for lands let upon fee farm rents, unless they have lain fresh and uncultivated for two years, and there be not sufficient distress upon the premises, or unless the tenant hath so inclosed the land, that the lord cannot come upon it to distrain. F. N. B. 209. 2 Inst. 298. For the law prefers the simple and ordinary remedies, by distress, &c. to this extraordinary one of forfeiture; and therefore the same statute has provided farther, that on tender of arrears and damages before judgment, and giving security for the future performances of the services (that he will no more cease), the process shall be at an end, and the tenant shall retain his land, to which the stat. of Westm. 2. conforms so far as may stand with convenience and reason of law. 2 Inst. 401, 460.

The stats. 4 G. 2. c. 28. and 11 G. 2. c. 19. seem evidently borrowed from the above ancient writ of cessavit .- The former of these statutes permits landlords who have a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent, to serve an ejectment on their tenants when half a year's rent is due, and no sufficient distress on the premises. See tit. Ejectment. And the same remedy is in substance adopted by the stat. 11 G. 2. c. 16. which enacts, that or unoccupied, so that no sufficient distress can be had, two justices of the peace (after notice affixed on the premises for fourteen days) may give the landlord possession thereof; and the lease shall be void. See tits. Distress, Lease, Rent.

By stat. Westm. 2. § 2. the heir of the demandant may maintain a cessavit against the heir or assignee of the tenant. But in other cases, the heir may not bring this writ for cessure in the time of his ancestor: and it lies not but for annual service, rent, and such like; not for homage or fealty. Termes de la Ley: New Nat. Br. 463. 464. The lord shall have a writ of cessavit against tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee to another: but the donor of an estate-tail shall not have a cessavit against the tenant in tail: though if a man make a gift in tail, the remainder over in fee to another, or to the heirs of the tenant in tail, there the lord of whom the lands are held immediate, shall have a cessavit against the tenant in tail, because that he is tenant to him, &c. Ibid. If the lord distrains pending the writ of cessavit against his tenant, the writ shall abate. The writ cessavit is directed to the sheriff, To command A. B. that, &c. he render to C. D. one messuage, which he holds by certain services, and which ought to come to the said C. by force of the statute, &c. because the said A. in doing those services had ceased two years, &c. Dict.

CESSE. An assessment or tax. Stat. 22 H. S. c. 3. In Ireland, it was anciently applied to an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for soldiers in garrison. Antiq. Hibernia.

CESSIO BONORUM. A process in the law of Scotland, similar in effect to that under the statutes relating to Bankruptcy in England. See Bankrupt.

ČESSION, Cessio.] A ceasing, yielding up, or giving over. When an ecclesiastical person is created bishop, or a parson of a parsonage takes another benefice, without dispensation or being otherwise not qualified, &c., in both cases their first benefices are become void, and are in the law said to be void by cession: and to those benefices that the person had who was created bishop, the king shall present for that time, whoever is patron of them; and in the other case, the patron may present. Cowel.

But cession in the case of bishops does not take place till consecration. Dyer, 223. See tit. Commendam, Advowson, II.

No person is entitled to dispensation, but chaplains of the king and others mentioned in the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13.; the brethren, and the sons of lords and knights (not of baronets), and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law in the universities of this realm. 1 Comm. 392. See tit. Chaplain.

Both the livings must have cure of souls; where any tenant at rack rent shall be one and the statute expressly excepts deaneries, archdeaconries, chancellorships, treasurerships, as a declaration, &c. Termes de la Ley. chanterships, prebends and sinecure rectories.

See tit. Chaplain, Parson.

In case of a cession under the statute, the church is so far void upon institution to the second living, that the patron may take notice of it, and present if he pleases; but it seems that a lapse will not incur from the time of instituiton against the patron, unless notice be given him; but it will from the time of induction. 2 Wils 200. 3 Burr. 1504. See tit. Advowson, II.

CESSOR, Lat.] He who ceaseth, or negleets so long to perform a duty, that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. Old Nat. Br. 136 .- See tit. Cessavit.

CESSURE, OR CESSOR. Ceasing, giving over; or departing from. Stat. Westm.

2. c. 1. See tit. Cessavit.

CESTUI QUE TRUST, or, cestui a que trust.]-Is he in trust for whom, or to whose use or benefit, another man is enfeoffed or seized of lands or tenements. By stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. lands of cestui que trust may be delivered in execution. See tits. Trusts, Uses. CESTUI QUE USE, more accurately as in old law tracts, cestui à que use, Fr. cestui a l'use de qui. He to whose use any other man is enfeoffed of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133. Fcoffees to uses were formerly deemed owners of the lands; but now the possession is adjudged in cestui que use, and without any entry he may bring assise, &c. Stat. 27 H. S. c. 10. Cro. Eliz. 46. See tit. Use.

CESTUI [a] QUE VIE. He for whose life any lands or tenements are granted. Perk.

97. See tit. Occupant.

CHACEA. A station of game more extended than a park, and less than a forest; and is sometimes taken for the liberty of chasing or hunting within such a district. And according to Blount it hath another signification, i. e. the way through which cattle are drove to pasture, commonly called in some places a drove way. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 44.

CHACEARE ad lepores, vel vulpes. To hunt hare or fox. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston.

MS. 87.

CHACURUS, from the Fr. chasseur.] A horse for the chase: or rather a hound or dog, a courser. Rot. 7 Johan.

CHAFEWAX. An officer in Chancery, that fitteth the wax for sealing of the writs, commissions, and such other instruments as are there made to be issued out.

CHALDRON OR CHALDER of coals.

See tit. Coals.

CHALKING. The merchants of the staple require to be eased of diverse new impositions, as chalking, ironage, wharfage, &c. Rot. Parl. 50 E. 3.

CHALLENGE. Calumnia, from the Fr. challenger.] An exception taken either against persons or things. Persons as to jurors, or any one or more of them: or in cases of felony, by the prisoner at the bar against things, 109. The former is the most frequent signification in which this term is used, and which shall here be shortly mentioned; referring for further matter to tits. Jury, Trial, in this Dictionary.

There are two kinds of challenge; either to the array, by which is meant the whole jury as it stands arrayed in the panel, or little square pane of parchment, on which the jurors' names are written; or to the polls: by which are meant the several particular persons or heads in the array. 1 Inst. 156. 8: 4 B. & A. 471.

Challenge to jurors is also divided into challenge principal or peremptory; and challenge per cause, i. e. upon cause or reason alleged: challenge principal or peremptory, is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or further examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned for felony, may challenge peremptorily the number allowed him by law, one after another, alleging no cause but his own dislike; and they shall be put off, and new taken in their places; but yet there is a difference between challenge principal, and challenge peremptory; the latter being used only in matters criminal, and barely without cause alleged; whereas the former is in civil actions for the most part, and by assigning some such cause of exception, as being found true the law allows. Staundf. P. C. 124. 157. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. c. 14.

Challenge to the favour, which is a species of challenge for cause, is where the plaintiff or defendant is tenant to the sheriff; or if the sheriff's son hath married the daughter of the party, &c. and is also when either party cannot take any principal challenge, but showeth cause of favour, and causes of favour are infinite. If one of the parties is of affinity to a juror, the juror hath married the plaintiff's daughter, &c. If a juror hath given a verdict before in the cause, matter, or title; if one labours a juror to give his verdict; if after he is returned, a juror eats and drinks at the charge of either party; if the plaintiff, &c. be his master, or the juror hath any interest in the thing demanded, &c. these are challenges to the favour. 2 Rol. Abr. 636. Hob. 294. See tit. Jury.

CHALLENGE TO FIGHT.—It is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the messenger of such a challenge, or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to send a challenge, or to fight; as by dispersing letters to that purpose, full of reflections, and insinuating a desire to fight, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63. § 3.

Though slanderous words are not generally indictable as such, they are indictable if spoken with intent to provoke a duel. 6 E. R. 471. But they are not indictable merely because they may produce a challenge. 4 Oust.

By stat. 9 An. c. 14. § 8. (see tit. Gaming;) "whoever shall [assault and beat,] or challenge, or provoke to fight, any other person or per-, Exchequer; and the standards of money, and sons whatsoever, upon account of any money won by gaming, playing, or betting at any of the games mentioned in that act, shall, on conviction by indictment or information, forfeit all their goods, chattels, and personal estate, and suffer imprisonment, without bail, in the county prison for two years."

The eighth section of the 9 Anne, c. 14. here mentioned, was repealed by the 9 G. 4. c.

31. See Gaming.

It is now every day's practice for the court of King's Bench to grant informations against persons sending challenges to justices of the peace, and in other heinous cases, and also to indict the party guilty of such acts. For further matter, see tit. Murder.

CHAMBERDEKINS, or Chamber deacons, were certain poor Irish scholars, clothed in mean habit, and living under no rule; or rather beggars banished England by stat. 1 H

5. c. 7. 8.

CHAMBERLAIN, Camerarius.] Is variously used in our laws, statutes, and chronicles; as first, there is Lord Great Chamberlain of England, to whose office belongs the goremment of the palace at Westminster; and upon all solemn occasions the keys of Westminster-Hall and the court of Requests are delivered to him; he disposes of the sword of state to be carried before the king when he comes to the parliament, and goes on the right hand of the sword next to the king's person: he has the care of providing all things in the House of Lords in the time of parliament; to him belongs livery and lodgings in the king's court, &c. And the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeoman usher, &c. are under his authority.

The office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England is hereditary; and where a person dies seized in fee of this office, leaving two sisters, the office belongs to both sisters, and they may execute it by deputy: but such deputy must be approved of by the king, and must not be of a degree inferior to a knight. 2 Bro. P. C. 146. Svo. ed.

The Lord Chamberlain of the Household has the oversight and government of all officers belonging to the king's chamber (except the bed-chamber, which is under the groom of the stole), and also of the wardrobe; of artificers retained in the king's service, messengers, comedians, revels, music, &c. The serjeants at arms are likewise under his inspection; and the king's chaplains, physicians, apothecaries, surgeons, barbers, &c. And he hath under him a vice-chamberlain, both being always privy counsellors.

There were formerly chamberlains of the king's courts. 7 E. 6. c. 1. And there are chamberlains of the Exchequer, who keep a controlment of the pells, of receipts and exitus, and have in their custody the leagues and treaties with foreign princes, many ancient records, the two famous books of antiquity called Domesday, and the Black Book of the been adjudged that under the word covenant, weights and measures are kept by them. There are also under-chamberlains of the Exchequer, who make searches for all records in the treasury; and are concerned in making out the tallies, &c. The office of chamberlain of the Exchequer is mentioned in the stat. 34 and 35 H. 8. c. 16. Besides these we read of a chamberlain of North Wales. Stowe, p. 641.

A chamberlain of Chester, to whom it belongs to receive the rents and revenues of that city; and when there is no Prince of Wales, and Earl of Chester, he hath the receiving and returning of all writs coming thither out of any of the king's courts. See tit. Counties

Palatine.

The chamberlain of London, who is commonly the receiver of the city rents payable into the chamber; and hath great authority in making and determining the rights of freemen; as also concerning apprentices, orphans, &c. See tit. London.

CHAMBERS OF THE KING, Regiæ cameræ.] The havens or ports of the kingdom are so called in our ancient records. Mare Claus. fol. 242.

CHAMBRE DEPEINTE. Anciently St. Edward's chamber, now called the painted chamber. See tit. Parliament.

CHAMPARTY, or CHAMPERTY, campi partitio, because the parties in champerty agree to divide the land, &c. in question.] A bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in any suit, to have part of the land, debt, or other thing sued for, if the party that undertakes it prevails therein. Whereupon the Champertor is to carry on the party's suit at his own expense. See 4 Comm. 135: 1 Inst. 368. It is a species of maintenance, and punished in the same manner. This seems to have been an ancient grievance in our nation; for notwithstanding the several statutes of Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 25: Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 49: 28 E. 1. stat. 3. c. 11: and 33 E. 1. stat. 3, &c. and a form of a writ framed to them; yet stats. 4 E. 3. c. 11. and 32 H. 8. c. 9. enacted, that whereas former statutes provided redress for this evil in the King's Bench only, from henceforth it should be lawful for justices of the Common Pleas, justices of assize, and justices of peace in their quarter sessions, to inquire, hear and determine this and such like cases, as well at the suit of the king, as of the party: and this offence is punishable by common law and statute; the stat. 33 E. 1. stat. 3. makes the offenders liable to three years' imprisonment, and a fine at the king's pleasure. By the stat. 28 E. 1. c. 11. it is ordained, that no officer, nor any other, shall take upon him any business in suit, to have part of the thing in plea; nor none upon any covenant, shall give up his right to another; and if any do, and be convicted thereof, the taker shall forfeit to the king so much of his lands and goods as amounts to the value of the part purchased.

In the construction of these statutes, it hath all kinds of promises and contracts are in- | or purchase any pretended right or title to cluded, whether by writing or parol: that rent | land, unless the vendor hath received the progranted out of lands in variance, is within the statute of champerty: and grants of part of the thing in suit made merely in consideration of the maintenance, or champerty, are within the meaning of this statute; but not such as are made in consideration of a precedent honest debt, which is agreed to be satisfied with the thing in demand when recovered. F. N. B. 172: 2 Inst. 209: 2 Rol. Abr. 113.

An agreement for sale, in which it was declared that the purchaser should be at liberty to continue actions, before then commenced, to recover rent then due, and damages for injuries done, upon the purchase, the purchaser paying the costs, and being to receive the damages, held not to be within the acts against champerty more especially (as the court said), where the purchaser is not an officer of the king. Williams v. Protheroe, 5 Bing. 309. Affirmed, 3 Y. & J. 179.

It is said not to be material, whether he who brings a writ of champerty, did in truth suffer any damage by it; or whether the plea wherein it is alleged be determined or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84. A conveyance executed pending a plea, in pursuance of a bargain made before, is not within the statutes against champerty; and if a man purchase land of a party, pending the writ, if it be bona fide, and not to maintain, it is not champerty, F. N. P. 272; 2 Rol. Abr. 113. But it hath been held, that the purchase of land while a suit of equity concerning it is depending, is within the purview of the statute 28 E. 1. stat. 3. c. 11: Moor, 665. A lease for life, or years, or a voluntary gift of land, is within the statutes of champerty; but not a surrender made by a lessee to his lessor; or a conveyance relating to lands in suit, made by a father to his son, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84.

The giving part of the lands in suit, after the end of it, to a counsellor for his reward, is not champerty, if there be no precedent bargain relating to such gift; but if it had been agreed between the counsellor and his client before the action brought, that he should have part of his reward, then it would be champerty. Bro. Champert. 3. And it is dangerous to meddle with any such gift, since it carries with it a strong presumption of champerty. 2 Inst. 564. If any attorney follow a cause to be paid in gross, when the thing in suit is recovered, it hath been adjudged that this is champerty. Hob. 117. An agreement to communicate such information as shall enable a party to recover money by action, and to exert influence for procuring evidence to substantiate the claim, on condition of receiving a portion of the money recovered, is illegal. Stanley v. Jones, 7 Bing. 369. Every champerty implies maintenance; but every maintenance is not champerty. Crom. Jur. 39: 2 Inst. 108.

To this head may be referred the provision of the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9. that no one shall sell fits thereof for one whole year before such grant; or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor. But an equitable interest under a contract of sale may be the subject of sale; the sub-contract converts the original vendee into a tender of his equitable interest for his vendor, who acquires the same rights which he had to the benefits to be derived under the primary contract. Such sub-contracts are not within the doctrines of champerty and maintenance. 1 Swans. 56. See tit. Maintenance.

CHAMPERTORS. Are defined by statute to be those who move pleas or suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and sue them at their proper costs, to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain. 33 E. 1. stat. 2.

See the preceding article.

CHAMPION, campio.] Is taken in the law not only for him that fights a combat in his own cause, but also for him that doth it in the place or quarrel of another. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2 cap. 21. And in Sir Edward Bishe's notes on Upton, fol. 36. it appears that Henry de Ferneberg, for thirty marks fee, did by charter covenant to be champion to Roger abbot of Glastenbury, An. 42 Hen. 3. These champions, mentioned in our law books and histories, were usually hired; and any one might hire them except parricides, and those who were accused of the highest offences: before they came into the field, they shaved their heads, and made oath that they believed the persons who hired them were in the right, and that they would defend their cause to the utmost of their power; which was always done on foot, and with no other weapon than a stick or club, and a shield; and before they engaged, they always made an offering to the church, that God might assist them in the battle. When the battle was over, the punishment of a champion overcome, and likewise of the person for whom he fought, was various; if it was the champion of a woman for a capital offence, she was burnt, and the champion hanged; if it was a man, and not for a capital crime, he not only made satisfaction, but had his right hand cut off; and the man was to be close confined in prison, till the battle was over. Brac. lib. 2. c. 35. See tits. Battel, Appeal of Death.

Victory in the trial by battle is obtained, if either champion proves recreaut; that is, yields and pronounces the horrible word craven; a word of disgrace and obloquy, rather than of any determinate meaning. But a horrible word it indeed is to the vanquished champion: since as a punishment to him for forfeiting the land of his principal, by pronouncing that shameful word, he is condemned as a recreant, to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber et legalis homo; he is the chief administrator of justice next being supposed by the event to be proved forsworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witness in any cause. 3 Comm. 340.

CHAMPION OF THE KING, campio regis.] An ancient officer, whose office it is at the coronation of our kings, when the king is at dinner, to ride armed cap-a-pie into Westminster Hall, and by the proclamation of a herald, make a challenge, That if any man shall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in single combat, &c. Which being done, the king drinks to him, and sends him a gilt cup with a cover full of wine, which the champion drinks, and hath the cup for his fee. This office, ever since the coronation of King Richard II. when Baldwin Freville exhibited his petition for it, was adjudged from him to Sir John Dymocke his competitor, (both claiming from Marmion,) and hath continued ever since in the family of the Dymockes; who hold the main Lincolnshire, hereditary from the Marmions, by grand serjeanty, viz. That the lord thereof shall be the king's champion, as abovesaid. Accordingly Sir Edward Dymocke performed this office at the coronation of King Charles II. And a person of the name of Dymocke performed it at the coronation of George the Third.

CHANCE. Where a man commits an unlawful act, by misfortune, or chance, and not by design, it is a deficiency of the will; as here it observes a total neutrality, and doth not co-operate with the deed; which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. Of this, as it affects the life of another, see tit. Murder.-It is to be observed however generally, that if any accidental mischief happens to follow from the performance of a lawful act, the party stands excused from all guilt; but if a man be doing any thing unlawful, and a consequence ensues which he did not foresee or intend, as the death of a man or the like, his want of foresight shall be no excuse; for being guilty of one offence, in doing antecedently what is in itself unlawful, he is criminally guilty of whatever consequence may follow the first misbehaviour. 1 Hal. P. C. 39. See tit. Chance, Medley.

CHANCELLOR, Cancellarius.] Was at first only a chief notary or scribe under the emperor, and was called cancellarius, because he sate intra cancellos, to avoid the crowd of the people. This word is by some derived from cancello, and by others from cancellis, an inclosed or separated place, or chancel, encompassed with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the pub-And cancellarius originally, as Lupanus thinks, signified only the register in court; Grapharios, scil qui conscribendis et excipendis judicum actis dant operam : but this name and officer is of late times greatly advanced, though he was dismissed from that office, and to the Sovereign, who anciently heard equitable causes himself.

All other Justices in this kingdom are tied to the strict rules of the law in their judg. ments; but the Chancellor hath power to moderate the written law, governing his judgment by the law of nature and conscience. and ordering all things juxta æquum et bo. num; and having the king's power in these matters, he hath been called the keeper of the king's conscience. It has been suggested. that the Chancellor originally presided over a political college of secretaries, for the writing of treaties, grants, and other public business, and that the court of equity under the old constitution was held before the king and his council in the palace, where one supreme court for business of every kind was kept: and at first the Chancellor became a judge to hear and determine petitions to the king, which were referred to him; and in the end, as business increased, the people entitled their suits to the Chancellor, and not the king; and thus the Chancellor's equitable power had by degrees commencement by prescription. Hist. Cham. p. 3. 10. 44, &c.

Staunford says, the Chancellor hath two powers; one absolute, the other ordinary: meaning, that although, by his ordinary power, in some cases, he must observe the form of proceeding as other inferior judges; in his absolute power he is not limited by the law, but by conscience and equity, according to the circumstances of things. See post tit.

And though Polydore Virgil, in his Hiscalled the Conqueror, the founder of our Chancellors, yet Dugdale has shown that there were many Chancellors of England long before that time, which are mentioned in his Origines Juridicales, and catalogues of Chancellors; and Sir Edward Coke, in his fourth Institute saith, it is certain, that both the British and Saxon kings had their Chancellors, whose great authority under their kings were in all probability drawn from the reasonable custom of neighbouring nations and the civil law.

He that bears this chief magistracy, is styled the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, which is the highest honour of the long robe. There is also a Lord High Chancellor of Ireland. But the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain is to certain purposes keeper of the great seal of the United Kingdom. See stat. 53 G. 3. c. 24. for appointing the Vice-Chancellor of England.

A Chancellor may be made so at will, by patent, but it is said not for life; for being an ancient office, it ought to be granted as hath been accustomed. 2 Inst. 87. But Sir Edward Hyde, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, had a patent to be Lord Chancellor for life, not only in this, but in other kingdoms; for the patent declared void. 1 Sid. 338.

By the English stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 18. (not, offices; and it seems that the Lord Keeper extended to Ireland) the Lord Chancellor and Keeper have one and the same power; and therefore since that statute, there cannot be a Lord Chancellor and Lord Keeper at the same time; before there might and had been. 4 Inst. 78. King Henry V. had a great seal of gold, which he delivered to the Bishop of Durham, and made him Lord Chancellor, and also another of silver, which he delivered to the Bishop of London to keep. But the Lord Bridgman was Lord Keeper, and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, at the same time; which offices were held not to be inconsistent. Ibid.

By stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21. commissioners appointed to execute the office of Lord Chancellor, may exercise all the authority, jurisdiction, and execution of laws, which the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, of right ought to use and execute, &c. since which statute this high office hath been several times in commission. Although this stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21. is not expressly extended to Ireland, yet see stat. 42 G. 3. c. 105. which increases the salary of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland to 10,000l. a year, by which it is provided that when the great seal there is in commission, the salary may be apportioned.

With respect to the LORD CHANCELLOR or LORD KEEPER (with reference to Great Britain, except where special mention is made of Ireland), the office is now created by the mere delivery of the King's great seal into his custody; whereby he becomes, without writ or patent, an officer of the greatest weight and power of any now subsisting in the kingdom, and superior in point of precedency to every temporal lord .- And the act of taking away this seal by the king, or of its being resigned or given up by the Chancellor, determines his office. (See 1 Sid. 338.) He is a privy counsellor by his office; and according to Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, prolocutor of the House of Lords by prescription.—To him belongs the appointment of all justices of peace throughout the kingdom.—Being formerly usually an Ecclesiastic (for none else were then capable of an office so conversant in writings) and presiding over the Royal Chapel, he became keeper of the King's conscience; ne became keeper of the king's conscience; visitor in right of the king of all hospitals and colleges of the king's foundation, and patron of all the king's livings under the value of twenty marks a year in the king's books. (38 Ed. 3. c. 3. F. N. B. 35. though Hob. 214, extends this value to twenty pounds.)—He is the general guardian of all infants idiots and livestics; and has the general contents. infants, idiots, and lunatics; and has the general superintendence of all charitable uses in the kingdom. And all this over and above the vast and extensive jurisdiction which he exercises in his judicial capacity in the Court of Chancery. 3 Comm. 47.

The stat. 25 E. 3. c. 2. declares it to be treason to slay the Chancellor (and certain and Commissioners of the great seal are within this statute by virtue of stats. 5 Eliz. c. 18. and 1 W. & M. c. 21. already mentioned. See tit. Treason.

The Lord Chancellor, when there is no Lord High Steward, is accounted the first officer of the kingdom; and he not only keeps the king's great seal, but all patents, commissions, warrants, &c. from the king, are perused and examined by him before signed; and Lord Coke says the Lord Chancellor is so termed a cancellando from cancelling the king's letters patent, when granted contrary to law; which is the highest point of his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. 88. He by his oath swears well and truly to serve the king, and to do right to all manner of people, &c. In his judicial capacity, he hath divers assistants and officers, viz. the Vice-Chancellor of England, the Master of the Rolls, the Masters in Chancery, &c. in England and Ireland. In matters of difficulty, the Chancellor frequently calls one or more of the chief justices and judges to assist him in making his decrees; though in such cases they only give their advice and opinion, and have no share whatever of the judicial authority. See stat. 1 G. 3. c. 1. § 6. whereby his Majesty is empowered to grant 5000l. a year out of the Post-office revenue to the Lord Chancellor.

By 2 & 3 W.4.c. 111. the King may grant an annuity of 5000l. per annum to the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, on his resignation of his office.

The Master of the Rolls in England has judicial power, and is an assistant to the Lord Chancellor when present, and his deputy when absent; but he has certain causes assigned him to hear and decree, which he usually doth on certain days appointed at the chapel of the Rolls, being assisted by one or more masters in chancery: he is, by virtue of his office, chief of the masters of chancery, and chief of the petty-bag office. See 3 G. 2. c. 30. tit. Decree.

The power of the Master of the Rolls in-Ireland is assimilated to that of the like officer in England, and his salary, &c. ascertained by stats. 41 G. 3. c. 25. 55 G. 3. c. 114.

The power of the Vice-Chancellor was introduced and established by stats. 53 G. 3. c. 24. (See also 6 G. 4. c. 84. and as to his secretary, &c. 55 G. 3. c. 64. p. 2.) The Crown is empowered to appoint by letters patent, some barrister of fifteen years' standing to be an additional Judge and Assistant to the Lord Chancellor Lord Kapper or Torde County Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, in the discharge of their respective offices, to be called Vice-Chancellor of England, to hold such office during his good behaviour.

Such Vice-Chancellor is empowered to hear and determine all causes depending in the treason to slay the Chancellor (and certain court of chancery in England, either as a other judges) being in their places doing their court of law or equity, or incident to any ministerial office of the said court, or submitted to such court or to the Lord Chancellor, &c. by any act of parliament, as the Chancellor, &c. shall direct; and all decrees, orders, &c. made by the Vice-Chancellor shall be valid, as acts of the court, but subject to be reversed or altered by the Lord Chancellor, &c. and no such decree, &c. shall be enrolled till signed by the Chancellor, &c. It is expressly provided that the Vice-Chancellor shall not have the power to reverse or alter any decree, &c. made by the Chancellor, &c. unless authorised by the Chancellor, &c. so to do; nor to reverse any decree or order of the Master of the Rolls.

Vice-Chancellor shall sit for the Chancellor, &c. when required, and while the Chancellor is also sitting, and have a separate court, and shall rank next to the Master of the Rolls, and have a secretary, train-bearer, usher, &c. He may be removed by address of both houses. His salary 5000l. per ann. to be paid out of the interest of unclaimed suitors' money. See further tit. Chancery.

The Twelve Masters in Chancery sit some of them in court, and take notice of such references as are made to them, to be reported to the court, relating to matters of practice, the state of the proceedings, accounts, &c. and they also take affidavits, acknowledge deeds and recognizances, &c. See tit. Chan-

The Six Clerks in chancery transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue out some patents that pass the great seal: which business is done by their under clerks, each of whom has a seat there, and whereof every six clerk has a certain number in his office, usually about ten; the whole body being called the sixty clerks. See tit. Chancery.

By 55 G. 3. c. 114. & 3—6. the Six Clerks in Ireland are allowed to sell their offices with the consent of the Master of the Rolls, &c.

The Cursitors of the court, four and twenty in number, make out all the original writs in chancery, which are returnable in C. B. &c. and among these the business of the several counties is severally distributed.

The Registrar is a place of great importance in this court, and he hath several deputies under him, to take cognizance of all orders and decrees, and enter and draw them up, &c. See tit. Chancery.

The Master of the Subpana Office issues out all writs of subpæna.

The Examiners are officers in this court, who take the depositions of witnesses, and are to examine them and make out copies of the depositions.

The Clerk of the Affidavits files all affidavits used in court, without which they will not be admitted.

The Clerk of the Rolls sits constantly in the rolls to make searches for deeds, offices, &c. and to make out copies.

The Clerks of the Petty-Bag Office, in number three, have great variety of business that goes through their hands, in making out writs of summons to parliament, conge d'elires for bishops, patents for customers; liberates upon extent of statute-staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, &c. And also relating to suits for and against privileged persons, &c. And the clerks of this office have several clerks under them.

The Usher of the Chancery had formerly the receiving and custody of all money ordered to be deposited in court, and paid it back again by order: but this business was afterwards assumed by the masters in chancery, till by stat. 12 G. 1. c. 32. a new officer was appointed, called The Accountant General, to receive the money lodged in court, and convey the same to the Bank, to be there kept for the suitors of the court. See tit. Accountant General.

There is also a Serjeant at Arms, to whom persons standing in contempt are brought up by his substitute as prisoners.

A Warden of the Fleet, who receives such prisoners as stand committed by the court, Besides these offices, there is a clerk of the crown in Chancery; clerk and controller of the hanaper; clerk for inrolling letters patent. &c. not employed in proceedings of equity, but concerned in making out commissions, patents, pardons, &c. under the great seal, and collecting the fees thereof. A clerk of the faculties, for dispensations, licences, &c.; clerk of the presentations, for benefices of the crown in the chancellor's gift; clerk of appeals, on appeals from the courts of the archbishop to the court of chancery: and divers other officers, who are constituted by the chancellor's commission.—By the 2 & 3 W. 4. c. 111. the offices of Keeper, or Clerk of the Hanaper, the Patentee of the Subpœna Office, the Registrar of Affidavits, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the Clerk of the Patents, the Clerk of the Custodies of Lunatics and Idiots, the Prothonotary of the Court of Chancery, the Chaff Wax, the Sealer, the Clerk of the Presentations, the Clerk of Emoluments in Bankruptcy, the Clerk of Dispensations and Faculties, and the Patentee for the execution of the laws and statutes concerning Bankrupts, are abolished after 20th August, 1833, provided that nothing in the act shall determine any of the aforesaid officers then holding in possession or revenue, by any person appointed thereto, on or before the 1st June next, until the demise or resignation of such person. See further, tits. Chancery, Judges.

CHANCELLOR OF A DIOCESE; Or, OF A BISHOP. A person appointed to hold the Bishop's courts, and to assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law. This officer, as well as all other ecclesiastical ones, if lay or married, must be a doctor of the civil law, so created in some university. Stat. 87 H. 8. c. 17.

CHANCELLOR OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER.

An officer before whom, or his deputy, the berate intention of doing any mischief at all. court of the Duchy Chamber of Lancaster is This is a special jurisdiction concerning all manner of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Duchy of Lancaster. Hob. 77. 2 Lev. 24. This is a thing very distinct from the county palatine, which hath also its separate chancery for sealing of writs and the like. 1 Ventr. 257. This Duchy comprises much territory which! lies at a vast distance from the county, as particularly a very large district surrounded by the City of Westminster. The proceedings in this court are the same as on the equity side of the courts of Exchequer and Chancery. 4 Inst. 206. So that it seems not to be a court of record: and it has been holden that those courts have a concurrent jurisdiction with the Duchy Court, and may take cognizance of the same causes. 1 C. R. 55. Toth. 145. Hard. 171. See tit Equity.

This court is held in Westminster-hall, and was formerly much used. Under the chan-cellor of the Duchy are an attorney of the court, one chief clerk or register, and several auditors, &c. See further tit. Counties Pa-

CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER. Is likewise a great officer, who, it is thought by many, was originally appointed for the qualifying extremities in the Exchequer: he sometimes sits in court, and in the Exchequer Chamber; and, with the judges of the court, orders things to the king's best benefit. He is mentioned in stat. 25 H. 8. c. 16. and hath by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. power with others, to compound for the forfeitures upon penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into to the king: he hath also great authority in the management of the royal revenue, &c. which seems of late to be his chief business, being commonly the first commissioner of the treasury. And though the court of equity in the Exchequer-Chamber was intended to be holden before the treasurer, chancellor, and barons, it is usually before the barons only. When there is a lord-treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer is under treasurer.

As to the Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, see Stow's Annals, page 706.—Čhancellor of the Universities, see tit. Courts of the Universities .- The office of Chancellor in Cathedral Churches is thus described in the Monasticon. "Lectiones legendas in ecclesia per se vel per suum vicarium auscultare, male legentes emendare, scholas conferre, sigilla ad causas conferre literas capituli facere et consignare, libros servare, quotiescunque voluerit prædicare, prædicationis in ecclesia vel extra ecclesiam predicare, et cui voluerit prædicationis officium assignare." CHANCE-MEDLEY. From the Fr. chance, lapsus, and meler, miscere.] Such killing of a man as happens either [in self de- | therefore, to maintain a suit in chancery, it is fence] on a sudden quarrel; or in the com-lalways alleged that the the plaintiff is incapamission of an unlawful act, without any deli- ble of obtaining relief at common law; and

1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 1.

The self-defence here meant is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault or the like in the course of a sudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And that is what the law expresses by this word chance-medley, or as some rather choose to write it, chaud-medley; the former of which, in its etymology, signifies a casual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion; both of them of pretty much the same import; but the former is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of homicide by misadventure; whereas it appears by stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5. and in ancient law books, that it is properly applied to such killing as happens to self-defence, in a sudden rencounter. 4 Comm. 183. cites Stamf. P. C. 16: 3 Inst. 55.7: Foster, 275, 6. This being in fact a species of excusable homicide, comes more properly under the division of murder, and is therefore treated of in that place. See tit. Homicide. By 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 10. no punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any peron killing another by misfortune or in self-defence, or in any other manner without felony.

CHANCERY. CANCELLARIA.] The highest court of judicature in this kingdom next to the parliament, and of very ancient institution. The jurisdiction of this court is of two kinds; ordinary and extraordinary. The ordinary jurisdiction is that wherein the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, &c. in his proceedings and judgments is bound to observe the order and method of the common law; and the extraordinary jurisdiction is that which this court exercises in cases of equity.

The Ordinary Court holds plea of recognizances acknowledged in the Chancery, writs of scire facias for repeal of letters patent, writs of partition, &c. and also of all personal actions, by or against any officer of the court; and by acts of parliament of several offences and causes. All original writs, commissions of bankrupt, of charitable uses, and other commissions, as idiots, lunacy, &c. issue out of this court, for which it is always open; and sometimes a supersedeas, or writ of privilege, hath been here granted to discharge a person out of prison. An habeas corpus, prohibition, &c. may be had from this in the vacation; and here a subpæna may be had to force witnesses to appear in other courts, where they have no power to call them. 4 Inst. 79: 1 Danv. Abr. 776.

The Extraordinary Court, or Court of Equity, proceeds by the rules of equity and conscience, and moderates the rigour of the common law, considering the intention rather than the words of the law. Equity being the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient. On this ground,

A modern writer, (Mr. Mitford, afterwards Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with the title of Lord Redesdale) remarks, that it is not a very casy task accurately to describe the jurisdiction of our courts of equity. They who have attempted it have generally failed.

Early in the history of our jurisprudence, the administration of justice by the ordinary courts appears to have been incomplete. To supply the defect, the courts of equity have gained an establishment; assuming the power of enforcing the principles, upon which the ordinary courts also decide when the powers of those courts or their modes of proceeding are insufficient for the purpose; -of preventing those principles, when enforced by the ordinary courts, from becoming, contrary to the purpose of their original establishment, instruments of injustice ; -and of deciding on principles of univeral justice, where the interference of a court of judicature is necessary to prevent a wrong, and the positive law is silent. The courts of equity also administer to the ends of justice, by removing impediments to the fair decision of a question in the other courts; by providing for the safety of property in dispute, pending a litigation; by restraining the assertion of doubtful rights, in a manner productive of irreparable damage; by preventing injury to a third person from the doubtful title of others; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppressive litigations and preventing unnecessary multiplicity of suits; and, without pronouncing any judgment on the subject, by compelling a discovery which may enable other courts to give their judgment; and by preserving testimony, when in danger of being lost, before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation. This establishment has obtained throughout the whole system of our judicial policy; most of the inferior branches of that system having their peculiar courts of equity: [e. g. the Court of Exchequer, courts of Wales, the counties palatine, cinque ports, &c.] and the Court of Chancery assuming a general jurisdiction in cases which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of other jurisdictions. Mitford's Treatise on the Pleadings in Chancery, 8vo. 1787. 2d edition. See further as to the origin and jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in general, this Dictionary, tit. Equity.

this must be without any fault of his own, as; can be enumerated with any degree of accuracy in such a work as this.

There are in England two supreme courts of Equity, the High Court of Chancery, and the Exchequer; in the latter, except tithe suits, little business of importance is transacted.

The former is composed of three tribunals, respectively presided over by the LORD CHAN-CELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and the VICE CHANCELLOR. Before either of these judges may be brought any cases, except such as relate to lunatics, which must be heard by the Chancellor. The Vice Chancellor is compelled to hear all matters which the Chancellor may direct, in addition to those originally set down in his own court. The decrees, orders, and acts of the former are liable to be reversed, discharged, or altered in the latter.

The subordinate officers of the court are, the Masters, Six-Clerks, Registrars. The Masters are twelve in number, including the Master of the Rolls and Accountant General, or superintendant of the funds in court. The duties of these officers (who formerly had a seat on the woolsack in the House of Lords, and are still employed there, chiefly in carrying messages to the Commons,) are-to inquire into alleged impertinence or scandal in any bill or answer, and into the sufficiency of any answer or examination, -to take accounts of executors, trustees, and others,-to inquire into and decide upon the claims of creditors, legatees, and next of kin,—to appoint receivers of the proceeds of estates in litigation, fix their salaries, and examine their accounts,-to sell estates,-to appoint guardians and allow proper sums for the maintenance of infants,-to appoint Committees of the persons and estates of lunatics,-to decide upon the sufficiency of titles and tax the costs of all proceedings in court: they are always chosen from the bar. The Six Clerks are the only recognised attornies for conducting equitable suits, and by one of them every party in court must be represented. They file bills, answers, and other records; each of them is allowed twelve assistants, that is, ten sworn (sworn not to pillage the records), and two waiting clerks; and by these all the business of the court was transacted previous to the year 1729, when attornies in general were admitted, since which, their numbers have decreased from seventy-two to eighteen. There are four Registrars, two entering Registrars, and eight clerks, from whom vacancies are supplied. The four Registrars sit in turn before the three Judges, and take notes of all orders and decrees, which are afterwards entered in the general register kept in the office; they also make and sign copies of decrees for parties who may require them.

A suit in chancery is commenced by bill in the nature of a petition, praying relief, and a subpæna to compel the defendant to appear It is not therefore to be expected that all and answer. The bill having been filed, a the cases within the jurisdiction of this court writ of subpoena issues commanding the defendant, under penalty of 100l. to appear per-, glish bill, by way of distinction from the prosonally on a certain day, wherever the court ceedings in suits within the ordinary jurisshall be, " to answer those things which shall be then and there objected to him." On it is endorsed, "at the suit of A. B." If the defendants are numerous, it is usual to insert three names in each subpæna; service being effected by leaving a label, and showing the body of the subpæna to the two first, and leaving it with the last. Having appeared, the defendant may demur, plead, or answer; all or any of them. If he answers, the plaintiff may file exceptions, that is, object to the sufficiency of the answer. To these exceptions the defendant either submits, or he suffers them to be referred to the Master, who hears the parties by their counsel, and reports his opinion upon the question to the court; from this decision an appeal lies to the court itself. The second answer, which may also be excepted to, having been put in, the plaintiff is allowed to amend. Amendments generally require a further answer, and a repetition of the proceedings. The cause being at issue, witnesses are examined upon interrogatories prepared by counsel, the answers to which are delivered orally, and immediately reduced to writing. The depositions are afterwards made public, and copies given out to the parties interested. The cause having been heard upon statements of the bill, answer, interrogatories, and depositions, the court pronounces judgment, from minutes of which, taken at the time, and from the senior counsel's brief, the Registrar draws up the decree, prefacing it by an abstract of such parts of the pleadings as have reference to the directions of the

The following is a general and comprehensive view of the nature and reason of the pleadings in chancery, extracted and abridged from Mr. Mitford's Treatise. See also 3 Comm. 446, &c.

Previous to entering on the subject it should be remembered, that chancery will not retain a suit for any thing under 10l. value, except in cases of charity, nor for lands under 40s.

A suit to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court of chancery, on behalf of a subject merely, is commenced by preferring a bill (signed by counsel) in the nature of a petition to the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners of the great seal; or to the king himself, in his Court of Chancery, in case the person holding the seal is a party, or the seal is in the king's hand. But if the suit is instituted on behalf of the crown, or of those who partake of its prerogative, or whose rights are under its particular protection, as the objects of a public charity, the matter of complaint is offered by way of information, given by the proper officer [usually the attorney-general.] Except in some few instances, bills and informations have been always in the English language; and a suit thus preferred diction of the court, which, till the statute of 4 G. 2. c. 26. were entered and enrolled more anciently in the French or Roman tongue. and afterwards in the Latin; in the same manner as the pleadings in the other courts of common law.

Every bill must have for its object one or more of the grounds upon which the jurisdiction of the court is founded; and as that jurisdiction sometimes extends to decide on the subject, and in some cases is only ancillary to the decision of another court, or a future suit, the bill may-1, either complain of some injury which the person exhibiting it suffers, and pray relief, according to the injury; or, 2, without praying relief, may seek a discovery of matter necessary to support or defend another suit; or, 3, although no actual injury is suffered, it may complain of a threatened wrong; and, stating a probable ground of possible injury, may pray the assistance of the court to enable the plaintiff, or person exhibiting the bill, to defend himself against the injury whenever it shall be attempted to be committed.

· As the Court of Chancery has general jurisdiction in matters of equity which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of inferior jurisdictions, it assumes a control over those jurisdictions, by removing from them suits which they are incompetent to determine. To effect this it requires the party injured to institute a suit in the Court of Chancery, the sole object of which is, the removal of the former suit, by means of the writ of certiorari; and the prayer of the bill used for this purpose is confined to that ob-

The bill except it merely prays the writ of certiorari [in which case it does not require any defence, nor can there be any pleading beyond the bill, requires the answer of the defendant or party complained of, upon oath; unless the party is entitled to privilege of peerage, or as a lord of parliament, or, unless a corporation aggregate is made a party. In the first case the answer is required upon the honor of the defendant, and in the latter under the corporation seal.

In the case of exhibiting a bill against a peer, the Lord Chancellor writes a letter to him, called a letter missive, and if he does not put in his answer, a subpæna issues, and then an order to show cause why a sequestration should not issue; and if he still stands out, then a sequestration is granted; for there can be no process of contempt against the person of a peer: the process is the same against a member of the House of Commons, except the letter missive.] See tit. Privilege, III.

An answer is thus required in the case of a bill, seeking the decree of the court on the subject of the complaint, with a view-1. To obtain an admission of the case made by the is therefore commonly termed a suit by En- bill either in aid of proof; or-2. To supply the want of it—8. To obtain a discovery of the points in the plaintiff's case, controverted by the defendant, and—4. Of the grounds on which they are controverted—5. To gain a discovery of the case on which the defendant relies; and—6. Of the manner in which he means to support it.

If the bill seeks only the assistance of the court to protect the plaintiff against a future injury, the answer of the defendant, upon oath, may be required to obtain an admission of the plaintiff's title, and a discovery of the claims of the defendant, and the grounds on which those claims are intended to be supported.

When the sole object of the bill is a discovery of matter necessary to support or defend another suit, the oath of the defendant is required to compel that discovery; which oath, however, the plaintiff may, if he thinks proper, dispense with, by consenting to, or obtaining an order of court for the purpose; and this is frequently done for the convenience of parties.

To the bill thus preferred (unless it is merely for a certiorari) it is necessary for the person or persons complained of to make defence, or to disclaim all rights to the matters in question.

As the bill calls upon the defendant to answer the several charges it contains, he must do so, unless he can dispute the right of the plaintiff to compel such answer; either, 1. From some impropriety in requiring the discovery sought; or, 2. From some objection to the proceeding to which the discovery is proposed to be assistant; or, 3. Unless by disclaiming all right to the matters in question, he shows a further answer from him to be unnecessary.

The grounds on which defence may be made to a bill, either by answer, or by disputing the right of the plaintiff to compel such answer, are various. 1. The subject of the suit may not be within the jurisdiction of a court of equity; 2. Some other court of equity may have the proper jurisdiction. 3. The plaintiff may not be entitled to sue, by reason of some personal disability. 4. The plaintiff may not be the person he pretends to be. 5. He may have no interest in the subject; or, 6. Though he has such interest he may have no right to call upon the defendant concerning it. 7. The defendant may not be the person he is alleged to be by the bill; or, 8. He may not have that interest in the subject to make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff .-- And notwithstanding all these requisites concur.-9. Still the plaintiff may not be entitled in the whole, or in part, to the relief or assistance he prays; or, 10. Even if he is so entitled, the defendant may also have rights in the subject which may require the attention of the court, and call for its interference to adjust the rights of all parties.-The effecting complete justice, and finally determining, as far as possible, all questions concerning the subject being the constant aim of courts of equity.

Some of these grounds may extend only to entitle the defendant to dispute the plaintiff's claim to the relief prayed by the bill; and may not be sufficient to protect him from making the discovery sought by it: and where there is no ground for disputing the plaintiff's right to relief, or if no relief is prayed, the impropriety or immateriality of the discovery may protect the defendant from making it.

The form of making defence varies according to the foundation on which it is made, and the extent in which it submits to the judge ment of the court.-If it rests on the bill, and, on the foundation of the matter there apparent, demand the judgment of the court, whether the suit shall proceed at all, it is termed A Demurrer. If on the foundation of new matter offered, it demands judgment whether the defendant shall be compelled to answer further, it assumes a different form, and is termed A Plea. If it submits to answer generally the charges in the bill, demanding the judgment of the court on the whole case made on both sides, it is offered in shape still different, and is simply called An Answer. If the defendant disclaims all interest in the matters in question, his answer to the complaint made is different from all the others, and is termed A Disclaimer. And these several forms, or any of them, may be used together, if applied to separate and distinct parts of the bill.

A Demurrer, being founded on the bill itself, necessarily admits the truth of the facts contained in the bill, or in that part of it to which the demurrer extends; and therefore, as no fact can be in question between the parties, the court may immediately proceed to pronounce its definitive judgment on the demurrer: which, if favourable to the defendant, puts an end to so much of the suit as the demurrer extends to. A demurrer thus allowed consequently prevents any further proceeding.

A Plea is also intended to prevent further proceeding at large, by resting on some point founded on matter stated in the plea: and it therefore admits, for the purposes of the plea, the truth of the facts contained in the bill, so far as they are not controverted by facts stated in the plea. Upon the sufficiency of this defence, the court will also give immediate judgment, supposing the facts stated in it to be true: but the judgment, if favourable to the defendant, is not definitive; for the truth of the plea may be denied by A Replication, and the parties may then proceed to examine witnesses, the one to prove and the other to disprove the facts stated in the plea. The replication in this case concludes the pleadings, though if the truth of the plea is not supported, further proceedings may be had, which will be noticed presently.

An Answer generally controverts' the fact stated in the bill, or some of them; and states other facts to show the rights of the defendant, in the subject of the suit; but sometimes it admits the truth of the case made by the bill, and either with or without stating additional facts, submits the questions arising upon the case, thus made, to the judgment of the court. If an answer admits the facts stated in the bill, or such of them as are material to the plaintiff's case; and states no new facts, or such only as the plaintiff is willing to admit, no further pleading is necessary; the court will decide on the answer, considering it as true. So if the sole object of the suit is to obtain a discovery, there can be no proceeding beyond an answer by which the discovery is obtained. But if necessary to maintain the plaintiff's case, the truth of the answer, or of any part of it may be denied, and the sufficiency of the bill may be asserted by a replication, which in this case also concludes the pleadings according to the present practice of the court.

If a Demurrer or Plea is overruled upon argument, the defendant must make a new defence. This he cannot do by a second demurrer of the same extent with that overruled; for although, by a standing order of the court, a cause of demurrer must be set forth in the pleading, yet if that is overruled, any other cause appearing on the bill may be offered on argument of the demurrer, and, if valid, will be allowed, the rule of court affecting only the costs. But after a demurrer has been overruled, new defence may be made by a demurrer less extended, or by plea or answer.-And after a plea has been overruled, defence may be made by demurrer, by a new plea, or by an answer, and the proceeding upon the new defence will be the same as if it had been originally made.

mits of no further pleading.

Suits thus instituted are sometimes imperfect in their frame, or become so by accident before their end has been obtained; and the interests in the property in litigation may be changed, pending the suit, in various ways .--To supply the defects arising from any such circumstances, new suits may become necessary, to add to, or continue, or obtain the benefit of, the original suit. A litigation commenced by one party, sometimes renders necessary a litigation by another party, to operate as a defence, or to obtain a full decision on the rights of all parties. [And bills filed for this purpose are termed cross bills.]-Where the court has given judgment on a suit, it will in some cases permit that judgment to be controverted, suspended, or avoided by a second suit; and sometimes a second suit becomes necessary to carry into execution a judgment of the court. Suits instituted for any of these purposes are also commenced by bill; and hence arises a variety of distinctions of the kinds of bills necessary to answer the several purposes; as bills of review (which among other causes may be brought, where new matter is discovered, in time, after subpana, in order to answer, upon affidavit of 3 Comm. 448. &c. and tits. Review, Revivor ;] and on all the different kinds of bills there may be the same pleadings as on a bill used for instituting an original suit.

It frequently happens, that pending a suit, the parties discover some error or defect in some of the pleadings; and if this can be rectified by amendment of the pleadings, the court will in many cases permit it. This indulgence is most extensive in the case of bills: which being often framed upon an inaccurate state of the case, it was formerly the practice to supply their deficiencies, and avoid the consequences of errors by special replications: but this tending to long and intricate pleading, the special replication, requiring a rejoinder in which the defendant might in like manner supply defects in his answer, and to which the plaintiff might sur-rejoin, the special replication is now disused for this purpose: and the court will in general permit a plaintiff to rectify any error or supply any defect in his bill, either by amendment or by a supplemental bill, and will also permit, in some cases, a defendant in like manner to complete his answer, either by amendment or by a further answer.

If the plaintiff conceives a defendant's answer to be insufficient to the charges contained in the bill, he may take exceptions against it, on which it is referred to a Master to report, whether it be sufficient or not; to which report exceptions may be also made. The answer, replication, and rejoinder, &c. being settled, and the parties come to issue, witnesses are examined upon interrogatories, either in court, or by commission in the country, wherein the parties usually join; and when the plaintiff and defendant have examined their witnesses, publication is made of the depositions, and the cause is set down for hearing, after which follows the decree.

If however in the process of the cause the parties come to an issue of fact, which by the common law is triable by a jury, the Lord Chancellor, in this case, delivers the record into the King's Bench to be tried there; and after trial had, the record is remanded into Chancery, and judgment given there. Trials and issues at law are frequently directed by the court, which in that case makes an interlocutory decree or order, that after trial the parties shall resort to the court on the equity reserved.

Interlocutory orders and decrees are also made on other occasions; as for injunctions till a hearing, where the injury sustained by the plaintiff requires such immediate interference. See tit. Injunction.

If the plaintiff dismisses his own bill, or the defendant obtains the dismissal of it for want of prosecution, or if the decree is in behalf of the defendant, the bill is dismissed with costs to be taxed by a master. Stat. 4 and 5 An. c. 16. If the defendant does not appear, on being served with the process of the decree made), bills of revivor, &cc. [See the service of the writ, an attachment issues out against him; and if a non est inventus is waste, or to stay suits at law commenced), returned, an attachment with proclamation and a certificate thereof brought to the subgoes forth against him: and if he stands further out in contempt, then a commission of rebellion may be issued, for apprehending him, and bringing him to the Fleet prison; in the execution whereof the persons to whom directed may justify breaking open doors. If the defendant stands further in contempt, a serjeant at arms is to be sent out to take him; and if he cannot be taken, a sequestration of his land may be obtained till he appears. And if a decree, when made, is not obeyed, being served upon the party under the seal of the court, all the aforementioned processes of contempt may issue out against him, for his imprisonment till he yields obedience to it.— The Court of Chancery, notwithstanding its very extensive power binding the person only, and not the estate or effects of the defendant. And in this sense, we presume, it is said that it is no court of record. 1 Danv. Ab. 749. and Chan. Rep. 193. Howard v. Suffolk. See Treatise of Equity—and tit. Costs.

Where there is any error in a decree in matter of law, there may be a bill of review, which is in nature a writ of error; an appeal to the House of Lords. Old authorities have been quoted, that a writ of error lies returnable in B. R .- and that a judgment of Chancery may be referred to the twelve judges. 4 Inst. 80: 3 Bulst. 116. But it is now usual to appeal to the House of Lords; which appeals are to be signed by two counsel of eminence, and exhibited by way of petition; the petition of appeal is lodged with the clerk of the House of Lords, and read in the house, whereon the appellee is ordered to put in his answer, and a day fixed for hearing the cause; and after counsel heard, and evidence given on both sides, the Lords affirm or reverse the decree of the Chancery, and finally determine the cause by a majority of votes, &c. Though it is to be observed on an appeal to the Lords from a decree in Chancery, no proofs will be permitted to be read as evidence, which were not made use of in the Chancery. Preced. Canc. 212.

By 46 G. 3. c. 128. § 2. the Lord Chancel. lor, in Great Britain, is empowered to order an annuity of 1500l. to be paid (out of the suitor's money unapplied) to Masters in Chancery on their resigning after 20 years' standing: or in case of permanent infirmity.

See 36 G. 3. c. 90: 6 G. 4. c. 74: 7 G. 4. c. 43: 1 W. 4. cc. 36. 60. 65. as to transfer and application of funds of infants and other incapacitated persons, &c. under the authority of Courts of Equity.

CHANGER. An officer belonging to the king's mint, whose office consists chiefly in exchanging coin for bullion, brought in by merchants or others; it is written after the old way; chaunger. Stat. 6 H. 2. c. 12.

CHANTER, cantator.] A singer in the choir of a cathedral church: and is usually applied to the chief of the singers. This word is mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 10. At St. David's cathedral in Wales, the chanter is next to the bishop; for there is no dean. Cam. Britan.

CHANTRY, or CHAUNTRY, cantaria.] A little church, chapel, or particular altar, in some cathedral church, &c. endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass, and officiate Divine service for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appointed. See stat. 1 E. 6. c. 14. which in effect put an end to these chantries, by declaring it not to be lawful for any person to enter for non-performance of the conditions on which they were founded.

Of these chantries, mention is made of fortyseven belonging to St. Paul's church in London, by Dugdale, in his history of that church.

CHAPEL, capella, Fr. chapelle.] Is either adjoining to a church, for performing Divine service; or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is wide, which is commonly called a chapel of ease. And chapels of ease are built for the ease of those parishioners who dwell far from the parochial church, in prayer and preaching only; for the sacraments. [marriages,] and burials, ought to be performed in the parochial church. 2 Rol. Abr. 340. But see tit. Marriage as to marriages in chapels, and as to building churches and chapels in populous parishes. See 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 72.

These chapels are served by inferior curates, provided at the charge of the rector. &c. And the curates are therefore removeable at the pleasure of the rector or vicar; but chapels of ease may be parochial, and have a right to sacraments and burials, and to a distinct minister, by custom; (though subject in some respect to the mother-church:) and parochial chapels differ only in name from parish churches, but they are small, and the inhabitants within the district are few. In some places chapels of ease are endowed with lands or tithes, and in other places by voluntary contributions: and in some few districts there are chapels which baptize and administer the sacraments, and have chapel wardens; but these chapels are not exempted from the visitation of the ordinary, nor the parishioners who resort thither from contributing to the repairs of the mother-church, especially if they bury there; for the chapel generally belongs to, and is, as it were, a part of the mother-church; and the parishioners are obliged to go to the mother-church, but not to the chapel. 2 Rol. Abr. 289. And hence it is said, that the offerings made to any chapel are to be rendered to the mother-church; unless there be a custom that the chaplain shall have them.

Public chapels annexed to parish churches shall be repaired by the parishioners, as the church is; if any other persons be not bound to do it. 2 Inst. 589. Besides the beforementioned chapels, there are free chapels, perpetually maintained and provided with a minister, without charge to the rector or parish; or that are free and exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction; and these are where some lands or rents are charitably bestowed on them. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 4: 1 E. 6. c. 14. There are also private chapels, built by noblemen and others, for private worship, in or near their own houses, maintained at the charge of those noble persons to whom they belong, and provided with chaplains and stipends by them; which may be erected without leave of the bishop, and need not be consecrated, though they anciently were so, nor are they subject to the jurisdiction of the ordinary.

There are likewise chapels in the Universities belonging to particular colleges, which, though they are consecrated, and sacraments are administered there, yet they are not liable to the visitation of the bishop, but of the founder. 2 Inst. 363.—See tits. Churches, Marriage.

By stats. 7, 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 2. (9 G. 4. c. 56. § 2. Ireland.) persons unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to any church or chapel, or to any dissenting chapel duly registered, are guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as felons. And by § 8. persons riotously and tumultuously assembling, and by force demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning so to do, any such buildings, are also guilty of felony, punishable in like manner.

guilty of felony, punishable in like manner. CHAPELRY, capellania.] Is the same thing to a chapel, as a parish to a church; being the precinct and limits thereof.

CHAPÉRON, Fr.] A hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the knights of the garter, as part of the habit of that noble order: but in heraldry it is a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of the horses that draw a hearse at a funeral.

CHAPITRES, Lat. capitula, Fr. Chapitres, i. e. chapters of a book.] Signify in our common law a summary of such matters as are to be inquired of, or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assize, or of peace, in their sessions. Britton, cap. 3. useth the word in this signification: and chapiters are now most commonly called articles, and delivered by the mouth of the justice in his charge to the inquest; whereas, in ancient times (as appears by Bracton and Britton), they were, after an exhortation given by the justices for the good observation of the laws and the king's peace, first read in open court, and then delivered in writing to the grand inquest, for their better observance; and the grand jury were to answer upon their oaths to all the articles thus delivered them, and not put the judges to long and learned charges to little or no purpose, for want of remembering the same, as they do now, when they think their duty well enough performed, if they only present those few of many misdemeanors which are brought before them by way of indictment.

It is to be wished that this order of delivering written articles to grand juries were still observed, whereby crimes would be more effectually punished: in some inferior courts, as the court leet, &c. in several parts of England, it is usual at this day for stewards of those courts to deliver their charges in writing to the jurors sworn to inquire of offences. Horn, in his mirror of Justices, expresses what those articles were wont to contain. Lib. 3. cap. des Articles in Eyre. And an example of articles of this kind, may be found in the book of assises, F. 138.

CHAPLAIN, capellanus.] Is most commonly taken for one that is depending upon the king, or other moble person, to instruct him and his family, and say Divine service in his house, where there is usually a private chapel for that purpose. The king, queen, prince, princess, &cc. may retain as many chaplains as they please; and the king's chaplains may hold such number of benefices of the king's gift, as the king shall think fit to bestow upon them.

An archbishop may retain eight chaplains; a duke, or a bishop, six; marquis or earl, five; viscount, four; baron, knight of the garter, or lord chancellor, three; a duchess, marchioness, countess, baroness (being widows), the treasurer, and controller of the king's house, the king's secretary, dean of the chapel, almoner, and Master of the Rolls, each of them two; the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and Warden of the Cinque Ports, one; all of which chaplains may purchase a licence or dispensation, and take two benefices with cure of souls. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13.

But both the livings must have cure of souls; and the statute expressly excepts deaneries, archdeaconries, chancellorships, treasurcrships, chanterships, prebends, and sinecure rectories. A dispensation in this case can only be granted to hold one benefice more, except to clerks who are of the privy council, who may hold three by dispensation. By the canon law, no person can hold a second incompatible benefice, without a dispensation: and in that case, if the first is under 8l. per annum [in the king's book], it is so far void that the patron may present another clerk, or the bishop may deprive: but till deprivation, no advantage can be taken by lapse. See tit. Advowson.—But independent of the statute, a clergyman by dispensations may hold any number of benefices, if they are all under 81. per annum, except the last, and then by a dispensation under the statute, he may hold one more. 1 Comm. 392 in n. See Plurality.

By the 41st canon of 1603, the two benefices must not be further distant from each other than thirty miles: and the person obtaining the dispensation, must at least be a Master of Arts in one of the Universities. But the provisions of this canon are not enforced or regarded in the temporal courts. 2 Bl. Rep. 278. See ante tit. Canon Law.

Also every Judge of the King's Bench and Common Pleas; and Chancellor and Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the King's Attor- | large, and may hold their livings during their ney and Solicitor-General, may each of them I have one chaplain, attendant on his person, having one benefice with cure, who may be non-resident on the same by stat. 25 H. S. c.

And the Groom of the Stole, Treasurer of the King's Chamber, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, may retain each one chaplain. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 28. But the chaplains under these two last statutes are not entitled to dispensations under stat. 21 H. 8. If a nobleman hath his full number of chaplains allowed by law, and retains one more, who has dispensation to hold plurality of livings, it is not good. Cro. Eliz. 723.

If one person has two or more of the titles or characters mentioned in stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13. united in himself, he can only retain the number of chaplains limited to his highest degree. 4 Co. 90. The king may present his own chaplains, i. e. waiting chaplains in ordinary, to any number of livings in the gift of the crown, and even in addition to what they hold upon the presentation of a subject without dispensation; but a king's chaplain, being beneficed by the king, cannot after-wards take a living from a subject, but by a dispensation according to the stat. § 29. 1 Salk. 161.

A person retaining a chaplain, must not only be capable thereof at the time of granting the instrument of retainer, but he must continue capable of qualifying till his chaplain is advanced; and therefore if a duke, earl, &c. retain a chaplain, and die; or if such a noble person be attainted of treason; or if an officer, qualified to retain a chaplain, is removed from his office, the retainer is determined: but where a chaplain hath taken a second benefice before his lord dieth, or is attainted, &c. the retainer is in force to qualify him to enjoy the benefices.

And if a woman that is noble by marriage, afterwards marries one under the degree of nobility, her power to retain chaplains will be determined; though it is otherwise where a woman is noble by descent, if she marry under degree of nobility; for in such case her retainer before or after marriage is good. A Baroness, &c. during coverture, may not retain chaplains: if she doth, the lord, her husband, may discharge them, as likewise her former chaplains, before their advancement.

A chaplain must be retained by letters testimonial under hand and seal, or he is not a chaplain within the statute; so that it is not enough for a spiritual person to be retained by word only to be a chaplain, by such person as may qualify by the statutes to hold livings, &c. although he abide and serve as chaplain in the family. And where a nobleman hath retained and thus qualified his number of chaplains, if he dismisses them from their attendance upon any displeasure, after they are preferred, yet they are his chaplains at Vol. I.—41 lives; and such nobleman, though he may retain other chaplains in his family, merely as chaplains, he cannot qualify any others to hold pluralities whilst the first are living: for if a nobleman could discharge his chaplain when advanced, to qualify another in his place, and qualify other chaplains, during the lives of chaplains discharged, by these means he might advance as many chaplains as he would, whereby the statutes would be evaded. 4 Rep. 90.—See further tits. Advowson, Parson, 3 Comm. 392. n.

CHAPTER, capitulum.] A congregation of clergymen under the dean in a cathedral church: congregatio clericorum in ecclesia cathedrali, conventuali, regulari, vel collegiata. This collegiate company is metaphorically termed capitulum, signifying a little head, it being a kind of head, not only to govern the diocese in the vacation of the bishoprick, but also in many things to advise and assist the bishop when the see is full, for which, with the dean, they form a council. Co. Lit. 103. The chapter consists of prebendaries or canons, which are some of the chief men of the church, and therefore are called capita ecclesiæ: they are a spiritual corporation aggregate, which they cannot surrender without leave of the bishop, because he hath an interest in them; they, with the dean, have power to confirm the bishop's grants: during the vacancy of an archbishoprick, they are guardians of the spiritualities, and as such have authority, by the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. to grant dispensations; likewise as a corporation they have power to make leases, &c.

When the dean and chapter confirm grants of the bishop, the dean joins with the chapter, and there must be the consent of the major part; which consent is to be expressed by their fixing of their seal to the deed, in one place, and at one time, either in the chapter house, or some other place; and this consent is the will of many joined together. Dyer, 233. They had also a check on the bishop at common law; for till stat. 32 H. S. c. 28. his grant or lease would not have bound his successors, unless confirmed by the dean and chapter. 1 Inst. 103.

A chapter is not capable to take by purchase or gift, without the dean, who is the head of the body; but there may be a chapter without a dean, as a chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell; and grants by, or to them, are as effectual as other grants by dean and chapter. Yet where there are chapters without deans, they are not properly chapters; and the chapter in a collegiate church, where there is no episcopal see, as at Westminster and Windsor, is more properly called a col-

Chapters are said to have their beginning before deans; and formerly the bishop had the rule and ordering of things without a dean and chapter, which were constituted afterwards: and all the ministers within his diocese were as his chapter, to assist him in a remainder or reversion of land may charge spiritual matters. 2 Rol. Bro. 11. 15. his deanery; and each prebendary hath a certain part in right of his prebend; and each too is incorporated by himself.

Deans and chapters have some of them ecclesiastical jurisdiction in several parishes (besides that authority they have within their own body,) executed by their officials: also temporal jurisdiction in several manors belonging to them, in the same manner as bishops, where their stewards keep courts, &c. 2. Rol. Abr. 229. It has been observed, that though the chapter have distinct parcels of the bishop's estate assigned for their maintenance, the bishop hath little more than a power over them in his visitations, and is scarce allowed to nominate half of those to their prebends, who were originally of his family: but of common right it is said he is their patron. Rol. Ibid .- They are now sometimes appointed by the king, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes elected by each other. 1 Comm. 383. See further tits. Dean, Prebend. CHARGE AND DISCHARGE. A charge is said to be a thing done that bindeth him that doth it, or that which is his, to the performance thereof: and discharge is the removal, or taking away of that charge. Termes de Ley. Land may be charged divers ways; as by grant of rent out of it, by statutes, judgments, conditions, warrants, &c. Lands in fee-simple may be charged in fee: and where a man may dispose of the land itself, he may charge it by a rent, or statute, one way or other. Lit. sect. 648. Moor Ca. 129. Dyer, 10. If one charge land in tail, and land in fee-simple, and die; the land in fee only shall be chargeable. Bro. Cha. 9.

Lands intailed may be charged in fee, if the estate-tail be cut off by recovery: if tenant in tail charge the land, and after levy a fine or suffer a recovery of the lands, to his own use; this confirms the charge, and it shall continue. 1 Rep. 61. A tenant for life charges the land, and then makes a feoffment to a stranger, or doth waste, &c. whereby it is forfeited, he in reversion shall hold it charged during his (the tenant's) life: and if one have a lease for life or years of land, and grant a rent out of it; if after he surrenders his estate, yet the charge shall continue so long as the estate had endured, in case it had not been surrendered. 1 Rep. 67. 145. Dyer, 10.

If one jointenant charge land, and after release to his companion and die, the survivor shall hold it charged: but if it had come to him by survivorship, it would be otherwise,

If a rent be issuing out of a house, &c. and it falls down, the charge shall remain upon the soil. 9 E. 4.20. But when the estate is gone upon which the charge was grounded. there, generally, the charge is determined. Co. Lit. 349. And in all cases where any executory thing is created by deed, there by consent of all the parties it may be by deed defeated and discharged. 10 Rep. 49. See tits. Estate, Limitations, Mortgage, &c.

CHARITABLE CORPORATION. A 80ciety of persons in the late reign obtained a statute to lend money to industrious poor, at 51. per cent. interest on pawns and pledges, to prevent their falling into the hands of the pawn-brokers, and therefore they were called the Charitable Corporation; but they likewise took 51. per cent. for the charge of officers, warehouses, &c. And in the fifth year of King G. 2. the chief officers of this corporation, by connivance of the principal directors, absconded and broke, and defrauded the public proprietors of great sums; for the relief of the sufferers wherein, as to part of their losses, several statutes were made and enacted. See stats. 5 G. 2. cc. 31, 32. 7 G. 2. c. 11. CHARITABLE USES. The laws against devises in mortmain (see that title) do not extend to any thing but superstitious uses; it is therefore held, that a man may give lands for maintenance of a school, an hospital, or any other charitable uses. But as it was apprehended, from recent experience, that persons on their death-beds might make large and improvident dispositions, even for these good purposes, and defeat the political end of the statutes of mortmain, it is therefore enacted by stat. 9 G. 2. c. 36. that no lands or tenements, or money to be laid out thereon, shall be given for, or charged with, any charitable uses whatsoever, unless by deed indented, executed in the presence of two witnesses, twelve calender months before the death of the donor; and enrolled in the Court of Chancery within six months after its execution (except Stock in the public funds, and which must be transferred at least six calender months previous to the donor's death;) and unless such gift be made to take effect immediately and be without power of revocation; and that all other gifts shall be void. The Two Universities, their colleges, and the scholars on the foundation of the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, are exempted out of this act; but with the proviso, that no college 6 Rep. 76. 1 Shep. A conveyance of copyhold lands to charitable uses in the life-time of the party, is within the stats. 3 B. & A. 149. and therefore must Corporations are excepted out of the statutes of Wills (32 H. 8. c. 1. 34 H. 8. c. 5. See tits. Devise, Wills,) to prevent the extension of gifts in mortmain; but now by construction of stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. (see the next paragraph) it is held that a devise to a corporation for a charitable use is valid, as operating in the nature of an appointment, rather than of a bequest. And indeed the piety of judges hath formerly carried them great lengths in supporting charitable uses (Pre. Ch. 272); it being held that the stat. of Eliz. which favours appointments to charities, supersedes and repeals all former statutes; (Gilb. Rep. 45.1 P. Wms. 248.) and supplies all defects of insurances. (Duke, 84.) And therefore not only a devise to a corporation, but a devise by a copyhold tenant, without surrender, to the use of his will, and a devise, nay even a settlement by tenant in tail without either fine or recovery, if made to a charitable use, is good by way of appointment. Moor, 890. 2 Vern. 453. Pre. Ch. 16. 2 Comm. 375.

The king as parens patriæ has the general superintendance of all charities, which he exercises by the Lord Chancellor. And therefore whenever it is necessary, the Attorney General, at the relation of some informant, who is usually called the relator, files ex officio, an information in the Court of Chancery, to have the charity properly established. Also by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. authority is given to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, and to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to inquire into any abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree: which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the Petty Bag Office in the Court of Chancery, because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at common law, but treated as an original cause in the court of The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent in his answer to the exceptions may allege what new matter he pleases; upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue: and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. An appeal lies from the chancellor's decree to the House of Peers, notwithstanding any loose opinion to the contrary. 3 Com. 427.

The stat. 52 G. 3. c. 101. provides that in all cases of breach, or supposed breach, of any trust created for charitable purposes, or whenever the order of a court of equity may be necessary for the administration of any such trust, any two persons may present a petition to the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, &c. Master of the Rolls or Court of Exchequer, praying relief, and which shall be heard in a summary way upon affidavits, &c.; and the order made thereupon shall be conclusive, unless appeal be made within two years to the House of Lords. Every petition shall be signed by the party, and attested by the solicitor, and allowed by the Attorney or Solicitor General.

The stat. 52 G. 3. c. 102. for registering and securing of charitable donations, directs a memorial or statement of all real and personal estates, and of the annual income, investment, and general and particular objects of all charities, and charitable donations for the benefit of poor persons in England and Wales, which shall have been or may hereafter be founded, with the names of the founders or benefactors, and of the person in whose custody the deeds relating thereto may be, and the trustees, feoffees, and possessors of the estates, shall be registered by such trustees, &c. in the office of the clerk of the peace, within which such poor persons shall be.

CHARITIES. By 58 G. 3, c. 91. his Majesty is empowered to appoint commissioners to inquire into the nature and management of charities in England and Wales, connected with education, and to report thereon half yearly'to his Majesty and Parliament. stat. 59 G. 3. c. 81. the powers of this act are extended to all charities and charitable donations, and institutions whatever, in England and Wales; and by c. 91. of the same session, the commissioners are authorised to make application to Courts of Equity regarding the management of the states and funds belonging to any such Charities. The two Universities and the Colleges therein, the Colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester, the Charter House, Harrow, and Rugby Schools, all cathedrals, colleges, and free schools, having special visitors, and all Jewish, Quaker, or Roman Catholic places of education, are exempted from the operation of the act.

The powers of the above acts continued by several acts, and expired 1st July, 1830. By 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 34. his Majesty may appoint twenty commissioners to examine and investigate all funds destined for education of the poor, or for charities, in England and Wales; and to investigate all frauds and abuses, or misconduct in their management: the commissioners, or five of them, to report half yearly. No remuneration to be made to any commissioner who is a member of Parliament, nor to any more than ten commissioners, but their travelling expences to be allowed. If the estates or funds cannot be applied to the purpose for which they were destined, the com-missioners are to report specially. The commissioners have power to require trustees and managers of Charities, &c. to render an account of the funds, but no such person is to be obliged to travel more than ten miles from his abode. The commissioners may examine on oath: all examinations taken before them are to be transmitted to the secretary of the commissioners, at their office in Westminster. Persons summoned and wilfully omitting to appear, or produce deeds, papers, &c. shall be liable to be fined by the Courts of King's Bench or Exchequer. The Universities and Schools above-mentioned are exempted from the act, as are also Charities and Institutions supported by voluntary contribution. The act is to continue in force till 1st Sept. 1833, and the end of the next session of Parliament: and see the 2 and 3 W. 4. c. 57. continuing and extending the provisions of 59 G. 3. c. 91. for facilitating applications to Courts of Equity regarding the management of Estates of Charities.

And Briton, in his 39th chapter, divides charters into those of the king, and those of private persons. CHARTER-PARTY, Lat. charta partita, Fr. chartre parti, i. e. a deed of writing divided.] Is what among merchants and seafaring men is commonly called a pair of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between them, touching their merchandize and maritime affairs. 2 Inst. 673. Charter parties of affreightment settle agreements, as to the eargo of ships, and bind the master to deliver the goods in good condition at the place of discharge, according to agreement; and the master sometimes obliges himself, ship, tackle and furniture, for performance. See the subject fully treated. Abbott on Shipping, part 3. cap. 1. tit. of the Contract of Affreightment by Charter-party: and see Bac. Ab. Merchant (H) of Charter- if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered are rate. Mallon de Jur. Mari-

The common law construes charter parties, as near as may be, according to the intention of them, and not according to the literal sense of traders, or those that merchandize by sea; but they must be regularly pleaded. In covenant by charter-party, that the ship should return to the river of Thames, by a certain time, dangers of the sea excepted, and after, in the voyage, and within the time of the return, the ship was taken upon the sea by pirates, so that the master could not return at the time mentioned in the agreeement; it was adjudged that this impediment was within the exception of the charter-party, which extends as well to any danger upon the sea by pirates and men of war, as dangers of the sea by shipwreck, tempest, &c. Stile, 132. 2 Rol. Ab. 248. So where a charter-party of affreightment, provided that in case of the "inability of the ship to execute or proceed on the service," certain persons should be at liberty to make such abatement out of the freight as they should think reasonable: held, that an inability of the ship to proceed to sea for want of men to navigate her, was within the proviso; although such want of men proceeded from the ravages of the small-pox amongst the original crew, the death of some, and the desertion of others from fear of the distemper, and an impossibility of procuring others on the spot in their room. Beatson v. Shank. 3 East, 233.

Whether a Charter-party is under Seal or not, an action grounded on it must be in the name of the party, and not of another to whom he may have assigned his interest. 10 East, 279: 2 Taunt. 407: 2 New. Rep. 411. By a Charter-party on a voyage from Liver-pool to the West Indies, and from thence to London or Liverpool, it was agreed that a brig should be made staunch, and during the voyage kept tight, staunch, and strong, at the owner's expence, and that the freighter should pay freight at 200l. per month, for any time beyond six months that she might be employed, the pay to commence from the day of sailing until her arrival into dock at the homeward port of discharge. The vessel was obliged to remain 28 days at St. Domingo, for the purpose of repairs, being done at the expence of the owner; it was held that during these days the vessel was employed by the freighter within the terms of the Charterparty. 5 Barn. & C. 167: 7 Dow. & Ry.

A ship is freighted at so much per month that she shall be out, covenanted to be paid after her arrival at the port of London; the ship is cast away coming up from the Downs, but the lading is all preserved, the freight shall in this case be paid; for the money becomes due monthly by the contract, and the place mentioned is only to ascertain where the money is to be paid, and the ship is entitled to wages, like a mariner, that serves by the month, who if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered pro rata. Molloy de Jur. Maritim. 260. If a part owner of a ship refuse to join with the other owners in setting out of the ship, he shall not be entitled to his share of the freight; but by the course of the Admiralty, the other owners ought to give security if the ship perish in the voyage, to make good to the owner standing out, his share of the ship. Sir L. Jenkins, in a case of this nature, certified that by the Law Marine and course of the Admiralty, the plaintiff was to have no share of the freight; and that it was so in all places; for otherwise there would be no navigation. CHARTIS REDDENDIS. An ancient writ which lay against one that had charters of feoffment entrusted to his keeping, and refused to deliver them. Rev. Oriv. 159.

fused to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 159. CHASE, Fr. chasse.] In its general signification is a great quantity of woody ground lying open, and privileged for wild beasts and wild fowl: and the beasts of chase properly extend to the buck, doe, fox, martin, and roe; and in common and legal sense to all the beasts of the forest. Co. Lit. 233.

A chase differs from a park in that it is not inclosed; and also in that a man may have a chase in another man's ground, as well as in his own: being indeed the liberty of keeping beasts of chase or royal game therein, protected even from the owner of the land, with a power of hunting them thereon. 2 Comm. 38.

But if one have a chase within a forest, and he kill or hunt any stag or red deer, or other beast of the forest, he is fineable. 1 Jones's Rep. 278.

A chase is of a middle nature between a forest and a park, being commonly less than a forest, and not endowed with so many liberties, as the courts of attachment, swainmote, and justice-seat; though of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity both of keepers, and wild beast or game, than a park.

A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest in its proper and true nature cannot; and from a park, in that it is not enclosed, and hath a greater compass, and more variety of game, and officers likewise. Crompt. in his Jurisd. fol. 148. says a forest cannot be in the hands of a subject, but it forthwith loseth its name, and becomes a chase; but, fol. 197. he says, a subject may be lord and owner of a forest, which though it seems a contradiction, yet both sayings are in some sort true; for the king may give or alienate a forest to a subject, so as when it is once in the subject, it loseth the true property of a forest, because the courts called the justice-seat, swainmote, &c. do forthwith vanish, none being able to make a Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest, but the king; yet it may be granted in so large a manner, as there may be attach-; tends to all moveable and immoveable goods: ment, swainmote, and a court equivalent to a justice-seat. Manwood, part 2. c. 3, 4.

A forest and a chase may have different officers and laws: every forest is a chase & quiddam amplius; but any chase is not a forest. A chase is ad communem legem, and not to be guided by the forest laws; and it is the same of parks. 4 Inst. 314. A man may have a free chase as belonging to his manor in his own wood, as well as a warren and a park in his own grounds; for a chase, warren, and park, are collateral inheritances, and not issuing out of the soil; and therefore if a person hath a chase in other men's grounds, and after purchaseth the grounds, the chase remaineth. Ibid. 318. If a man have freehold in a free chase, he may cut his timber and wood growing upon it, without view or licence of any; though it is not so of a forest; but if he cut so much that there is not sufficient for covert, and to maintain the game, he shall be punished at the suit of the king; and so if a common person hath a chase in another's soil, the owner of the soil cannot destroy all the covert, but ought to leave sufficient thereof, and also browsewood, as hath been accustomed. 11 Rep. 22. And it has been adjudged, that within such chase, the owner of the soil by prescription may have common for his sheep, and warren for his coneys, but he cannot surcharge with more than has been usual, nor make coney-burrows in other places than hath been used. Ibid. If a free chase be enclosed, it is said to be a good cause of seizure into the king's hands.

It is not lawful to make a chase, park, or warren, without licence from the king under the broad seal. See tits. Forest, Game, Park. CHASTITY. The Roman law (Ff. 48. 8. 1.) justifies homicide in defence of the chastity either of one's self or relations; and so also, according to Selden (de Legib. Hebræor. l. 4. c. 3.) stood the law in the Jewish republic. The English law likewise justifies a woman killing one who attempts to ravish her. (Bac. Elm. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) So the husband or father may justify killing a man, who at-tempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6.

And without doubt the forcibly attempting a crime, of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle, that runs through our own and all other laws, seems to be this; that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. 181.

See tits. Murder, Adultery.

CHATTELS, or CATALS, catalla.] All goods, moveable and immoveable, except such as are in nature of freehold, or parcel of it. The Normans call moveable goods only, chat- over, see tit. Devise. tels; but this word by the common law exand the civilians denominate not only what we call chattels, but also land, bona. But no estate of inheritance or freehold can be termed in our law goods and chattels; though a lease for years may pass as goods.

Chattels are either personal or real: personal, as gold, silver, plate, jewels, household stuff, goods and wares in a shop, corn sown on the ground, carts, ploughs, coaches, saddles, &c. Cattle, &c. as horses, oxen, kine, bullocks, sheep, pigs, and all tame fowls and birds, swans, turkeys, geese, poultry, &c.; and these are called personal in two respects; one, because they belong immediately to the person of a man; and the other, for that being any way injuriously withheld from us we have no means to recover them but by personal action.

Chattels real, saith Coke (1 Inst. 118.), are such as concern or savour of the realty; as terms for years of land, the next presentation to a church, estates by a statute merchant, statute staple, elegit, or the like. And these are called real chattels, as being interests issuing out of, or annexed to, real estates; of which they have one quality, viz. immobility, which denominates them real; but want the other, viz. a sufficient, legal, indeterminate duration; and this want it is that constitutes them chattels. The utmost period for which they can last is fixed and determinate, either for such a space of time certain, or till such a particular sum of money be raised out of such a particular income; so that they are not equal in the eye of the law to the lowest estate of freehold, a lease for another's life. 2 Comm.

But deeds relating to a freehold, obligations, &c. which are things in action, are not reckoned under goods and chattels; though if writings are pawned, they may be chattels; and by the stats. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 5. the larceny of certain specified securities for money and deeds is made punishable in like manner as the larceny of any chattel of like value, &c.; and by § 23, 4. the stealing of any paper, parchment, &c. evidencing the title to any real estate, is created a misdemeanor, punishble by fine and imprisonment.

Money hath been accounted not to be goods or chattels; nor are hawks or hounds, such being feræ naturæ. 8 Rep. 33: Terms de Ley, 103: Kitch. 32. By 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 3. stealing any dog, or any bird or beast, ordinarily kept in confinement, and not the subject of larceny, subjects the party to pay the value of the animal, and a penalty not exceeding 201. A collar of SS. garter of gold, buttons, &c. belonging to the dress of a knight of the garter, are not jewels to pass by that name in personal estate, but ensigns of honour. Dyer 59. As to devises of chattels with remainder

Chattels personal are, immediately upon the death of the testator, in the actual posses. | Nor selling gum of one denomination for sion of the executor, as the law will adjudge, though they are at never so great a distance from him; chattels real, as leases for years of houses, lands, &c. are not in the possession of the executor till he makes an entry, or hath recovered the same; except in case of a lease for years of tithes, where no entry can be made. 1 Nels. Abr. 437.

Leases for years, though for a thousand years, leases at will, estate of tenants by elegit, &c. are chattels, and shall go to the executor; all obligations, bills, statutes, recognizances, and judgments, shall be as a chattel in the executors, &c. Bro. Obl. 18. F. N. B. 120.

But if one be seised of land in fee on which trees and grass grow, the heir shall have these, and not the executor; for they are not chattels till they are cut and severed, but parcel of the inheritance. 4 Rep. 63: Dyer, 273. The game of a park, with the park, fish in the pond, and doves in the house, with the house, go to the heir, &c. and are not chattels: though if pigeons, or deer, or tame, or kept alive in a room; or if fish be in a tank, &c. they go to the executors as chattels. Noy. 124: 11 Rep. 50: Keilw. 88. See tits. Heir, Executor.

An owner of chattels is said to be possessed of them: as of freehold the term is, that a person is seised of the same.

CHEATS, are deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty; as by playing with false dice; or by causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from those in which it was written; or by persuading a woman to execute writings to another as her trustee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no such thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment; or by suppressing a will; and such like. 1 Hawk. that of another. Sayer, 205. Nor selling wrought gold, as and for gold of the true standard; the offender not being a goldsmith. Cowp. 323.

The distinction laid down as proper to be attended to in all cases of the kind is this .-That in such impositions or deceits where common prudence may guard persons against their suffering from them, the offence is not indictable; but the party is left to his civil remedy for redress of the injury done him; but where false weights and measures are used, or false tokens produced, or such methods taken to cheat and deceive as people cannot by any ordinary care or prudence be guarded against, there it is an offence indictable. Burr. 1125. See Rex v. Robson, Russ. & Ry. 413.

As there are frauds which may be relieved civilly, and not punished criminally (with the complaints whereof the courts of equity do generally abound), so there are other frauds, which in a special case may not be helped civilly, and yet shall be punished criminally. Thus, if a minor goes about the town, and pretending to be of age, defrauds many persons, by taking credit for a considerable quantity of goods, and then insisting on his nonage; the persons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, but they may indict and punish him for a common cheat. 1 Hawk. CHESTER. See tit. County-Palatine. By stat. 1 W. 4. c. 70. it is enacted that (after the 12th Oct. 1830) the king's writ shall be directed and obeyed, and the jurisdiction of the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, shall extend and be exercised over and within the county of Chester, and the county and the city of Chester (and the several counties in Wales), in like manner, to the same extent, and to and for all intents and purposes whatsoever, as in and over the counties of England (not being counties palatine); and all original writs for Chester, &c. shall be issued by the cursitor for London and Middlesex; and the proofs thereon, &c. shall be issued, &c. by officers of K. B. and C. P. to be named by the chief justices of those courts for that purpose. See § 13 & 15 of the act.

CHEVAGE, chevagium, from the Fr. chef, caput.] A tribute or sum of money formerly paid by such as held land in villenage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll money. Of which Bracton, lib. 1. c. 10. says thus: Chevagium dicitur recognitio in signum subjectionis et domini de capite suo. Lambard writes this word chi-Wils. 301: Say. 146: 1 Black. Rep. 274. vage; but it is more properly chiefage; and anciently the Jews, whilst they were admitted to live in England, paid chevage or poll money to the king, as appears by Pat. 8 Ed. 1. par. 1. It seems also to be used for a sum of money yearly given to a man of power for his protection, as a chief head or leader: but Lord Coke says, that in this signification it is a great misprision for a subject to take sums of money, or other gifts yearly of any, in name of chevage, because they take upon them to be their chief heads or leaders. Co. Lit. 140. Spelman in v. Chevagium says, it is a duty paid in Wales, pro filiabus maritandis.

CHEVISANCE, from the Fr. chevir, i. e. Venir à chef de quelque chose, to come to the head or end of a business.] An agreement or composition made; an end or order set down between a creditor or debtor; or sometimes an indirect gain in point of usury, &c. In some ancient statutes it is often mentioned, and seems commonly used for an unlawful bargain or contract.

CHIEF-RENTS. The rents of freeholders of manors often so called, i. e. reditus capitales. They are also denominated quitrents, quieti reditus; because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other services.

A proviso is added in favour of the fathers of illegitimate children; and see 10 G. 4. c. 34. § 23. 25. as to like offences in Ireland.

By § 14. a woman by secretly burying or otherwise endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child, is made guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by imprisonment, with or without hard labour not exceeding two years; and by § 31. persons counselling, aiding, or abetting, the commission of any misdemeanor, punishable under this act, shall be proceeded against and punished as a principal offender.

CHILDWIT. Sax.] A fine or penalty of a bond-woman unlawfully begotten with child. Cowel says it signifieth a power to take a fine of your bond-woman gotten with child without your consent; and within the manor of Writtle in Com. Essex, every reputed father of a base child pays to the lord for a fine 3s. 4d. where it seems to extend as well to free as bond-women; and the custom is there called childwit to this day. See tit. Bastard.

CHIMIN, Fr. chemin; via.] In law phrase is a way; which is of two sorts; the king's highway, and a private way.

The king's highway (chiminus regius) is that in which the king's subjects and all others under his protection, have free liberty to pass, though the property of the soil where the way lies, belongs to some private person.

A private way is that in which one man or more have liberty to pass, through the ground of another, by prescription or charter; and this is divided into chimin in gross and chimin appendant.

Chimin in gross is where a person holds a way principally and solely in itself.

Chimin appendant is that way which a man hath as appurtenant to some other thing: as if he rent a close or pasture, with covenant for ingress and egress through some other ground in which otherwise he might not pass. Kitch. 117: Co. Lit. 56. See tits. Highway, Trespass, Way.

CHIMINAGE, chiminagium. Toll due by custom for having a way through a forest; and in ancient records it is sometimes called pedagium. Cromp. Jurisd. 189: Co. Lit. 56.

See Chart. Forest. cap. 14.

CHIMNEY-MONEY, otherwise called hearth-money. A duty to the crown imposed by stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 2. of 2s. for every hearth in a house. Now long since repealed.

CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS. By the 4 and 5 W. 4. c. 45. the 28 G. 3. c. 48. is repealed. By § 2. no child under ten years of age is to be apprenticed to a chimney-sweeper. By § 4. indentures of boys under ten years of age are to be void. But by § 5. indentures executed previous to the act, are to remain in force. By § 3. chimney-sweepers taking apprentices are to be householders. By § 6. apprentices under fourteen years of age are to be so designated by a brass plate on a leathern cap. § 7. imposes a penalty not exceeding 10l., or less than 40s., on a chimney-sweeper for employing children under fourteen years of age, not apprentices. By § 8. requiring any person to ascend a flue, to extinguish fire, is declared a misdemeanor. By § 9. the binding or assignment of apprentices to chimney-sweepers shall take place by consent of two justices, and be indorsed on the indenture, which indenture and consent to be in the form annexed to the act; and every indenture

CHIROGRAPH, chirographum, or scriptum chirographatum.] Any public instrument or gift of conveyance, attested by the subscription and crosses of witnesses, was in the time of the Saxons called chirographum ; which being somewhat changed in form and manner by the Normans, was by them styled charta; in following times, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made their deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counter-part, and in the middle, between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied or cut asunder in an indented manner, the sheet or skin or parchment; which being delivered to the two parties concerned, were proved authentic by matching with and answering to one another: and when this prudent custom had for some time prevailed, then the word chirographum was appropriated to such bipartite writings or indentures.

Anciently when they made a chirograph or deed, which required a counter-part, they ingrossed it twice upon one piece of parch-ment contrariwise, leaving a space between, in which they wrote in great letters the word CANFROGRADA; and then cut the parchment in two, sometimes even and sometimes with indenture through the midst of the word: this was afterwards called dividenda, because the parchment was so divided or cut; and it is said the first use of these chirographs was in Henry the Third's time.

Chirograph was of old used for a fine; the manner of engrossing whereof, and cutting the parchment in two pieces, is still observed in the Chirographer's Office: but as to deeds, that was formerly called a Chirograph, which was subscribed by the proper hand-writing of the vendor or debtor, and delivered to the vendee or creditor; and it differed from syngraphus, which was in this manner, viz. Both parties, as well the creditor as debtor, wrote their names and the sum of money borrowed, on paper, &c., and the word SENCRADIMES in capital letters in the middle thereof, which letters were cut in the middle, and one part given to each party, that upon comparing them (if any dispute should arise) they might put an end to the difference. The chirographs of deeds have sometimes concluded thus :- Et in hujus rei testimonium huic scripto, in modum chirographi confecto, vicissim sigilla nostra appossuimus. The chirographs were called chartæ divisæ, scripta per chirographos divisa, chartæ, per alphabetum divisæ; as the chirographs of all fines are at this time. Kennet's Antiq. 177. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 94.

The chirographer likewise, or his deputy, proclaims all the fines in the court every term, according to the statute, and endorses the proclamations upon the backside of the foot thereof; and always keeps the writ of covenant, and not of the fine: the chirographer shall take but 4s. fee for a fine, on pain to forfeit his office, &c. CHIVALRY, servitium militare, from the Fr. chevalier.] A tenure of lands by knight's service; whereby the tenant was bound to perform service in war unto the king, or the mesne lord of whom he held by that tenure. -See tit. Tenures.

Chivalry was of two kinds, either regal, held only of the king; or common, held of a common person; that which might be held only of the king was called servitium serjeantia, and was again divided into grand and petit serjeanty; the grand serjeanty was where one held lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person, as to bear the king's banner or spear, to lead his host, or to find a man at arms to fight, &c. Petit serjeanty was when a man held lands of the king to yield him annually some small thing towards his wars, as a sword, dagger, bow, &c .- See tit. Serjeanty.

Of the Court of Chivalry, its power and jurisdiction, see post, tit. Court of Chivalry.

CHOP-CHURCH, ecclesiarum permutatio.] Is a word mentioned in a statute of King H. 6. by the sense of which, it was in those days a kind of trade, and by the judges declared to be lawful: but Brooke in his Abridgment says, it was only permissable by law: it was without a doubt a nick-name given to those that used to change benefices; as to chop and change is a common expression. 9 H. 6. c. 65. Vide Litera missa omnibus episcopis, &c. contra Choppe-Churches, anno 1391. Spelm. de Con. vol. 2. p. 642.

CHORAL, choralis. Signifies any person that by virtue of any of the orders of the clergy, was in ancient time admitted to sit and serve God in the choire. Dugdale in his History of St. Paul's Church says, that there were formerly six Vicars Choral belonging to that church.

CHOSE, Fr. A thing.] Used in the common law with divers epithets; as chose local, chose transitory, and chose in action. Chose local is such a thing as is annexed to a place, as a mill, and the like: and chose transitory is that thing which is moveable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place.

only a right; as an annuity, obligation for debt, &c. And generally all causes of suit for any debt, duty, or wrong, are to be accounted choses in action: and it seems chose in action may be also called chose in suspense. because it hath no real existence or being, nor can properly be said to be in our possession. Bro. tit. Chose in Action. 1 Lil. Ab. 264.

A person disseises me of land, or takes away my goods; my right or title of entry into the lands, or action or suit for it, and so for the goods, is a chose in action: so a debt on an obligation, and power and right of action to sue for the same. 1 Brownl. 33. And a condition and power of re-entry into land upon a feoffment, gift, or grant, before the performance of the condition, is of the nature of a chose in action. Co. Lit. 214: 6 Rep. 50: Dyer, 244. If one have an advowson when the church becomes void, the presentation is but as a chose in action, and not grantable; but it is otherwise before the church is void. Dyer, 296. Where a man hath a judgment against another for money, or a statute, these are choses in action. An annuity in fee to a man and his heirs, is grantable over: but it has been held, that an annuity is a chose in action, and not grantable. 5 Rep. 89: Fitz. Grant, 45. A chose in action cannot be transferred over; nor is it advisable: nor can a chose in action be a satisfaction, as one bond cannot be pleaded to be given in satisfaction for another: but in equity choses in action may be assignable (which need not be by deed. 4 T. R. 690.); and the king's grant of a chose in action is good. Cro. Jac. 170. 371: Chanc. Rep. 169.

Charters, where the owner of the land hath them in possession, are grantable: a possibility of an interest, or estate in a term for years, is near to a chose in action, and therefore may not be granted; but a possibility, joined with an interest, may be a grantable chattel. Co. Lit. 265: 4 Rep. 66: Mod. Ca. 1128. And this the law doth provide, to avoid multiplicity of suits, and the subversion of justice, which would follow if these things were grantable from one man to another. Dyer, 30: Ploud. 185. Stock is a chose in action. 5 Price, 217.

But by release choses in action may be released and discharged for ever; but then it must be to parties and privies in the estate, &c., for no stranger may take advantage of things in action; save only in some special cases. Co. Lit. 214: Yelv. 9. 85.—See tit. Assignment.

By stat. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 5. persons stealing any of the following securities usually termed choses in action, (viz. any tally, order, or other security, entitling or evidencing the title of any person, or any body corporate, to any share, &c. in any public stock or fund of Great Britain or Ireland, or any foreign state, or in any fund of any body corporate, &c., or in any savings' bank, or stealing any debenture, deed, bond, bill, note, warrant, order, or other security for money, or for payment of money, or any warrant or order for the delivery of any goods or valuable thing) are declared guilty of felony of the same nature, and in the same degree, and punishable as if they had stolen any chattel of less value, with the share, interest, or deposit to which the security stolen may relate, or with the money due on such security, or the value of the goods mentioned in the warrant or order.

CHRISMATIS DENARII, Chrisom pence. Money paid to the diocesan, or his suffragan, by the parochial clergy, for the chrisom consecrated by them about Easter, for the holy uses of the year ensuing. This customary payment being made in Lent near Easter, was in some places called Quadragesimals, and in others Paschals and Easter pence. The bishop's exaction of it was condemned by Pope Pius XI. for simony and extortion; and thereupon the custom was released by some of our English bishops.—See Cartular. Mon. de Bernedy, MS. Cotton.

CHRISTIANITY. Of the punishment of offences against, see tits. Blasphemy, Heresy, and also tit. Religion.

CHURCH. Ecclesia .- A temple or building consecrated to the honour of God and religion, and anciently dedicated to some Saint, whose name it assumed; or it is an assembly of persons united by the profession of the same Christian faith, met together for religious worship. A church to be adjudged such in law must have administration of the sacraments, and sepulture annexed it. If the king founds a church, he may exempt it from the ordinary's jurisdiction; but it is otherwise in case of a subject.

The manner of founding churches in ancient times was, after the founders had made their applications to the bishop of the diocese, and had his licence, the bishop or his commissioners set up a cross, and set forth the church yard where the church was to be built; and then the founders might proceed in the building of the church, and when the church was finished, the bishop was to consecrate it; and then, and not before, the sacraments were to be administered in it. Stillingfleet's Ecclesiast. Cases. But by the common law and custom of this realm, any person who is a good Christian may build a church without licence from the bishop, so as it be not prejudicial to any ancient churches; though the law takes no notice of it as a church, till consecrated by the bishop, which is the reason why church and no church, &c. is to be tried and certified by the bishop. And in some cases, though a church has been consecrated, it must be consecrated again; as in case any murder, adultery, or fornication be committed in it, whereby it is defiled; or if the church be destroyed by fire, &c.

The ancient ceremonies in consecrating the ground on which the church was intended to be built, and of the church itself after it was provided for building, the bishop came in his robes to the place, &c., and having prayed, he then perfumed the ground with incense, and the people sung a collect in praise of that saint to whom the thurch was dedicated; then the corner stone was brought to the bishop, which he crossed, and laid for the foundation: and a great feast was made on that day, or on the saint's day to which it was dedicated; but the form of consecration was left to the discretion of the bishop, as it is at this day.

The form of consecration is founded on the solemn and affecting address of Solomon on the dedication of the temple built by him in Jerusalem. See 1 Kings, chap. 8: 2 Chron. c. 6: Hobbe's Christian Commonwealth, c. 42:

Part 3. of his Leviathan.

A church in general consists of three principal parts, that is, the belfry or steeple, the body of the church with the aisles, and the chancel: and not only the freehold of the whole church, but of the church-yard, are in the parson or rector; and the parson may have an action of trespass against any one that shall commit any trespass in the church or church-yard; as in the breaking of seats annexed to the church, or the windows, taking away the leads, or any of the materials of the church, cutting the trees in the churchyard, &c. But church-wardens may, by custom, have a fee for burying in the church; the church-yard is a common place of burial for all the parishioners. Vent. 274: Keb. 504. 523.—But see Cro. Jac. 367: Gibs. 453. and post Church-wardens, III. 2.

And it seems that actions for taking away the seats must be brought in the name of the church-wardens, the parishioners being at the expence of them. Raym. 246: 12 Co. 105:

3 Com. Dig. tit. Esglise (F. 3.)

If a man erect a pew in a church or hang up a bell, &c. therein, they thereby become church goods, though not expressly given to the church; and he may not afterwards remove them. Shaw. P. L. 79. The parson only is to give licence to bury in the church; but for defacing a monument in a church, &c. the builder, or heir of the deceased, may have an action. Cro. Jac. 367. See Acc. Spooner v. Brewster, 3 Bing. 136. And a man may be indicted for digging up the graves of persons buried, and taking away their burial dresses, &c. the property whereof remains in the party who was the owner when used: and it is said an offender was found guilty of felony in this case, but had his clergy. Co. Lit. 113.

Though the parson hath the freehold of the church and church-yard, he hath not the feesimple, which is always in abeyance; but in some respects the parson hath a fee-simple qualified. Lit. 644, 645. The chancel of the church'is to be repaired by the parson, unless there be a custom to the contrary; and for these repairs, the parson may cut down trees in the church-yard, but not otherwise, See stat. 35 E. 1. stat. 2. Ne Rector prosternat, built, were thus; when the materials were &c. The church-wardens are to see that the 328 CHURCH.

body of the church and steeple are in repair; assent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent, but not any aisle, &c. which any person may be united: and by stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3. claims by prescription to him or his house: concerning which repairs the canons require every person who hath authority to hold ecclesiastical visitation to view their churches within their jurisdictions once in three years, either in person, or cause it to be done; and they are to certify the defects to the ordinary, and the names of those who ought to repair them: and these repairs must be done by the church-wardens, at the charge of the parishioners. Can. 86: 1 Mod. 236. See post tit. Church-wardens, III. 2.

A grant of part of the chancel of a church, by a lay impropriator, to A. his heirs and assigns, is not valid in law; and therefore such grantee, or those claiming under him, cannot maintain trespass for pulling down pews there erected. Clifford, v. Wicks, 1 Barn. & A. 498.

By the common law, parishioners of every parish are bound to repair the church: but by the canon law, the parson is obliged to do it; and so it is in foreign countries. 1 Salk. 164. In London the parishioners repair both the church and the chancel. The Spiritual Court may compel the parishioners to repair the church, and excommunicate every one of them till it be repaired; but those that are willing to contribute shall be absolved till the greater part agree to a tax, when the excommunication is to be taken off; but the Spiritual Court cannot assess them towards it. 1 Mod. 194: 1 Vent. 367. For though this Court hath power to oblige the parishioners to repair by ecclesiastical censures; yet they cannot appoint in what sum, or set a rate; for that must be settled by the church-wardens, &c. 2 Mod. 8.

If a church be down, and the parish is increased, the greater part of the parish may raise a tax for the necessary enlarging it, as well as the repairing thereof, &c. 1 Mod. 237. But in some of our books it is said, that if a church falls down, the parishioners are not obliged to rebuild it; though they ought to keep it in due repair. 1 Ventr. 35. On rebuilding of churches, it is now usual to apply for, and obtain briefs, on the petition of the parishioners, to collect the charitable contributions of well disposed Christians, to assist them in the expence. See post tit. Churchwardens, III. 2.

For church ornaments, utensils, &c. the charge is upon the personal estates of the parishioners; and for this reason persons must be charged for these, where they live: but though generally lands ought not to be taxed for ornaments, yet by special custom, both lands and houses may be liable to it. 2 Inst. 489: Cro. Eliz. 843: Hetley, 131. It has been resolved that no man shall be charged for his land to contribute to the church reckonings, if he doth not reside in the same parish. Moor. 554.

For completing of St. Paul's Church, and repairing Westminster Abbey, a duty of 2s. per chaldron on coals was granted; and the church-yard is to be inclosed; and no persons build thereon, except for the use of the church.

Fifty new churches are to be built in or near London and Westminster, for the building whereof a like duty is granted upon coals, and commissioners appointed to purchase lands, ascertain bounds, &c. The rectors of which churches were to be appointed by the crown, and the first church-wardens and vestrymen, &c. to be elected by the commissioners. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 22. and see stat. 10 Ann. c. 11. A duty is also granted on coals imported into London, to be appropriated for maintaining of ministers for the fifty new churches. Stat. 1 G. 1. c. 23.

By 43 G. 3. c. 108. "to promote the building, repairing, and providing of churches and chapels, and of houses for the residence of ministers, and church-yards and glebes," persons possessed of estates in their own right, may by deed enrolled (in England, under stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16., and in Ireland under 10 Car. 1. stat. 2. c. 1. § 17.) or by will executed three months before their decease, give lands not exceeding five acres, or goods and chattels not exceeding 500l. for the purposes of the act. This act does not extend to infants, femes covert, or incapaciated persons.—Only one such gift shall be made by one person, and where the gift exceeds the legal amount, the chancellor may reduce it, § 12.—Plots of land not exceeding one acre, held in mortmain, may be granted by exchange or benefaction, for being annexed to a church, &c. § 4.

In all parochial churches and chapels to be hereafter erected, accommodation shall be provided for the poor, § 5.

By 51 G. 3. c. 115. the king is empowered to vest lands in any person for building any church, chapel, parsonage house, &c. and by the same act, any person seised in fee simple of any manor, &c. may grant five acres of the waste to any parochial church or chapel. By 54 G. 3. c. 117. rectors, &c. in Ireland, with consent of bishop, may grant one acre of glebe land for site of a new church, or church-yard. By 56 G. 3. c. 141. ecclesiastical corporate bodies are enabled to alienate lands for enlarging church-yards. See further tit. Clergy.

building of additional churches, in populous or chapel, according to the conditions in the parishes, in England and Wales, the Crown is empowered to authorise the Treasury to issue Exchequer Bills to the amount of One Million, on which the Bank may advance money for the purposes of the act. Commissioners to be appointed by the Crown, are required to examine into the state of parishes and extra-parochial places, and to ascertain in what places additional churches or chapels are most required for the exercise of the established religion of the Church. These commissioners are authorised to grant and lend sums out of the said million, for building such churches or chapels; or assisting in building them, when a proportion of the expence is raised by the subscriptions of, or rates on, the inhabitants of any parish or place.

On the representation of the commissioners, parishes may be divided into separate smaller parishes, or into ecclesiastical districts. All laws, as to the publication of banns, and the performance of marriages, christenings, churchings, and burials, are extended to such new churches and chapels. The commissioners are empowered to accept lands for the site of churches and church-yards; which corporations, tenants for life, &c. are empowered to give.-Bishops are authorised to direct the performance of a third service and sermon on Sundays, &c.—Two churchwardens are to be chosen for each new church and chapel, one by the incumbent, and one by the inhabit-Free seats are to be provided in all the new churches and chapels—pews therein may be let—no graves are to be made in the churches—existing churches may be enlarged by parishioners, who may borrow money of the commissioners for that purpose, securing the repayment on the parish rates.

By stat. 59 G. 3. c. 134. the commissioners for building new churches appointed by 58 G. 3. c. 45. are incorporated. Further powers are also given them. By 59 G. 3. c. 134: 3 G. 4. c. 72: 5 G. 4. c. 103: 7 G. 4. c. 30. they are empowered to unite parts of contiguous parishes into ecclesiastical districts for the purpose of the acts, and to build chapels for the use of such districts, and several other regulations are made for effectuating the intent of the legislature on this important act mentioned, the bishop may declare the right of nominating to be in such person, or his trustees. Provided that previous to any bishop making such declaration of the right of nomination, there shall be produced a certificate of an architect or surveyor, that the existing churches or chapels do not afford accommodation for one-third of the inhabitants, or that there are 300 persons in the parish resident upwards of two miles from the existing church or chapel.—By § 7. persons intending to build or endow a church or chapel, shall cause notice to be given to the patron and incumbent; and if the patron, within two months after such notice, shall bind himself to build and endow, to the satisfaction of the bishop, he shall be preferred. By § 9. as soon as churches or chapels are finished or consecrated, and the conditions of the act performed, the right of nomination shall be vested in the persons building and endowing them. By § 27. this act is not to affect any local act with respect to churches already built, unless with the consent of the patron.

No man shall cover his head in the church in time of divine service, except he has some infirmity, and then with a cap; and all persons are to kneel and stand, &c. as directed by the Common Prayer during service. Can. 18. A church-warden may justify taking off a person's hat. 1 Saund. 13.

Any person may be indicted for indecent or irreverent behaviour in the church; and those that offend against the acts of uniformity are punishable either by indictment upon the statute, or by the ordinary, &c. See 2 Barn. & Cres. 699. and farther tits. Church-wardens, Parsons. And as to offences in not coming to church, see tits. Dissenters, Religion.

If any person shall, by words only, quarrel, chide, or brawl, in any church or church-yard; the ordinary of the place is empowered, on proof by two witnesses, to suspend the offender, if a layman, from the entrance of the church; and if a clerk, from the ministration of his office; so long as the said ordinary shall think meet, according to the fault. If any person shall maliciously strike any person with any weapon, in any church or church-yard; or shall draw any weapon in any church or church-yard, to the intent to strike another therewith, he shall, on conviction, or verdict, or confession, or by two witnesses, at the assizes or sessions, be adjudged to have one of his ears cut off; and if he have no ears, he shall be burned in the cheek with a hot iron, having the letter F., whereby he may be known and taken for a fraymaker and fighter, and besides, he shall be and stand ipso facto, excommunicated as is aforesaid, 5 and 6 E. 6. c. 4. § 3 .- The 5 and 6 E. 3. c. 4. § 3. here noticed, relative to striking with a weapon, &c. in a church or church-yard, was repealed by the 9 G. 4. c. 31. See also Mortmain.

By stat. 27 G. 3. c. 44. no suit shall be brought in any ecclesiastical court for striking or brawling in any church or church-yard, atter the expiration of eight calendar months, from the time when such offence shall have been committed.

By stats. 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 30. § 2. persons unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to any church or chapel, or any dissenting chapel duly registered, are guilty of felony, and shall suffer death as felony, &c. CHURCH-WARDENS. Anciently styled Church-Reeves or Ecclesiæ Guardiana.] Officers instituted to protect the edifice of the church; to superintend the ceremonies of public worship; to promote the observance of religious duties; to form and execute parochial regulations; and to become, as occasion may require, the legal representatives of the body of the parish.

The office was originally confined to such matters only as concerned the church, considered materially as an edifice, building, or place of public worship; and the duty of suppressing profaneness and immorality was intrusted to two persons annually chosen by the parishioners, as assistants to the church-wardons, who from their power of inquiring into offences, detrimental to the interests of religion, and of presenting the offenders to the next provincial council, or episcopal synod, were called quest-men or synods-men, which last appellation has been converted into the name of sides-men. But great part of the duty of these testes synodales, or ancillary officers, is now devolved upon the church-wardens; the sphere of whose duty has, since the dens may be in a select vestry, or a particular defence: for it is a sanctified place, and he jestablishment of the overseers of the poor, verted into various channels by many modern acts of parliament. See Paroch. Antiq. 649. for a more particular account of the origin and progress of these sides-men.

Under this head it will be proper to consider,

- I. 1. Of the Election of Church-wardens; 2. Of Exemptions from being elected.
- II. Of their Interest in the Things belong. ing to the Church.
- III. 1. Of their Power; and, 2. Duty. IV. Of their Accounts. And see Poor.

I. 1. Of the Election of Church-wardens: 2. Of Exemptions from being elected.—They are generally chosen by the joint consent of the parishioners and minister; but by custom (on which the right of choosing these offices entirely depends, 2Atk. 650: 2 Stra. 1246.) the minister may choose one, and the parishioners another; or the parishioners alone may elect both. 1 Vent. 267. But where the custom of a parish does not take place, the election shall be according to the directions of the canons of the church: Can. 89, 90. which direct that all church-wardens or quest-men in every parish, shall be chosen by the joint consent of the minister and the parishioners, if it may be; but if they cannot agree upon such a choice, then the minister shall choose one, and the parishioners another: and without such a joint or several choice, none shall take upon them to be church-wardens. Gibs. Cod. 241, 2:1

If the parson or vicar, who has, by custom, a right to choose one church-warden, be under sentence of deprivation, the right of choosing both results to the parishioners. Carth. 118.

The parson cannot intermeddle in the choice of that church-warden which it is the right of the parishioners by custom to elect. 2 Stra. 1045. Under the word Parson a Curate is included. 2 Stra. 1246.

In most of the parishes in London, the parishioners choose both church-wardens by custom; but in all parishes erected under stat. 9 Anne, c. 22. the canon shall take place (unless the act, in virtue of which any church was erected, shall have specially provided that the parishioners shall choose both); inasmuch as no custom can be pleaded in such new par-Gibs. 215: Co. Lit. 113: 1 Ro. Abr. ishes. 339 : Cro. Jac. 532 : 1 Comm. 77.

By stat. 58 G. 3. c. 45. two church-wardens of each church built under that act are to be chosen, one by the incumbent, and one by the parishioners.

In the election of church-wardens by the parishioners, the majority of those who meet at the vestry, upon a written notice given for that purpose, shall bind the rest of the parish. Lanc, 21. See Nolon, 41.

By custom also, the choice of church-war-number of the parishioners, and not in the body of the parishioners at large. Hard. 378: 1 Mod. 181. See this Dict. tit. Vestry. Any attempt to disturb the election of churchwardens is an ecclesiastical offence, for which the party must answer in the spiritual court. 2 Barn. & A. 43.

In some cases the lord of the manor prescribeth for the appointment of church-wardens: and this shall not be tried in the Ecclesiastical Court, although it be a prescription of what appertains to a spiritual thing. God.

153: 2 Inst. 653.

Where a parish contained within itself a borough not co-extensive with it, and the mayor of the borough, on a return to a mandamus for allowing a poor rate made by the church-wardens and overseers of the whole parish, stated a custom which had existed since 43 Eliz. of appointing separate churchwardens and overseers, and of making separate rates for the borough and those parts of the parish which lay without the borough; it was holden that such custom was invalid, and the return was quashed. R. v. Gordon. 1

Barn. & A. 524.

The validity of the custom of choosing church-wardens is to be decided, like all other customs of the realm, by the courts of common law, and not by the spiritual court. Cro. Car. 552: 6 Mod. 89: 2 Ld. Raym. 1008: 3 Salk. 88: and see 7 East. 573.—So also the legality of the votes given on the election is to be determined by the common law. Burr. 1420.—But the Spiritual Court may become the means of trying the validity of the election by a return of "not elected"-" not duly elected," or any other return that answers the writ, and affords an opportunity of trying the right in an action for a false return. 1 Ld. Raym. 138: Stra. 610: 2 Ld. Raym. 1379. 1405: 2 Salk. 433: 5 Mod. 325: Cowp. 413.

When a parish certificate was granted by two persons, who described themselves on the face of it as " A. the only church-warden, and B. the only overseer of the poor of the parish," held that after a lapse of 63 years in absence of evidence to the contrary, the court would intend that the parish had by custom but one church-warden. R. v. Catesby, 4 D. & R. 434: 2 B. & C. 814.

The parishioners are sole judges of what description of persons they think proper to choose as church-wardens; the Spiritual Court therefore cannot in any case control or examine into the propriety of the election. 1 Salk. See also the authorities immediately preceding.—And the parishioners may, for misbehaviour, remove them. 13 Co. 70: Com. Dig. 3. tit. II. Of their Interest in the Things belonging to the Church.-Church-wardens are a corporation by custom, to sue and be sued for the goods of the church; and they may purchase goods, but not lands, except it be in London, by custom. Jones 439. Cro. Car. 532. 552. 4 Vin. 525. n. 1 Ld. Raym. 337: Co. Lit. 3: 5 Barn. & Cres. 433.

In the city of London, by special custom. the church-wardens, with the minister, make a corporation for lands as well as goods; and may as such, hold, purchase, and take lands for the use of the church, &c. And there is also a custom in London, that the minister is there excused from repairing the chancel of the church. 2 Cro. 325: Co. Lit. 3: 1 Rol. Abr. 330. Church-wardens may have appeal of robbery for stealing the goods of the church. 1 Rol. Abr. 393: Cro. Eliz. 179. And they may also purchase goods for the use of the parish. Mar. 22. 67: Cro. And they may dispose of the goods of the church, with the consent of the parishioners. 1 Rol. Abr. 393: 1 Vent. 89: Cro. Jac. 234: 4 Vin. 256.

But the church-wardens (except in London) have no right to, or interest in, the freehold and inheritance of the church, which alone belongs to the parson or incumbent. Comp.

A custom pleaded for the church-wardens-

If they waste the goods of the church, the new church-wurdens may have actions against them, or call them to account; though the parishioners cannot have an action against them for wasting the church goods; for they must make new church-wardens, who must prosecute the former, &c. 1 Danv. Abr. 788: 2 Cro. 845: Bro. Account, 1.

They have a certain special property in the organs, bells, parish books, bible, chalice, surplice, &c. belonging to the church; of which they have the custody on behalf of the parish, whose property they really are; for the taking away, or for any damage done any of these, the church-wardens may bring an action at law, and therefore the parson cannot sue for them in the Spiritual Court. 1 Ro. Rep. 255. Cro. Eliz. 179: 1 Vent. 89: 7 Mod. 116.

But they have not, virtute officii, the custody of the title deeds of the advowson, though they are kept in a chest in the church. 4 T. R. 351.

III. 1. Of their Power; and 2. Duty.— Church-wardens have power and authority throughout the parish, though it extends into different hundreds and counties; being, though temporal officers, employed in ecclesiastical affairs, and must therefore follow the ecclesiastical division of the kingdom. Shaw. P. L. 86.

They have, with the consent of the minister, the placing the parishioners in the seats of the body of the church, appointing gallery keepers, &c. reserving to the ordinary a power to correct the same: and in London, the churchwardens have this authority in themselves.

Particular persons may prescribe to have a seat, as belonging to them by reason of their estates, as being an ancient messuage, &c. and the seats being constantly repaired by them: also one may prescribe to any aisle in the church, to sit, and bury there, always repairing the same. 3 Inst. 202: Cro. Jac. 366. See 5 Term R. 296: 5 Barn. & A. 356. If the ordinary displaces a person claiming a seat in a church by prescription, a prohibition shall be granted, &c. 12 Rep. 106. The parson impropriate has a right to the chief seat in the chancel; but by prescription another parishioner may have it. Noy's Rep.

P. L. 99: Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

The church-wardens have not originally power to make any rate themselves, exclusive of the parishioners, their duty being only to summon the parishioners to a vestry, who are to meet for that purpose; and, when they are assembled, a rate made by the majority present shall bind the whole parish, although the church-wardens voted against it. Comp. Incumb. 389: 1 Vent. 367: 3 Term Rep. 592.

But if the church-wardens give the parishioners due notice, that they intend to meet for the purpose of making a rate to repair the church, and the parishioners refuse to come, or, being assembled, refuse to make any rate, they may make one without their concurrence; for they are liable to be punished in the Ecclesiastical Courts for not repairing the church. Church-wardens de facto may maintain an action against a former one for money received by him for the use of the parish, though the validity of the election of the plaintiffs be doubtful, and though they are not the immediate successors of the defendant. 2 W. Black.

A parish may have two divisions, with church-wardens keeping separate accounts for each division; therefore when two churchwardens in the parish of A. were elected for the township of B. and two others for the rest of the parish, who each made separate rates for their own division respectively: the churchwardens for the township of B. may maintain assumpsit against their predecessors in office, to recover a balance remaining in their hands, without joining the present or late churchwardens of the parish, either as plaintiffs or defendants, and without proving that their appointment had been wholly legal. Belfry .- Church-wardens ought to keep the keys of, and take care the bells are not rung without proper cause. Can. 88.

Briefs.—Church-wardens are by stat. 4 An. c. 14. to collect the charity-money upon briefs; which are letters patent issuing out of Chancery, to rebuild churches, restore loss'by fire, &c., which are to be read in churches; and the sums collected, &c. to be indersed on the briefs in words at length, and signed by the minister and church-wardens; after which they shall be delivered, with the money col-lected, to the persons undertaking them, in a certain time, under the penalty of 20l. A register is to be kept of all money collected, &c. Also the undertakers in two months after the receipts of the money, and notice to sufferers, are to account before a Master in Chancery, appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Church briefs, which are mentioned under this title, are now abolished.

Burial.—The consent of the church-wardens must be had for burying a person in a different parish from that in which he dies. It is their duty not to suffer suicides, or excommunicated persons, to be buried in the church or church-yard, without licence from the bishop. By stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3. they are to apply to the magistrates to convict offenders for not burying in woollen. See also post, Register.

Butter and Cheese .- The penalties under stat. 13 and 14 Car. 2. c. 26. for reforming abuses in, are payable to the church-wardens of the parish where the offence is committed.

Chimney-sweepers .- See that tit. in this Dict. Church.—Church-wardens or quest-men are to take care it be well aired, the windows glazed, the floors well paved, &c. If churchwardens erect or add a new gallery, &c. they must have the consent of the parishioners, and a licence of the ordinary, but not for occasional repairs. 2 Inst. 439: 1 Mod. 273. See ante, III. 1. They must also take care to have in the church a large bible, a book of common prayer, a book of homilies, a font of stone, a decent communion table; with bread and wine for the communion, a table-cloth, carpet, and flagon, plate, and bowl of silver, gold, or 'pewter. Can. 20. Y. B.8 H. 5. p. 4: Doct. & Stud. 118: Deg. 151. Church-wardens also are to sign certificates of persons taking the sacrament, to qualify for offices. They are to see that the ten commandments are set up at the East end of the church, and other chosen sentences upon the walls, with a reading desk and a pulpit, and a chest for alms, all at the charge of the parish. It is also the duty of church-wardens to prevent any irreverence or indecency from being committed in the church; and therefore they may pull off a person's hat in the church, or even turn him out if he attempts to disturb the congregation. Church-yards.—By the canons of the church it is ordained that the church-wardens, or quest-men, shall take care that the churchyards be well and sufficiently repaired, found, and maintained with walls, rails, or pales, as have been in each place accustomed, at their charges, unto whom the same, by law, appertaineth; they are also to see that the church be well kept and repaired; and by a constitution of Archbishop Winchelsea, this charge is to be at the expence of the parishioners. 2 Inst. 489. (But one who has land adjoining to the church-yard may by custom be bound to keep the fences in repair.) Church-wardens shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers. church-ales, drinkings, temporal courts or leets, lay juries, musters, or any profane usage, to be kept in the church or churchyard .- Nor shall they suffer any idle persons to abide either in the church-yard or the church-porch during the time of divine service or preaching, but shall cause them to come in or to depart. So also, by the common law, church-wardens may justify the removal of tumultuous persons from the churchyard to prevent them from disturbing the congregation whilst the minister is performing the rites of burial. 1 Mod. 168. And by the canon law may prevent an excommuni-cated person from even entering into the church-yard at any time or on any pretence. By 59 G. 3. c. 12. § 17. all buildings and lands purchased and hired by church-wardens and overseers, by authority and for the purposes of the act, shall be conveyed, devised, and assured to the church-wardens and overseers and their successors, in trust for the parish; and such church-wardens, &c. shall and may accept, take, and hold in virtue of a body corporate on bchalf of the parish, all buildings and lands belonging to the parish, &c.

By the 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 59. the churchwardens and overseers may inclose from any forest or waste lands belonging to the Crown, with the consent of the Treasury, any portion of such forest or waste not exceeding 50 acres, for cultivating and improving the same for the use and benefit of such parish and the poor persons within the same.

Game .- Church-wardens are to receive the penalties under stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Greenwich Hospital .- Church-wardens are to sign certificates of out-pensioners under stat. 3 G. 3. c. 16.

Hawkers and Pedlars.—Church-wardens are to apprehend, and receive the penalties under stat. 9 and 10 W. 3. c. 27, and 9 G. 2. c. 23.

Non-conformists.—Church-wardens to levy the penalty of 12d. on persons not coming to church each Sunday, under stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

Parson.-Church-wardens are to observe whether he reads the thirty-nine articles twice a year, and the canons once in the year, preaches every Sunday good doctrine, reads the Common Prayer, celebrates the sacraments, preaches in his gown, visits the sick, catechises children, marries according to law, Parishioners.-Church-wardens to see if they come to church, and duly attend the worship of God: if baptism be neglected; women not churched; persons marrying in prohibited degrees, or without bans or licence: alms-houses or schools abused; legacies given to pious uses; &c. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 291: Vent. 114.

Poor .- Church-wardens are to act in conjunction with the overseers; every churchwarden being an overseer, but not è contrà.-

See this Dict. tit. Overseer, Poor.

By 55 G. 3. c. 137. no church-warden (overseer. &c.) is to be concerned in any contract for supplying the poor, while he is in such office, on penalty of 100l., except in certain cases of necessity specified in the act, under a certificate of two justices of the peace. See 3 Barn. & A. 145. An overseer who supplied coals indirectly for the use of the poor was held not liable to any penalty, unless he did it for his own profit. 3 Barn. & Cres. 6. A farmer furnished the produce of his land to the poor of the parish at a fair market price; he was held liable to penalties under the 55 G. 3. c. 137. 8 Taunt. 239.

Presentments .- Church-wardens, by their oath, are to present, or certify to the bishop or his officers, all things presentable by the ecclesiastical law, which relate to the church, to the minister, and to the parishioners. The articles which are delivered to church-wardens for their guidance in this respect, are, for the most part, founded on the book of canons, and on rubricks of the common prayer. They are also bound by the 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. to prevent tippling or drunkenness, and by 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. parish; though the validity of the election of recusants. They need not take a fresh oath the plaintiffs to their office be doubtful, and upon each presentment they make, than once a year; but they may do it a

as they please, except there is a custom in the parish to the contrary; and, upon default or neglect in the church-wardens, the minister may present; but such presentment ought to be upon oath. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 285. 291: 1 Vent. 86. 114; and see 1 Vent. 127: 1 Saund. 13: 1 Sid. 463.

Rates.-See ante, III. 1.

Recusants .- See Presentments, Non-con-

Registers .- Church-wardens shall provide a box wherein to keep the parish register, with three locks and three keys; two of the keys to be kept by them, and one by the minister: and every Sunday they shall see that the minister enter therein all the christenings, weddings, and burials that have happened the week before; and at the bottom of every page, they shall, with the minister, subscribe their names: and they shall, within a month after the 25th day of March, yearly, transmit to the bishop a copy thereof for the year before, subscribed as above. By stat. 23 G. 3. c. 67. upon the entry of any burial, marriage, birth, or christening in the register of any parish, precinct, or place, a stamp duty of 3d. shall be paid; and therefore the churchwardens and overseers, or one of them, are directed to provide a book for this purpose, with proper stamps for each entry, and to pay for the same, and for the stamps contained therein, out of the rates under their management; and to receive back the moneys which shall be so paid from the persons authorised to demand and receive the said duties.

Sunday.-Church-wardens to levy penalties for profaning: under stat. 1 Car. 1.c. 1, and 29 Car. 2. c. 7.

IV. Of their Accounts .- At the end of the year the church-wardens are to yield just accounts to the minister and parishioners, and deliver what remains in their hands to the parishioners or to new church-wardens: in case they refuse, they may be presented at the next visitation, or the new officers may by process call them to account before the ordinary, or sue them by writ of account at common law. Shaw. P. L. 76. 12 Mod. 9: Bro. Account. But in laying out their money, they are punishable for fraud only, not indiscretion. Gibs. 196: 1 Burn's Just. 349: Shaw. P. L. 76. CHURCHESSET, or churchset, ciricseat.] A Saxon word used in Domesday, which is interpreted quasi semen ecclesia, corn paid to the church. Fleta says, it signifies a certain measure of wheat, which in times past every man on St. Martin's day gave to holy church, as well in the times of the Britons as of the English; yet many great persons, after the coming of the Romans, gave their contribution according to the ancient law of Moses, in the name of first fruits; as in the writ of King Canutus sent to the Pope is particularly contained, in which they call it churchsed. CINQUE PORTS, quinque portus.] Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought to be vigilantly guarded and preserved against invasion: in which respect they have an especial government, called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and divers privileges granted them, as a peculiar jurisdiction; their warden having not only the authority of an admiral amongst them, but sending out writs in his own name, &c. 4 Inst. 222.

Cambden says, that Kent is accounted the key of England; and that William, called the Conqueror, was the first that made a constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports, which he did to bring that country under a stricter submission to his government; but King John was the first who granted the privileges to those ports which they still enjoy: however, it was upon condition that they should provide a certain number of ships at their own charge for forty days, as often as the king should have occasion for them in the wars, he being then under a necessity of having a navy for passing into Normandy, to recover that dukedom which he And this service the Barons of the Cinque Ports acknowledged and performed, upon the king's summons, attending with their ships the time limited at their proper costs, and staying as long after as the king pleased at his own charge. Somner of Roman Ports in Kent. See this Dict. tit. Navy.

The Cinque Ports, as we now account them, are, Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Winchelsea, and Rye; and to these we may add Hythe and Hastings, which are reckoned as part or members of the Cinque Ports; though by the first instituton it is said that Winchelsea and Rye were added as members, and that the others were the Cinque Ports: there are also several other towns adjoining that have the privileges of the ports. These Cinque Ports have certain franchises to hold pleas, &c. and the king's writs do not run there: but on a judgment in any of the king's courts. if the defendant hath no goods, &c. except in the ports, the plaintiff may get the records certified into Chancery, and from thence sent by mittimus to the Lord Warden to make several courts within the Cinque Ports; one annum out of his manor of B., and after the before the constable, others within the parts grantee disseiseth the granter of the same themselves, before the mayors and jurats; manor, who brings an assise and recovers the another, which is called curia quinque portuum opud Shepway: there is likewise a court of Chancery, in the Cinque Ports, to decide matters of equity; but no original writs issue thence, 1 Danv. Ab. 793. The jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports is general, extending to personal, real, and mixed actions; and if any erroneous judgment is given in the Cinque Ports before any of the mayors and jurats, error lies according to the custom, by bill in nature of error, before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, in his court of Shepway. And in these cases the mayor and jurats may be fined, and the mayor removed, &cc. 4 Inst. 334: Cromp. Jurisd. 138.-And error lies from the court of Shepway to the Court of K. B. Jenk. 71; 1 Sid. 356.

It has been observed that the Cinque Ports are not jura regulia, like counties palatine, but are parcel of the county of Kent; so that if a writ be brought against one for land within the Cinque Ports, and he appears and pleads to it, and judgment is given against him in the Common Pleas, this judgment shall bind him; for the land is not exempted out of the county, and the tenant may waive the benefit of his privilege. By stat. 51 G. 3. c. 36. the king is empowered to appoint justices of the peace within and throughout the liberties of the Cinque Ports for facilitating the execution of justice; but such justices are not to interfere with the power of the sessions within the several Cinque Ports, nor within the corporate towns of Pevensey, Scaford, Lydd, Folkestone, Feversham, Fordwich, Tenterden, or Deal; nor to claim any authority with those towns, nor any right or privilege belonging to any member of those corporations.

CIRCADA. A tribute anciently paid to the bishop or archdeacon for visiting the churches. Du Fresne.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION, circuitus actionis.] A longer course of proceeding to recover a thing sued for than is needful: as panelled appear not, or appearing are challand, and 201. damages, which being paid, the grantee brings his action for 10l. of his rent due during the time of the disseisin, which he must have had if no disseisin had been: this is called circuity of action, because as the grantor was to receive 20l. damages, and pay 10l. rent, he might have received but 10l. only for damages, and the grantee might have kept the other 10l. in his hands by way of retainer for his rent, and so saved his action, which appears to be needless. de Ley. If the obligce in a bond covenant not to sue the obligors, this may be pleaded as a release in order to avoid circuity of action; but if he covenant not to sue one of two obligors, this shall not operate as a release to the other. See tit. Action; and see 4 Term R. 470.

CIRCUITS. Certain divisions of the kingdom appointed for the judges to go twice a year, for administering of justice in the several counties. These circuits are made in the respective vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms. As to their antiquity, see Madd. Hist. Exch. c. 3. § 12: Wynnes, Eun. v. 2. 577.

See tits. Assize, Nisi Prius.

The several counties of England are divided into six circuits, viz. 1. MIDLAND; containing the counties of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Leicester, Warwick-2. Norfolk; Bucks, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk—3. Home; Hertford, Essex, Kent, Sussex, Surrey—4. Oxford; Berks, Oxford, Hereford, Salop, Gloucester, Monmouth, Stafford, Worcester—5. Western; Southampton, Wilts, Dorset, Devon, Cornwall, Somerset—6. Northern; York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Lancashire. Wales is now divided into two circuits, one embracing the counties of North Wales and Chester, and the other the counties of South Wales. And since the 1 W. 4. c. 70. one of the English judges holds the assizes for the several counties of South Wales, and one for the counties of North Wales, and the two judges together hold the assizes at Chester. See farther, tit. Assize. See 3 G. 4. c. 10. as to the power of opening and reading the circuit commissions on a day subsequent to the day named therein. See 3 and 4 W. 4. c. 71. § 3. under Justices of Assize.

CIRCUMSPECT AGATIS. Is the title of a statute made anno 13 E. 1 st. 4. relating to prohibitions, prescribing certain cases to the judges, wherein the king's prohibition lies not. 2 Inst. 187. See tit. Prohibition.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. See

tit. Evidence.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS. By-standers; a word of art, signifying the supplying or making up the number of jurors, if any imif a person grant a rent-charge of 101. per lenged by either party, by adding to them so many of such as are present, or standing by quest; for in the time of the Saxons there (tales de circumstantibus,) who are qualified as will serve the turn. See tit. Jury.

CIRCUMVENTION, is any act of fraud, whereby a person is reduced to a deed by decreet. Scotch Dict.

CITATION, citatio.] A summons to appear, applied particularly to process in the Spiritual Court. The Ecclesiastical Courts proceed according to the course of the civil and canon laws, by citation, libel, &c. A person is not generally to be cited to appear out of the diocese, or peculiar jurisdiction where he lives; unless it be by the archbishop, in default of the ordinary; where the ordinary is party to the suit, in cases of appeal, &c., and by law a defendant may be sued where he lives, though it is for subtracting tithes in another diocese, &c. 1 Nels. 449. By the stat. 23 H. 8. c. 9. every archbishop may cite any person dwelling in any bishop's diocese within his province for heresy, &c., if the bishop or other ordinary consents; or if the bishop or ordinary, or judge, do not do his duty in punishing the offence. Where persons are cited out of their diocese, and live out of the jurisdiction of the bishop, a prohibition, or consultation, may be granted; but where persons live in the diocese, if when they are cited they do not appear, they are to be excommunicated, &c. The above statute was made to maintain the jurisdiction of inferior dioceses; and if any person is cited out of the diocese, &c., where the civil or canon law doth not allow it, the party grieved shall have double damages. If one defame another within the peculiar of the archbishop, he may be punished there; although he dwell in any remote place out of the archbishop's peculiar. Godb. 190. See tit. Courts Ecclesiastical.

CITY, civitas.] According to Cowel is a town corporate, which hath a bishop and cathedral church, which is called civitas, oppidum and urbs; civitas, in regard it is governed by justice and order of magistracy; oppidum, for that it contains a great number of inhabitants; and urbs, because it is in due form begirt about with walls. But Crompton, in his Jurisdictions, where he reckons up the cities, leaveth out Ely, although it hath a bishop and cathedral church; and puts in Westminster, though it hath not at present a bishop: and Sir Edward Coke makes Cambridge a city; yet there is no mention that it was ever an episcopal see. Indeed it appears by the stat. 35 H. 8. c. 10. that there was a bishop of Westminster; see tit. Bishops; since which in stat. 17 Eliz. c. 5. it is termed a city or borough: and notwithstanding what Coke observes of Cambridge, in the old stat. 11 H. 7. c. 4. Cambridge is called only a town.

Kingdoms have been said to contain as many cities as they have sees of archbishops and bishops; but according to Blount, city is a word which hath obtained since the Con- which the old Romans used, compiled from were no cities, but all great towns were called burghs, and even London was then styled London Bourg; as the capital of Scotland is now called Ediuburgh. And long after the Conquest the word city is used promiscuously with the word burgh, as in the charter of Leicester it is called both civitas and burgus; which shows that those writers were mistaken that tell us every city was or is a bishop's see. And though the word city signifies with us such a town corporate as hath usually a bishop and cathedral church, yet it is not always so.

A city, says Blackstone, is a town incorporated, which is or hath been the see of a bishop; and though the bishoprick be dissolved, as at Westminster, yet still it remaineth a city. 1 Comm. 114.

It appears, however, that Westminster retained the name of city, not because it had been a bishop's see, but because it was expressly created such, in the letters-patent by King Hen. VIII. erecting it into a bishoprick. -See Burnet's Reform. Appx. There was a similar clause in favour of the other five new created cities, Chester, Peterborough, Oxford, Gloucester, and Bristol: the charter for Chester is in Gib. Cod. 1449; and that for Oxford in 14 Rym. Fæd. 854. Lord Coke seems anxious to rank Cambridge among the cities. Mr. Wooddeson, late Vinerian Professor (see his Lectures, i. 302.) has produced a decisive authority that cities and bishops' sees had not originally any necessary connexion with each other. It is that of Ingulphus, who relates that at the great council assembled in 1072, to settle the claim of precedence between the two archbishops, it was decreed that bishops' sees should be transferred from towns to cities.

The accidental coincidence of the same number of bishops and cities would naturally produce the supposition that they were connected together as a necessary cause and effect; it is certainly a strong confirmation of the above authority that the same distinction is not paid to bishops' sees in Ireland.

Mr. Hargrave, in his notes to 1 Inst. 110, proves that although Westminster is a city, and has sent citizens to parliament from the time of Ed. VI. it never was incorporated; and this is a striking instance in contradiction of the learned opinions there referred to, viz. that the king could not grant within time of memory to any place the right of sending members to parliament without first creating that place a corporation. 1 Comm. edit. 1793, in n. See also tits. Parliament, Bishops, Borough, &c.

CIVIL LAW. Is defined to be that law which every particular nation, commonwealth, or city, has established peculiarly for itself: jus civils est, quod quisque populus sibi constituit. Just. Inst. Now more properly distinguished by the name of municipal law: the term Civil Law being chiefly applied to that man law was founded first, upon the regal constitutions of their ancient kings; next upon the twelve tables of the Decemviri; then upon the laws or statutes enacted by the Senate or people; the edicts of the Prator and the Responsa Prudentum, or opinions of learned lawyers; and lastly upon the imperial decrees or constitutions of successive emperors.-These had by degrees grown to an enormous bulk; but the inconvenience arising therefrom was in part remedied, by the col-lections of three private lawyers, Gregorius, Hermogenes, and Papsnius; and afterwards by the Emperor Theodosius the younger, by whose orders a code was compiled, A. D. 438, being a methodical collection of all the imperial constitutions then in force; which Theodosian Code was the only book of civil law received as authentic in the western part of Europe, till many centuries after.—For Justinian commanded only in the eastern remains of the empire; and it was under his auspices that the present body of Civil Laws was compiled and finished by Trebonian, about the year 533.

This consists of—1. The Institutes; which contain the elements or first principles of the Roman law, in four books .- 2. The Digests or Pandects, in fifty books; containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digested in a systematic method .- 3. A New Code, or collection of imperial constitutions, in twelve books; the lapse of a century having rendered the former code of Theodosius imperfect .- 4. The Novels, or new constitutions posterior in time to the other books, and amounting to a supplement to the code containing new decrees of successive emperors, as new questions happened to arise.-These form the body of the Roman law, or Corpus Juris Civilis, as published about the time of Justinian; which, however, soon fell into neglect and oblivion till about the year 1130, when a copy of the Digests was found at Amalfi, in Italy; which accident, concurring with the policy of the Roman ecclesiastic, suddenly gave a new vogue and authority to the Civil Law, and introduced it into several nations. 1 Comm. 80, 81.

The Digests or Pandects, was collected from the works and commentaries of the ancient lawyers, some whereof lived before the coming of our Saviour. The whole Digest is divided into seven parts: the first part contains the elements of the law, as what is justice, right, &c. The second part treats of judges and judgments. The third part of personal action, &c. The fourth part of contracts, pawns, and pledges. The fifth part of wills, testaments, &c. The sixth part of the possession of goods. The seventh part of obligations, crimes, punishments, &c. The Institutes contain a system of the whole body of law, and are an epitome of the Digest divided into four books; but sometimes they the law of nature and of nations. The Ro-, because they are for instruction, and show an easy way to the obtaining a knowledge of the Civil Law: but they are not so distinct and comprehensive as they might be, nor so useful at this time as they were at first. The Novels or Authentics, were published at several times, without any method; they are termed Novels as they are new laws, and Authentics, being authentically translated from the Greek into the Latin tongue; and the whole volume is divided into nine collations, constitutions, or sections; and they again into 168 novels, which also are distributed into certain chapters. The first collation relates to heirs, executors, &c.; the second the state of the church; the third is against bawds; the fourth concerns marriages, &c.; the fifth forbids the alienation of the possessions of the church; the sixth shows the legitamacy of children, &c.; the seventh determines who shall be witnesses; the eighth ordains wills to be good, though imperfect, &c.; and the ninth contains matter of succession in goods, &c. Dict. See Gibbon's Decline and Fall, vol. 8. chap. 44.

To these tomes of the Civil Law we may add the Book of Feuds, which contains the customs and services that the subject or vassal oweth to his prince or lord, for such lands or fees as he holdeth of him. The Constitutions of the Emperor were either by a rescript, which was the letter of the Emperor in answer to particular persons who inquired the law of him; or by edict, which the Emperor established of his own accord, that it might be generally observed by every subject; or by decree, which the Emperor pronounced between plaintiff and defendant, upon hearing a particular cause. The power of issuing forth rescripts, edicts, and decrees, was given to the prince by the lex regia, wherein the people of Rome wholly submitted themselves to the government of one person, viz. Julius Cæsar, after the defeat of Pompey, &c. And by this submission the prince could not only make laws, but was esteemed above all coercive power of them. Dict.

How far the Civil Law is adopted and of force in this kingdom, see tit. Canon Law.

Before the Reformation decrees were as frequent in the Canon Law as in the Civil Law.—Many were graduates in utroque jure or utriusque juris. J. U. D. or juris utriusque doctor, is still common in foreign universities. But Hen. VIII. in the twenty-seventh year of his reign, when he had renounced the authority of the Pope, issued a mandate to the University of Cambridge, to prohibit lectures and the granting degrees in Canon Law in that University. Stat. Acad. p. 137 .- it is probable that at the same time Oxford received a similar prohibition, and that degrees in canon law have ever since been discontinued in England. 1 Comm. 392. in n. called a cley. Paroch. Antiq. p. 575. CLARENDON, Constitutions of. Certain Constitutions made in the reign of Henry II. A. D. 1164, in a great council held at Clarendon, whereby the King checked the power of the Pope, and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the secular jurisdiction. 4 Com. 422.

CLARETUM. A liquor made of wine and honey, clarified or made clear by decoction, &c., which the Germans, French, and English, called hippocras: and it was from this the red wines of France were called claret,-Girald. Camb. apud Wharton. Ang. Sax. Par. 2, p. 480.

CLAIM, clameum. A challenge of interest in any thing that is in the possession of another, or at least out of a man's own possession; as claim by charter, by descent, &c.

In Plow. Comm. 359. (a) Dyer, C. J. is said to have defined claim to be, a challenge of the ownership or property that one hath not in possession, but which is detained from him by wrong.

CLAIM is either verbal, where one doth by words claim and challenge the thing that is so out of his possession; or it is by an action brought, &c.; and sometimes it relates to lands, and sometimes to goods and chattels. Lit. Sect. 420. Where any thing is wrongfully detained from a person, this claim is to be made; and the party making it may thereby avoid descents of lands, disseisins, &c. and preserve his title, which otherwise would be in danger of being lost. Co. Lit. 250. man who hath present right or title to enter, must make a claim; and in case of reversions, &c. one may make a claim where he hath right, but cannot enter on the lands: when a person dares not make an entry on the land, for fear of being beaten or other injury, he may approach as near as he can to the land, and claim the same; and that shall be sufficient to vest the seisin in him. 1 Inst. 250. See tit. Entry.

If nothing doth hinder a man, having a right to land, from entering or making his claim; there he must do so, before he shall be said to be in possession of it, or can grant it over to another; but where the party who hath right is in possession already, and where an entry or claim cannot be made, it is otherwise. I Rep. 157. A claim will divest an estate out of another, when the party must enter into some part of the land; but if it be only to bring him into possession, he may do it in view. By claim of lands in most cases is intended a claim with an entry into part of the lands, or by a near approach to it. Co. Lit.

an estate for years, or after a statute-merchant, staple, or elegit, may enter and make a claim to prevent a descent or avoid a collateral warrantry. And claim of a remainder by force of a condition must be upon the land, or it will not be sufficient. Co. Lit. 202.

If a man seised of lands in right of his wife make a fcoffment in fee on condition, and the husband dieth, and then the condition is broken, and the heir enters; in this case the wife need not claim to get possession of her estate, for the law doth vest it in her without any claim. Co. Lit. 202: 8 Rep. 43.

The claim of the particular tenant shall be good for him in reversion or remainder; and of him in reversion, &c. for particular tenant: so claim of a copyholder will be good for the lord, &c. But if tenant for years, in a court of record, claim the fee of his land, it is a forfeiture of his estate. Plowd. 359: Co. Lit. 251. A claim may be made by the party himself, and sometimes by his servants or deputy: and a guardian in soccage, &c. may claim, or enter, in the name of the infant that hath right, without any commandment. Co. Lit. 245.

Claim or entry should be made as soon as may be; and by the Common Law it is to be within a year and a day after the disseisin, &c.; and if the party who hath unjustly gained the estate do afterwards occupy the land, in some cases an assize, trespass, or forcible entry, may be had against him. Lit. Sect. 426. 430.

If a fine is levied of lands, strangers to it are to enter and make a claim within five years, or be barred: infants after their age, feme coverts after the death of their husbands, &c. have the like time by stat. 1 R. 3. c. 7. See tit. Fines.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, is where a man hath right and title to enter into any lands or tenements, whereof another is seised in fee, or in fee tail; if he who hath title to enter makes continual claim to the lands or tenements before the dying seised of him who holdeth the tenements, then, though such tenant die thereof seised, and the lands or tenements descend to his heir, yet may he who hath made such continual claim, or his heir, enter into the lands or tenements so descended, by reason of the continual claim made, notwithstanding the descent. So (Si come), in case a man be disseised, and the disseisee makes continual claim to the tenements in the life of the disseisor, although the disseisor dieth disseised in fee, and the land descend to his heir, yet may the disseisee enter upon the possession of the heir, notwithstanding the descent. Litt. § 414.

But such claim must always be made within the year and the day before the death of the person holding the land; for if such tenant do not die seised within a year and a day after such claim made, and yet he that hath right dares not enter, he must make another claim, within the year and the day after | CLAUSUM FREGIT. See tits. Capias, the first claim, and so toties quoties, that he Common Pleas. may be sure his claim shall always have been made within a year and a day before the death of the tenant; and hence it seems it is called Continual Claim. See farther tit. Entry; as also Descent.

By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 43. five years must clapse without entry or continual claim, in order that a descent on the disseisor's death should take away the entry of the disseisee, or his heir; but after the five years the disseisee must make continual claim, as before the statute. And by stat. 4 Anne, c. 16. § 16. no claim (or entry) shall be of effect to avoid a fine, unless an action shall be commenced thereon within a year, and prosecuted with effect. See tits. Fine, Entry, Disseisen, &c.— And for farther particulars, see 1 Inst. 150. and n. Its efficacy in preserving a right of entry is now taken away. See Entry, Limitation of Actions, II. 1.

CLERGY.—Clerus.] Signifies the assembly or body of clerks or ecclesiastics, being taken for the whole number of those who are de clero Domini, of our Lord's lot or share, as the tribe of Levi was in Judea; and are separate from the noise and bustle of the world, that they may have leisure to spend their time in the duties of the Christian religion.

The clergy in general were heretofore divided into regular and secular; those being regular which lived under certain rules, being of some religious order, and were called men of religion, or, the religious; such as all abbots, priors, monks, &c. The secular were those that lived not under any certain rules of the religious orders, as bishops, deans, parsons, &c .- Now, the word clergy comprehends all persons in holy orders, and in ecclesiastical offices, viz. archbishops, bishops, deans and chapters, archdeacons, rural deans, parsons (who are either rectors or vicars,) and curates,-to which may be added parish clerks, who formerly frequently were, and yet sometimes are, in orders.—As to the law more peculiarly respecting each of these, see the several tits. particularly tit. Parson.

This venerable body of men have several privileges allowed them by our municipal laws, and had formerly much greater, which were abridged at the time of the reformation, on account of the ill use which the Popish clergy had endeavoured to make of them; for the laws having exempted them from almost every personal duty, they attempted a total exemption from every secular tie. The personal exemptions, however, for the most part continue; a clergyman cannot be compelled to serve on a jury, nor to appear at a Court Leet, or view of frank-pledge, which almost every other person is obliged to do. 2 Inst. 4. (See tit. Court Leet.) But if a layman is summoned on a jury, and before the trial takes orders, he shall, notwithstanding, appear and be sworn. 4 Leon. 190. A clergyman cannot be chosen to any temporal office, as bailiff, reeve, constable, or the like, in regard of his own continual attendance on the sacred function. Finch, L. 88. During his attendance on divine service he is privileged from arrests in civil suits; for a reasonable time, eundo, redeundo, & morando, to perform service. Stats. 50 E. 3. c. 5: 1 R. 2. c. 16: 12

By the statute called Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. st. 1. c. 3, if any person lay violent hands on a clerk, the amends for the peace broken shall be before the king (that is, by indictment,) and the assailant may also be sued before the bishop, that excommunication or bodily penance may be imposed; which, if the offender will redeem by money, it may be sued for before the bishop. See 4 Comm. 217.

So much of the statute Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. st. 1. c. 3., as related to assaults on clerks in orders, was repealed by the 9 G. 4. c. 31., under which assaults upon clergymen stand on the same footing as assaults on other

Although the Clergy claimed an exemption from all secular jurisdiction, yet Mat. Paris tells us, that soon after William the First had conquered Harold, he subjected the bishoprics and abbeys who held per baroniam, that they should be no longer free from military service; and for that purpose he in an arbitrary manner registered how many soldiers every bishopric and abbey should provide, and send to him and his successors in time of war; and having placed these registers of ecclesiastical servitude in his treasury, those who were aggrieved departed out of the realm: but the clergy were not till then exempted from all secular service; because, by the laws ony he had (while it existed) benefit of clergy, secular magistrate in three cases, viz. upon any expedition to the wars, and to contribute to the building and repairing of bridges, and of castles for the defence of the kingdom. It is probable, that by expedition to the wars it was not at that time intended they should personally serve, but contribute towards the charge: one they must do, as appears by the petition to the king, anno 1267, viz. Ut omnes clerici tenentes per baroniam vel feudum laicum, personaliter armati procederent contra regis adversarios, vel tantum servitium in expeditione regis invenirent, quantum pertineret ad tantum terram vel tenementum. But their answer was, that they ought not to fight with the military but with the spiritual sword, that is, with prayers and tears; that they were to maintain peace and not war; and that their baronies were founded on charity; for which reason they ought not to perform any military Blount. service.

That the clergy had greater privileges and exemptions at common law than the laity is certain; for they are confirmed to them by Magna Charta, and other ancient statutes; but these privileges are in a great measure lost, the clergy being included under general words in later statutes; so that clergymen are liable to all public charges imposed by act of parliament, where they are not particularly excepted as above stated. Their bodies are not to be taken upon statute-merchant or staple, &c.; for the writ to take the body of the conusor is si laicus sit; and if the sheriff or any other officer arrest a clergyman upon any such process, it is said an action of false imprisonment lies against him that does it, or the clergyman arrested may have a superse-deas out of Chancery. 2 Inst. 4.

In action of trespass, account &c. against a person in holy orders, wherein process of capias lies, if the sheriff return that the defendant is clericus beneficiatus nullum habens laicum feodum ubi summoneri potest; in this case the plaintiff cannot have a capias to arrest his body; but the writ ought to issue to the bishop, to compel him to appear, &c. But on execution had against such clergyman, a sequestration shall be had of the profits of his benefice. 2 Inst. 4: Degge, 157.

By stat. 9 G. 4. c. 31. § 23. the arresting a clergyman on civil process while performing divine service (or in his going or returning) is made a misdemeanor.

The foregoing are all the privileges remaining on civil accounts: though by the common law, they were to be free for the payment of tolls, in all fairs and markets, as well for all the goods gotten upon their church-livings, as for all goods and merchandises by them bought to be spent upon their rectories; and they had several other exemptions, &c.

Upon proof of repeated acts of incontinency, habitual profligacy, and immorality of a clergyman, coupled with constant neglect of duty, the Ecclesiastical Court is bound at once to proceed to deprivation. Burgoyne v., or, after conviction, by way of arresting judg Free, affirmed by the delegates, 2 Hagg. Rep. 556, 662.

CLERGY, BENEFIT OF. This was formerly a subject of great importance and curiosity. It is treated of at length in Blackstone's chapter on that subject. 4 Comm. 305. By the act 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. § 6. (for England) and 9 G. 4. c. 54. § 12. (for Ireland) this privilege is abolished. The distinction therefore between the various sorts of felonies now is, their being capital or not capital; the former being punishable by death, and the latter by transportation, imprisonment, &c. A proviso is added to the repealing clause, "that nothing in the act contained shall prevent the joinder in any indictment of any counts which might have been joined before the passing of the act."

By a previous act of 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 27. the several statutes regulating this privilege were repealed.

By § 7. of the act 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 28. (and § 13. of the act 9 G. 4. c. 54.) it is enacted that no person convicted of felony shall suffer death, unless for some felony excluded from the benefit of clergy, before the first day of the session in which the act was passed, or made punishable with death by some act passed after that day.

By subsequent sections of the acts every person convicted of felony not punishable by death shall be punished in manner prescribed by the acts relating to the felony; and every person convicted of any felony for which no punishment is specially provided shall be deemed punishable by transportation, imprisonment, &c. See farther tits. Felony, Larceny, Transportation, &c.

This Benefit of Clergy had its original from the pious regard paid by Christian princes to the church in its infant state; and the ill use the Popish ecclesiastics soon made of that pious regard. The exemptions which they granted to the church were principally of two kinds: 1. Exemption of places consecrated to religious duties from criminal arrests, which was the foundation of sanctuaries; 2. Exemption of the persons of clergymen from criminal process before the secular judge in a few particular cases, which was the true original and meaning of the privilegium clericale.

In England, however, a total exemption of the clergy from secular jurisdiction could never be thoroughly effected, though often endeavoured by the clergy; and therefore, though the ancient privilegium clericale was, in some capital cases, yet it was not univereally allowed. And in those particular cases the use at first was for the bishop or ordinary missioners of the Navy. See stat. 22 and 23 to demand his clerks to be remitted out of Car. 2. c. 11. But see now as to the transfer the king's courts as soon as they were indicted: till it was finally settled, in the reign of miralty, 2 W. 4. c. 40. Henry IV. that the prisoner should first be arraigned, and might either then claim his Chancery, is an officer that files all affidavits benefit of clergy, by way of declinatory plea; made use of in court.

ment. The latter was most usually practised, being more to the satisfaction of the court to have the crime previously ascertained by confession, or the verdict of a jury; and also more advantages to the prisoner himself, who might possibly be acquitted, and so need not the benefit of his clergy at all.

CLERICO INFRA SACROS ORDINES CONSTITUTO, NON ELIGENDO IN OFFICIUM. A writ directed to those who have thurst a bailiwick, or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him. Reg. Orig. 143.

CLERICO CAPTO PER STATUTUM MERCATORUM, &c. A writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is taken and imprisoned upon the breach of a statute merchant. Reg. Orig.

147. See ante, tit. Clergy.

CLERICO CONVICTO COMMISSO GAOLÆ IN DE-FECTU ORDINARII DELIBERANDO. An ancient writ, that lay for the delivery of a clerk to his ordinary, that was formerly convicted of felony, by reason his ordinary did not challenge him according to the privileges of clerks. Reg. Orig. 69. See ante, tit. Clergy.

CLERK, clericus.] The law term for a clergyman, and by which all of them who have not taken a degree are designated in deed, &c. In the most general signification is one that belongs to the holy ministry of the church; under which, where the Canon Law hath full power, are not only comprehended sacerdotes and diaconi, but also subdiaconi, lectores, acolyti, exorcista, and ostiarii: but the word has been anciently used for a secular priest; in opposition to a religious or regular; Paroch. Antiq. 171; and is said to be properly a minister or priest, one who is more particularly called in sortem Domini. Blount.

CLERK. In another sense denotes a person who practices his pen in any court, or otherwise; of which elerks there are various kinds, in several offices, &c. The clergy, in the early ages, as they engrossed almost every other branch of learning, so were they peculiarly remarkable for their proficiency in the study of the law. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus is the character given of them soon after the Conquest by William of Malmsbury. The judges therefore were usually created out of the sacred order; and all the inferior offices were supplied by the lower clergy, which has occasioned their successors to be denominated clerks to this day. 1 Comm. 17.

CLERK OF THE ACTS. An officer in the Navy Office, whose business it is to record all orders, contracts, bills, warrants, &c. transacted by the Lord High Admiral, or Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and Com-them again when they are written, and the of them, which are examples of all measures binding and making up the whole bundles of every term; which he doth as servant of the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice of C. B. is at the charge of the parchment of all the rolls, for which he is allowed; as is also the Chief Justice of B. R., besides the penny for the seal of every writ of privilege and outlawry, the seventh penny taken for the seal of every writ in court under the green wax, or petit seal; the said Lord Chief Justices having annexed to their offices or places the custody of the said seals belonging to each court.

CLERK OF THE ESTREATS, clericus extractorum. A clerk or officer belonging to the Exchequer, who every term receives the estreats out of the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer's Office, and writes them out to be levied for the king: and he makes schedules of such sums estreated as are to be discharged.

See tit. Estreat.

CLERK OF THE HANAPER, OF HAMPER. officer in Chancery, whose office was to receive all the money due to the king, for the seals of charters, patents, commissions, and writs; as also fees due to the officers for enrolling and examining the same. He was obliged to attend on the Lord Chancellor daily in the term time, and all times of scaling, having with him leather bags, wherein were put all charters, &c. After they were sealed, those bags, being sealed up with the Lord Chancellor's private seal, were delivered to the Controller of the Hanaper, who, upon receipt of them, entered the effect of them in a book, &c. This hanaper represented what the Romans termed fiscum, which contained the Emperor's treasure; and the Exchequer was anciently so called, because in eo reconderentur hanapi et scutræ cæteraque vasa quæ in censum et tributum persolvi solebant; or it may be for that the yearly tribute which princes received was in hampers or large vessels full of money. By 2 and 3 W. 4. c. 111. this office was abolished after the 20th of August, 1833; but it is provided that no office is to be determined by the act which is held by any person appointed before 1st June, 1832, till the death of the officer.

And he registers the estates of papists and others not taking the oaths. Also he certifies into the King's Bench and to the courts of Over and Terminer on the circuit, transcripts of indictments, outlawries, attainders, and convictions, had before the justices of peace, within the time limited. See tit. Clergy, Benefit of .-And as to his duty respecting estreats, see tit. Estreats.

The Custos Rotulorum of the county hath the appointment of the clerk of the peace, who may execute his office by deputy, to be approved of by the Custos Rotulorum to hold the office during good behaviour. See stats. 37 H. 8. c. 1: 1 W. & M. c. 21.

It was solemnly decided that the right of appointment to the office of clerk of the peace is by law in the Custos Rotulorum of the county and not in the crown. Harding, Pltf., Pollock, &c. Dfts. 1 Dow. 454: 6 Bing. 25. Qu. whether the profits of this office are assignable? 3 Taunt. 173.

The following is the form of the oath prescribed by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21. to be taken by the clerk of the peace in open sessions before he enters on his office.

I.C. P. do swear, that I have not [paid] nor will pay any sum or sums of money, or other reward whatsoever, nor given any bond or other assurance to pay any money, fee, or profit, directly, or indirectly, to any person or persons whomsoever, for [my] nomination So help me God. and appointment.

He is also to take the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and adjuration, and perform such requisites as other persons who qualify for offices.

By stat. 22 G. 2. c. 46. § 14. no clerk of the peace, or his deputy, shall act as solicitor, attorney, or agent, at the sessions where he acts as clerk or deputy, on penalty of 50l. with treble costs.

Burn, in his Instice, tit. Clerk of the Peace, hints how necessary it is that all his fees should be regulated.

If a clerk of the peace misdemeans himself, power to discharge him; and the Custos Rotulorum is to choose another, resident in the county, or on his default the sessions may appoint one: the place is not to be sold, on pain of forfeiting double the value of the sum given by each party, and disability to enjoy their respective offices, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess.

The order of removal of the clerk of the peace, pursuant to this statute, need not set out the evidence. Stra. 996. But it must show that a charge was exhibited against him sufficient to covenant his removal. Ld. Raym. 1265: Salk. 680.

The appointment and tenure of clerks of the peace in Ireland are regulated by stat. I G. 4. c. 7. and by 8 G. 4. c. 67. § 12. that these offices shall be kept open from 12 to 3 daily. The appointment to the office of clerk of the peace both in England and Ireland belongs of right to the Custos Rotulorum of each county. Harding v. Pollock, D. P. 6 Bingh. 25. 85.

By stat. 57 G. 3. c. 91. justices of peace, at their general sessions, are authorised to settle tables of fees to be taken by clerks of the peace in the several counties of England and Wales, and a penalty of 5l. is imposed on such clerks taking higher fees: copies of the tables of fees are to be kept hung up in the sessions room.

The sessions have not power to order payment to the clerk of the peace of a per centage on money raised for the repair of bridges, in lieu of his fees, although such per centage was claimed as an ancient fee. 1 B. & A.

312: 2 B. & A. 522.

See stat. 11 G. 4. c. 1. authorising the transfer of certain balances in the hands of clerks of the peace in England and Wales, on account of licences for lunatic asylums, under 14 G. 3. c. 49. (Repealed by 9 G. 4. c. 41.)

CLERK OF THE PELLS, clericus pellis.] clerk belonging to the Exchequer, whose office is to enter every teller's bill into a parchment roll or skin, called pellis receptorum, and also to make another roll of payments, which is termed pellis exituum; wherein he sets down by what warrant the money was paid: mentioned in the stat. 22 and 23 Car-2. c. 22.—Now abolished.

CLERK OF THE PETTY BAG, clericus parvæ bagæ.] An officer of the Court of Chancery. There are three of these officers, of whom the Master of the Rolls is the chief. Their office is to record the return of all inquisitions out of every shire; to make out patents of customers, gaugers, controllers, &c.; all conge d'elires for bishops, the summons of the nobility, and burgesses to parliament, commissions directed to knights and others of every shire, for assessing subsidies and taxes: all offices found post mortem are brought to the clerks of the petty bag to be filed: and by them are entered all pleadings of the Chancery concerning the validity of patents or other things which pass the Great Seal; they also make forth liberates upon extents of sta346 tutes staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, and all elegits upon them; and all suits for or against any privileged person are prosecuted in their office, &c.

CLERK OF THE PIPE, clericus pipæ.] officer in the Exchequer, who having the accounts of debts due to the king, delivered and drawn out of the Remembrancer's offices, charges them down in the great roll, and is called clerk of the pipe from the shape of that roll, which is put together like a pipe: he also writes out warrants to the shcriffs to levy the said debts upon the goods and chattels of the debtors; and if they have no goods, then he draws them down to the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, to write estreats against their lands. The ancient revenue of the crown stands in charge to him, and he sees the same answered by the farmers and sheriffs; he makes a charge to all sheriffs of their summons to the pipe, and green wax, and takes care it be answered on their accounts. And he hath the drawing and ingressing of all leases of the king's lands: having a secondary and several clerks under him. In the reign of King Hen. VI. this office was called Ingrossator magni rotuli. See stat. 33 H. 8. c. 22.—Abolished.

CLERKS OF THE PLEAS, clericus placitorum.] An officer in the Court of Exchequer, in whose office all the officers of the court, upon special privilege belonging unto them, ought to sue or be sued in any action, &c. By 2 and 3 W. 4. c. 110. § 8. this office is not to be again filled up after the death of W. S. Rose, its present possessor, and the Deputy Clerk of the Pleas is made one of the masters and prothonotaries of the court under its new constitution. See 1 W. 4. c. 70.

CLERKS OF THE PRIVY SEAL, clericus privati sigilli.] These are four of the officers which attend the Lord Privy Seal: or if there be no Lord Privy Seal, the principal Secretary of State; writing and making out all things that are sent by warrant from the Signet to the Privy Seal, and which are to be passed to the Great Seal: also they make out privy seals, upon a special occasion of his Majesty's affairs, as for loan of money, and the like. He that is now called Lord Privy Seal, seems to have been in ancient times called Clerk of the Privy Seal; but notwithstanding to have been reckoned in the number of the great officers of the realm. Stats. 12 R. 2. c. 11. 27 H. 8. c. 11. See Clerk of the Signets.

CLERK OF THE REMEMBRANCE. An officer in the Exchequer, who is to sit against the Clerk of the Pipe, to see the discharges made in the pipe, &c. Stat. 37 E. 3. c. 4. The Clerk of the Pipe and Remembrancer shall be sworn to make a schedule of persons discharged in their offices. Stat. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c.

15.—Abolished.

CLERK OF THE ROLLS. An officer of the Chancery, that makes search for, and copies deeds, offices, &c.

CLERK OF THE RULES. In the Court of King's Bench, is he who draws up and enters all the rules and orders made in court; and gives rules of course on divers writs: this officer is mentioned in stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2.

CLERK OF THE SEWERS. An officer belong. ing to the commissioners of sewers, who writes and records their proceedings, which they transact by virtue of their commissions, and the authority given them by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 9. See tit. Sewers.

CLERK OF THE SIGNET, clericus signeti.] An officer continually attendant on his Majesty's principal secretary, who hath the custody of the privy signet, as well for scaling his Majesty's private letters, as such grants as pass the king's hand by bill signed; and of these clerks or officers there are four that attend in their course, and have their diet at the secretary's table. The fees of the Clerk of the Signet, and Privy Seal, are limited particularly by statute, with a penalty annexed for taking any thing more. See 27 H. 8. c. 11.

See stat. 57 G. 3. c. 63. for regulating the offices of Clerks of the Signet and Privy Seal; the duties of which (after the termination of the then existing interests) are to be performed in person under directions of the Treasury; and such officers are declared incapable of sitting in parliament. By 2 W. 4. c. 49. as any of the offices of Clerks of the Signet and Clerks of the Privy Seal shall become vacant, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury may abolish any such office, and direct the duties thereof to be executed by the remaining clerks in the said offices. The money arising from the salaries of such abolished offices is to be carried to the consolidated fund.

CLERK OF THE KING'S SILVER, clericus argenti regis.] An officer belonging to the Court of Common Pleas, to whom every fine is brought after it hath passed the office of the custus brevium, and by whom the effect of the writ of covenant is entered into a paperbook; according to which all the fines of that term are recorded in the rolls of the court. After the King's silver is entered, it is accounted a fine in law, and not before. See tit. Fine.—Abolished. See Fine of Lands.

CLERK OF THE TREASURY, clericus thesaurarii.] An officer of the Common Pleas, who hath the charge of keeping the records of the court, and makes out all the records of Nisi Prius; also he makes all exemplifications of records being in the Treasury; and he hath the fees due for all searches. He is the servant of the Chief Justice, and removeable at pleasure; whereas all other officers of the court are for life: there is a Secondary, or Grants of lands, &c. from the crown, are con-Under Clerk of the Treasury, for assistance, who hath some fees and allowances: and likewise an under keeper, that always keeps one key of the Treasury door, and the chief clerk of the secondary, another; so that the one cannot come in without the other. bound to personal attendance, this officer cannot be compelled to serve the office of overseer. 6 Bing. 195.

CLERK OF THE KING'S GREAT WARDROBE. An officer of the king's household, that keeps an account or inventory of all things belonging to the royal wardrobe. Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

CLERK OF THE WARRANTS, clericus warran-torum.] An officer belonging to the Common Pleas' Court, who enters all warrants of attorney for plaintiffs and defendants in suits; and inrolls deeds of indentures of bargain and sale, which are acknowledged in the court or before any judges out of the court. And it is his office to estreat into the Exchequer all issues, fines, and amerciaments, which grow due to the king in that court, for which he hath a standing fee or allowance. He is justified in not entering a warrant of attorney till arrears of his fees are paid. 1 Bing. R. 277.

CLERKS AND SERVANTS. (In cases not punishable capitally.) Stealing any chattel, money, or valuable security, belonging to, or in the possession of their master, may be transported for 14 years, and not less than seven years, or imprisoned not exceeding three years (and, if male, whipped), 7 and 8 G. 4. c. 29. § 46. And by § 47, 48. clerks and servants, or any person employed for or in such capacity, taking into their possession any chattel, money, or valuable security, on account of their master; and embezzling the same, or any part, are liable to the same punishment.
—So in Ireland by 9 G. 4. c. 55. § 39. 41.

By 38 G. 3. c. 24. the duty on gold and silver plate, under 24 G. 3. st. 2. c. 53. and 37 G. 3. c. 90. § 16. was repealed so far as related to plate used for watch-cases.

CLOERE. A prison or dungeon; it is conjectured to be of British original: the dungeon or inner prison of Wallingford Castle, temp. H. 2. was called cloere brien, i. e. carcer brieni, &c. Hence seems to come the Lat. cloaca, which was anciently the closest ward or nastiest part of the prison: the old cloacerius is interpreted carceris custos: and the present cloacerius, or keeper of a jakes, is an office in some religious houses abroad imposed on an offending brother, or by him chosen as an exercise of humility and mortification.

CLOSE ROLLS AND CLOSE WRITS.

tained in charters or letters patent, that is, open letters, literas patentes, so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the Great Seal pendant at the bottom; and are usually addressed by the king to all his subjects at large. And therein they differ from other letters of the king, sealed also with his Great Seal, but directed to particular persons, and for particular purposes: which therefore, not being fit for public inspection, are closed up and scaled on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, literæ clausæ; and are recorded in the close rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. 2 Comm. 346.

CLOSH. Was an unlawful game forbidden by stat. 17 E. 4. c. 3. and 33 H. 8. c. 9. It is said to have been the same with our nine-pins, and is called closhcayles by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9. At this time it is allowed, and called hailes,

All cloth shall be measured at the fulling-mill by the master of the mill; who shall make oath before a justice for true measuring; and the millman is to fix a seal of lead to cloths, containing the length and breadth, which shall be a rule of payment for the buyer, &c. Stats. 10 Anne, c. 16. By stat. 1 G. 1. c. 15. broad-cloths must be put into water for proof, and be measured by two indifferent persons chosen by the buyer and seller, &c. And clothiers selling cloths before sealed, or not containing the quantity mentioned in the seals, incur a forfeiture of the sixth part of the value. Persons taking off or counterfeiting seals, forfeit 201. By stat. 12 G. 1. c. 34. clothiers are to pay their work-people their full wages agreed, in money, under the penalty of 10l. &c.; inspectors of mills and tenter-grounds to examine and seal cloths, are to be appointed by justices of peace in sessions; and mill-men sending clothiers any cloths before inspected, forfeit 40s. The inspector to be paid by the clothiers 2d. per cloth. Stat. 13 G. 1. c. 23.— If any cloth remaining on the tenters be stolen in the night, and the same is found upon any person, on a justice's warrant to duet of any stage coachman, such driving or search, such offender shall forfeit treble value, leviable by distress, &c. or be committed to gaol for three months; but for a second offence he shall suffer six months' imprisonment; and for the third offence be transported as a felon, &c. COACH, currus.] A convenience well known. For the regulating of hackney coaches and chairs in London, there are several statutes, viz. 9 Anne, c. 23. made perpetual by 3 G. 1. c. 7. and enlarged as to the number of coaches, by 11 G. 3. c. 24: 42 G. 3. c. 78. so as to make the whole number to be licensed 1100, and enlarged also as to chairs, by 10 Anne, c. 19. and 12 G. 1. c. 12. making the whole number of those 400.

By 48 G. 3. c. 87. the fares were increased. By 54 G. 3. c. 147. 200 hackney chariots were allowed to be licensed as part of the 1100, and by 55 G. 3. c. 159. 200 additional hackney chariots were allowed, and several regulations made as to the fares.

The other statutes now in force are, 12 Anne, st. 1. c. 14: 1 G. 1. c. 57: 30 G. 2. c. 22: (See Carts.) 4 G. 3. c. 36: 7 G. 3. c. 44: 10 G. 3. c. 44: 11 G. 3. cc. 24. 28: 12 G. 3. x. 49: 24 G. 3. st. 2. c. 27: 26 G. 3. c. 72: 32 G. 3. c. 47.

The statutes here noticed with relation to hackney coaches were repealed by the 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 22. See Hackney Coach.

STAGE COACHES. Several acts have been from time to time made for regulating passengers in those useful (but when overladen, dangerous) vehicles; the last in force is 50 G. 3. c. 48. They are subject to certain mileage duties under the commissioners of stamps.

By 37 G. 3. c. 122. the provisions of stat. 12 G. 1. c. 34. and 22 G. 2. c. 27. as to payment of wages in money, are extended to lahourers in the collicries in Great Britain and Ireland.

By stat. 3 G. 2. c. 26. containing several regulations as to lightermen and coal buyers, and explained by stat. 11 G. 2. c. 15. coal sacks shall be scaled and marked at Guildhall, &c. on pain of 20s. Also sellers of coals are to keep a lawful bushel, and put three bushels to each sack, which bushel and other measures shall be edged with iron, and scaled; and using others or altering them, incurs a foriciture of 50t. &c. The penalties above 51. recoverable by action of debt, &c. and under that sum before justices of peace.

The offence of selling coals of a different description from those confracted for, upon the stat. 3 G. 2. c. 26. § 4. is complete in the county where the coals are delivered, and not where they are contracted for, the contract not being for any specific parcel of coals, but for a certain quantity of a certain description. But though not justly measuring such coals is a local omission of a local act, required by the 13th section of the act to be performed at the place where the coals are kept for sale, at which place the bushel of queen Anne is required to be kept and used. for the purpose of measuring the coals into sacks of a certain description, in which they are to be carried to the buyer: and therefore the offence is local, and must be laid in the county where the coals were put into the sacks without having been so justly measured. Butterfield qui tam v. Windle and another. 4 Eust, 355.

A dealer in coals by the chaldron, who sold to another by the chaldron a certain quantity as and for 10 chaldron of coals pool measure, without justly measuring the same with the lawful bushel of Queen Anne, is liable to the penalty of 50l. imposed by the 13th section of the stat. 3 G. 2. c. 26. upon such defaulters who sell coals by the chaldron, or less quantity, without measuring them.

By 51 G. 3. c. 84. the act 22 G. 3. c. 41. (prohibiting persons concerned in the customs from voting for members of parliament) is declared not to affect the fifteen coal-meters [and ten corn-meters] of London.

Drawbacks of duties of customs are allowed on coals used in mines, &c. by various acts. Stat. 28 G. 3. c. 53. was past to indemnify the London coal buyers against certain penalties, which they had literally incurred under stats. 9 Anne, c. 28. and 3 G. 2. c. 26., and also for the purpose of putting an end to the Society at the Coal-Exchange, formed to reguemployed who are hired by others, under the | late (i. e. to monopolize) the trade; subjecting all persons, above five in number, entering into covenant or partnerships, to punishment by indictment or information in B. R.

By I and 2 W. 4. c. 16. the duties of custom on coals, culm, or cinders, brought coastwise, or by land or inland carriage, or navigation, are repealed.

By the 1 and 2 W. 4. c. 76. part of the 9 Anne, c. 28. and also the acts 47 G. 3. sess. 2. c. 68. and 56 G. 3. c. 21: 57 G. 3. c. 1: 57 G. 3. c. 40: and 9 G. 4. c. 65. are repealed: and by § 3. the piece of ground, called the Coal Exchange in London, is continued vested in the mayor and commonalty of London for the purposes of the act 47 G. 3. c. 68. And there shall be on the same an open market, called the Coal Market, and the Lord Mayor and aldermen may appoint and remove clerks as they shall see reasonable. The corporation are empowered to remove or enlarge the market, and for that purpose to purchase lands and tenements. Seven days' previous notice is to be given in the London Guzetie of the opening of the market. And for defraying the expences of the market, the purchase of lands, &c., it shall be lawful for the corporation to take from every master of a vessel laden with coals, cinders, or culm, arriving in the port of London to the westward of Gravesend, one penny per ton on such coals, &c., to be levied as the other duties thereafter made payable. The duty is to be applied in payment of expences of obtaining the act, and when they are paid, and also the costs of purchasing land, &c. &c., and the duty shall be more than sufficient for supporting the market and paying the compensation and salaries to the clerks, and others employed in executing the act, then the overplus of the monies received from the duty shall be laid out in stock, in the names of the chamberlain, town clerk, and comptroller, and shall accumulate till the dividends shall be sufficient for the payment of the salaries, and other allowances to the clerks and officers employed in execution of the act; and when the dividends shall be sufficient for that purpose the duty shall cease; but it may be raised again if necessary for the purposes of the act. By § 25. the corporation are empowered to borrow money upon the credit of the duty. court of aldermen are authorized to make hylaws, with reasonable penalties, for the regulation of the market. But such by-laws must be approved by one or more of the judges, and shall be printed and published. The chamberlain is to keep an account of the duty, and the monies borrowed on credit of it; and an account of the produce shall once in every year be laid before both houses of par-liament. By § 43. all coals, einders, and culm, sold out of any vessel in London or Westminster, or within twenty-five miles of the General Post-office, shall be sold by weight, and not by measure. By § 45. if any seller shall knowingly sell one sort of coals for another within the assigned limits, he be so conveyed without the carman being shall pay 101. per ton, but shall not be subject to such penalty, in respect of any number of tons exceeding twenty-five tons for the same offence. By § 47. the seller shall with every quantity of coals exceeding 560 pounds, de-livered from any lighter, &c. within the limits aforesaid, deliver a ticket in the form mentioned in the act, under penalty of 20l. By § 48. coals sold from any lighter, &c., or wharf, &c., within the aforesaid limits, except coals carried and delivered in bulk as thereinafter received, shall be delivered in sacks containing 112 pounds, or 224 pounds net. Provided that coals sold from any ship, &c., or wharf, &c., within the limits aforesaid, above 560 pounds may be delivered in bulk in carts or carriages, or in any lighter, &c., if the purchasers think fit. Provided also, that where such coals shall be delivered in any cart or other carriage in bulk, the weight of such cart, &c., as well as of the coals, shall be previously ascertained by a weighing machine fixed for that purpose on the wharf or place from which the coals shall be brought; and the sellers' ticket shall state the weight of the cart, &c., as well as of the coals, under a penalty of 50l. Every carman or driver of any cart, &c., in which any coals above 560 pounds shall be carried from any ship, &c., or from any wharf, warehouse, &c., in London and Westminster, or within twenty-five miles from the Post-office aforesaid, shall, if required by the purchaser, or person on his behalf, weigh the wagon or other carriage with the coals therein, at any public weighing machine for carts, &c., which may be on the road to the place of delivery, under a penalty of 10l. If in any case, where any coals shall be delivered in bulk to the purchaser, from any ship, &c., or from any wharf, or place within the limits aforesaid, a less quantity shall be expressed in the ticket to be delivered therewith, the seller shall for every such offence forfeit 101.; and if the deficiency shall exceed 224 pounds the seller shall forfeit 50l. § 52. And be it farther enacted, that if any carman or driver of any cart, &c. laden with coals for sale, or to be delivered to the purchaser by any seller or dealer, or carrier of coals from any ship, &c., or from any wharf, &c. within the limits aforesaid, shall not have placed in, on, or under his cart, &c., a perfect weighing machine marked at Guildhall, London, by the proper officer there, for, which the sum of 2s. 6d. shall be paid, and no more, which machine shall be the form, size, and dimensions of the machine approved by the lords commissioners of his Majesty's treasury, and deposited at the office of the hall keeper of the city of London, then such carman or driver of such cart, &c., shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 101.; and the seller, or dealer, or carrier of such coals shall forfeit any sum not exceeding 201., provided always, that coals which shall be conveyed in bulk, or in any cart, &c. belonging to the purchaser of such coals, may obliged to carry a weighing machine therewith, or any person being subject or liable to any penalty in respect thereof. § 54. Provided that the carman of any cart, &c. in which coals shall have been carried in sacks for delivery to the purchaser, from any ship, &c., or from any wharf, &c. within the limits aforesaid, shall weigh, if he shall be required so to do, any one or more of the sacks contained in such cart, &c. which may be chosen by the purchaser with the coals therein, and also afterward weigh in like manner such sack without any coals therein, under a penalty of not more than 201., nor less than 51. Provided that if any purchaser requiring any sack of coals to be weighed as aforesaid, shall find the coals therein to be deficient in weight, and shall signify to the carman his desire to have all the coals contained in such cart, &c. or any part of such coals weighed or reweighed in the presence of some constable, police officer, or other indifferent person, then the carman shall remain at or before the house of the purchaser with such coals, and the cart, &c. until such coals are weighed, under a penalty of 20l. All coals sold in any quantity less than 560 pounds, or in the quantity of 560 pounds within the limits, shall be weighed previous to being delivered to the purchaser, and also in the presence of such purchaser, or his agent or servant, under a penalty on the seller of 5l. A proper machine or proper scales and weights for weighing coals, shall be kept at every watch-house, or police station, or at any other place or places which shall from time to time be appointed by any two or more of his Majesty's justices within the limits aforesaid; and the same shall be provided and kept in repair from time to time by the overseers of the poor of the township, parish, &c. in which such watchhouse, &c. shall be situate, out of the poor rates, and shall be used at any time for weighing any coals respecting which there may be any dispute; and in case the overseers of any such township, &c. shall not provide such a machine on or before the first day of January after the passing of this act, or if such overseer shall not cause such machine to be repaired, or a new machine to be provided within seven days after notice of the want thereof in writing shall have been given to him, such overseer shall forfeit 10l.

A great number of acts, confined in the extent of the district within which they are to operate (and therefore classed not in the general body of statutes, but in the list of local and personal acts), have been from time to time passed to regulate the dealings, and prevent the frauds of dealers in coals.

By stat. 37 H. 8. c. 6. persons wilfully and maliciously burning any wain or cart laden with coal, or any other goods of any person, shall not only forfeit treble damages to the party grieved, but also 10l. sterling to the king in the way of a fine. And by the same persons burning any heap of wood prepared, cut, and felled for making coals.

COGNISANCE, or CONUSANCE, Fr. connusaunse, Lat. cognitio.] Is used diversely in our law: sometimes for an acknowledgment of a fine. See tit. Fine. In replevin, cognisance, or conusance, is the answer given by a defendant, who hath acted as bailiff, &c. to another, in making a distress. See tits. Distress, Replevin.

Cognisance also signifies the badge of a servant, as the crest of any nobleman or gentle-

The most usual sense in which this term is now used is relative to the claim of cognisance of pleas. This is a privilege granted by the king to a city or town, to hold plea of all contracts, &c. within the liberty of the franchise; and when any man is impleaded for such matters in the courts of Westminster, the mayor, &c. of such franchise may ask cognisance of the plea, and demand that it shall be determined before them: but if the courts at Westminster are possessed of the plea before cognisance be demanded, it is then too late.

Terms de Ley. Sec stats. 9 H. 4. c. 5: 8 H. 6. c. 26: 3 Comm. 298: 4 Comm. 277. See tit. Pleading.

Cognisance of pleas extends not to assizes; and when granted, the original shall not be removed: it lies not in a quare impedit, for they cannot write to the bishop, nor of a plea out of the county court, which cannot award a resummons, &c. Jenk. Cent. 31, 34. This cognisance shall be demanded the first day: and if the demandant in a plea of land counterpleads the franchise, and the tenant joins | unless the cognovit is first produced to the with the claim of the franchise, and it is found against the franchise, the demandant shall recover the land; but if it be found against the demandant, the writ shall abate-15id. 18.

There are three sorts of inferior jurisdictions, one whereof is tenere plucita, and this is the lowest sort; for it is only a concurrent jurisdiction, and the party may sue there or in the king's courts, if he will. The second is conusance of pleus, and by this a right is vested in the lord of the franchise to hold the plea, and he is the only person who can take advantage of it. The third sort is an exempt jurisdiction, as where the king grants to a great city, that the inhabitants thereof shall be sued within their city, and not elsewhere; this grant may be pleaded to the jurisdiction of the Court of K. B. if there be a court within that city which can hold plea of the cause, and nobody can take advantage of this privilege but a defendant; for if he will bring certiorari, that will remove the cause, but he may waive it if he will, so that the privilege is only for his benefit. 3 Salk. 79, 80. pl. 4: Hil. 1 An. COIF, coija.] A title given to serjeants at law; who are called serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wear on their heads under their caps when they are created. The use of it was anciently to cover tous aram clericalem, otherwise called corona clericalis; because the crown of the head was close shaved, and a border of hair le't round the lower part, which is made to look like a crown. Blount. See tit. Clerk.

COIN, cuna pecunia.] Seems to come from the Fr. coiga, i. e. angulus, a corner, whence it has been held, that the ancientest sort of coin was square with corners, and not round as it now is: it is any sort of money coined. Cromp. Jurisd. 220.

Moncy is an universal medium or common standard, by comparison with which the value of all merchandize may be ascertained; or it is a sign which represents the value of all commodities. 1 Comm. 276, 277.

Metals are well calculated for this sign, because they are durable, and are capable of many subdivisions; and a precious metal is still better calculated for this purpose, because it is most portable. Ibid.

The coining of money is in all states the act of the sovereign power; and, as money is the medium of commerce, it is the king's merce, to give it authority, or make it current. COIN. 353

The king may, by his proclamation, legitimate foreign coin, and make it current here, declaring at what value it shall be taken grant from the king, or by prescription, which

m payment. 1 Hale, 194.

Therefore it seems that no one can be enforced to take in payment any money but of lawful metal, that is, gold and silver, except for sums under sixpence. 1 Hale, Hist. 195: 2 Inst. 577.

Coin is a word collective, which contains in it all manner of the several stamps and species of money in any kingdom: and this is one of the royal prerogatives belonging to every sovereign prince, that he alone in his own dominions may order and dispose the quantity, value, and fashion of his coin. But the coin of one king is not current in the kingdom of another, unless it be at great loss; though our king by his prerogative may make any foreign coin lawful money of England at his pleasure, by proclamation. Terms de Ley. If a man binds himself by bond to pay one hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, and the person bound, the obligor, pays the obligee the money in French, Spanish, or other coin, made current either by act of parliament, or the king's proclamation, the obligation will be well performed. Co. Lit. 207. But it is said a payment in farthings is not a good payment. 2 Inst. 517. See post.

When a person has accepted of money in payment from another, and put the same into his purse, it is at his peril after his allowance; and he shall not then take exception to it as bad, notwithstanding he presently reviews it.

Terms de Ley.

The coining of money is in all states the act of the sovereign power; that its value may be known on inspection. And with regard to coinage in general, there are three things to be considered therein; the materials, the impression, and the denomination. With regard to the materials, Sir Edward Coke lays it down (2 Inst. 577.) that the money of England must either be of gold or silver, and none other was ever issued by the royal authority till 1672, when copper farthings and halfpence were coined by Charles II .: and ordered by proclamation to be current in all payments, under the value of sixpence, and not otherwise. But this copper coin is not upon the same footing with the other in any respect, particularly with regard to the offence of counterfeiting it, as has been already noticed. And as to the silver coin, it was enacted by stat. 14 G. 3. c. 42. that no tender of payment in silver money, exceeding twentyfive pounds at one time, shall be a sufficient tender in law for more than its value by weight, at the rate of 5s. 2d. an ounce. This was a clause in temporary act, which expired in 1783, was revived by 38 6.3. c. 59., and made perpetual by 39 6.3. c. 75., but repealed by 56 6.3. c. 68. § 12. See post.

As to the impression, the stamping thereof is the unquestionable prerogative of the crown: for, though divers bishops and monasteries had formerly the privilege of coining money, yet, as Sir Matthew Hale observes (1 Hist. P. C. 191.), this was usually done by special grant from the king, or by prescription, which supposes one; and therefore was derived from, and not in derogation of, the royal prerogative. Besides the t, they had only the profit of the coinage, and the power of instituting either the impression or denomination; but had usually the stamp sent them from the Exchequer.

The denomination, or the value for which the coin is to pass current, is likewise in the breast of the king; and, if any unusual pieces are coined, that value must be ascertained by proclamation. In order to fix the value, the weight and the fineness of the metal are to be taken into consideration together. When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard, and called Esterling, or sterling metal; a name for which there are various reasons given, but none of them entirely satisfactory. Spelm. Gloss. 203: Du Fresne, 3. 165. most plausible opinion seems to be that adopted by those two etymologists, that the name was derived from the Esterlings or Easter-lings, as those Saxons were anciently called, who inhabited that district of Germany now occupied by the Hans-towns and their appendages: the earliest traders in modern Europe. Of this steeling or esterling metal all the coin of the kingdom must be made, by stat. 25 E. 3. c. 13.—So that the king's prerogative seemeth not to extend to the debasing or enhaveing the value of the coin, below or above the sterling value: 2 Inst. 577; though Sir Maithew Hale, (1 Hal. P. C. 194.) appears to be of another opinion. The king may also by his proclamation legitimate foreign coin, and make it current here; declaring at what value it shall be taken in payments. 1 H. P. C. 197. But this, it seems, ought to be by comparison with the standard of our own coin, otherwise the consent of parliament will be necessary. The king may also at any time decry, or cry down, any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current. Hale, P. C. 197.

This standard hath been frequently varied in former times; but hath for many years past been thus invariably settled. The pound troy of gold, consisting of twenty-two carats (or 24th parts) fine, and two of alloy, is divided into forty-four guineas and a half of the present value of 21s. each. And the pound troy of silver (consisting of eleven ounces and two penny-weights fine, and eighteen penny-weights alloy) was, from the end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth until 56 George III. divided into sixty-two shillings. See Folkes on English Coins, and stat. 14 G. 3. c.

Guineas have been raised and fallen, as money has been scarce or plenty, several times by statute; and anno 3 G. 1. guineas were valued by proclamation at 21s., at which they now pass.

In the 7th year of King William III. an act 7 and 8 W. 3. c. 1. was made for calling. in all the old coin of the kingdom, and to melt it down and re-coin it; the deficiencies whereof were to be made good at the public charge; and in every hundred pound coined 40l. was to be shillings, and 10l. sixpences, under certain penalties.

By stat. 56 G. 3. c. 68. to provide for a new silver coinage, and to regulate the currency of the gold and silver coin of the realm, so much of stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 5. as related to coining silver brought to the Mint without any charge was repealed; so much of stat. 7 and 8 W. 3. c. 1, as related to the weight and fineness of silver coin under the Mint-indenture; and so much of 14 G. 3. c. 42. as required the pound troy of silver to be coined into 62 shillings, was also repealed; and a temporary act, 38 G. 3. c. 59. by which the coinage of any silver at the Mint was prohibited, was also repealed, § 1-3.

By § 4. &c. of the said act, 56 G. 3. c. 68. it is enacted, that the pound troy of standard silver, 11 oz. 2 dwts. fine, and 18 dwts. alloy, should be coined into 66 shillings .- Provisions were by this act made for calling in the old silver coin; and by § 9, 10. it was enacted, that after a certain time silver coin and bullion might be brought to the Mint to be coined at the rate of 66s. per pound troy of standard silver, of which 62s. should be delivered to the party bringing the bullion, and 4s. be retained for charge of assaying, coinage, &c.

By § 11, 12. of this act, 56 G. 3. c. 68. it is farther enacted, that the gold coin of the realm shall be, and be considered, the only legal tender for payments (except for sums; not exceeding 40s. for which silver coin is made a legal tender) within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;-that the gold coin should continue to hold its former weight and fineness; -and that gold coin of any new denomination to be coined should be of weight proportioned to the weight of the gold coin then current.-Under this last provision gold sovereigns were coined to pass for 20s. each, containing 20-21th parts of the weight of a guinea.

Lastly, by § 13. &c. of the said act, 56 G. 3. c. 68. it was enacted that the current gold coin shall not be received or paid for more or less than its value, according to its denomination; on penalty of imprisonment, for the first offence, for six months; second offence, one year; and subsequent offence, two years, &c. But $\S\S 13-16$. of this act are now repealed by $2\ W.\ 4.\ c.\ 34$.

All former acts relating to the coin are extended to the silver coin coined under this act.

Of Offences relating to the Coin.—Before the passing of the new stat. 2 W. 4. c. 34. the laws touching offences against the coin stood greatly in need of revision, having been made at remote periods of time, and often under circumstances which had ceased to operate. The provisions of many were defective, and the language of all required amendment.

The principal feature in the new act is the change introduced with regard to the nature of the higher offences against the coin. These, which were formerly high treason, are now made felony; and for the punishment of death that of transportation is substituted throughout the act. Capital punishment is thus abolished in no less than seven instances. The distinction made in the old statutes between treasons or felonies, and misdemeanors. is still preserved in the new act, with the exception of the second offence of uttering counterfeit coin, which was formerly a misdemeanor, but is now made a felony.

The offences under the new statute are. with some few exceptions, the same which were found in the former acts. In defining the crime of counterfeiting, an alteration has been introduced to meet the case of the false coin being discovered in a state not fit for cir. The definition of the various offences of colouring coin or metals has also been amended. With regard to the offence of putting off counterfeit coin, the words "offer to put off," &c. are added. The bare possession of counterfeit coin, knowing it to be such, with intent to utter, which was held to be no offence at common law, is made a misdemeanor by the new act. Some alteration has been made with regard to the offences against the copper coin. Uttering or having possession of false copper money, and making or having possession of tools for making of copper coin, are now, for the first time, made offences by statute. In no case, under the new act, is there any penalty attached to a third offence; the highest punishment, viz. transportation for life, being affixed to a second conviction.

An important alteration has been made with regard to the procedure in cases of coining, by § 15. of the new statute, which permits several persons who have been acting in concert in different counties to be jointly tried in the same county.

The new statute is confined to offences against the king's current gold, silver, and copper coin. The offence of counterfeiting foreign money current here by proclamation (a case not likely to arise) is not provided for. The statutes relating to the counterfeiting, &c. of foreign counterfeit coin, not current in this country, are left untouched.

The operation of the new statute is confined to Great Britain and Ireland, the former statutes not being repealed, so far as the same may be in force, in any part of his majesty's dominions out of the United Kingdom.

The subject may be divided into five parts, treating-

1. Of Offences against the Gold and Silver Coin.

II. Of Offences against the Copper Coin.

III. Of Offences against Foreign Coin.
IV. Of Offences with regard to making Coining Tools, &c.

V. Of Various Matters relating to the Coin,

I. Of Counterfeiting the Gold and Silver Coin.—By the old law, Stat. of Treasons, 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2. if a man counterfeit the king's great or privy seal, or his money, he is guilty of high treason. By the new law, 2 W. 4. c. 34. § 3. it is enacted, "That if any person shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin, resembling, or apparently intended to resemble, or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin, every such offender shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years; and every such offence shall be deemed to be complete, although the coin so made or counterfeited shall not be in a fit state to be uttered, or the counterfeiting thereof shall not be finished or perfected."

By the 4th section of the new statute it is enacted, That if any person shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold or of silver, wash, colour, or case over, any coin whatsoever, resembling, or apparently intended to resemble, or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin, or if any person shall gild or silver, or shall, with any such wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold or silver, wash, colour, or case over any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold or coarse silver, or if any metal or mixture of metals, respectively, being of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that the same shall be coined into false and counterfeit coin, resembling, or apparently intended to resemble, or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin; or if any person shall gild, or shall, with any wash or material capable of producing the colour of gold, wash, colour, or case over, any of the king's current silver coin, or file, or in any manner utter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold coin; or if any person shall gild, or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour of gold or of silver, wash, colour, or case over, any of the king's current copper coin, or file, or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the king's current gold or silver coin; every such offender shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony; in Scotland, of a high crime and offence; and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned any term not exceeding four years.

There are six offences provided against by this section of the new statute:—

1. Gilding, silvering, or colouring, with gold or silver, any coin resembling the lawful gold or silver coin.

2. Gilding, silvering, or colouring, with gold or silver, any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold, or of coarse silver, or of any metal or mixture of metals, of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that the same shall be coined into counterfeit coin.

3. Gilding, or colouring with gold, any good silver coin, with intent to make it pass for good gold coin.

4. Filing or altering such coin, with the ike intent.

5. Gilding, or silvering, or covering with gold or silver, any copper coin, with intent to make it pass for good gold or silver coin.

6. Filing or altering such copper coin with the like intent.

Impairing the gold and silver coin is also an offence. By the 5th sect. of the new act, if any person impair, demolish, or lighten any if any person impair, demolish, or lighten any of the king's current gold or silver coin, with intent to make coin lightened pass for the king's current coin, he shall be guilty of felony, and liable to transportation for fourteen years, or imprisonment for three years. The words of this clause are more comprehensive than those of the old act. 5 Eliz. c. 11. and the words "for wicked lucre, or gain's sake," are omitted. See Roscoe on Coin, p. 18.

The 6th sect. applies to buying and selling false coin for a lower value than its denomination, and renders this offence, and also that of importing false coin, intended to pass for the king's current coin, a felony, punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment not exceeding four years. See Roscoe, p. 20.

By the 7th sect. any person knowingly ut-

By the 7th sect. any person knowingly uttering false coin, intended to pass for the king's current coin, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and imprisoned for a year; and in case of such person having in his possession, at the time of the offence, other counterfeit coin, or in case he shall, within ten days, knowingly utter more counterfeit coin, he shall be imprisoned for two years; and in case of a second offence, after a former conviction, he shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for life, or imprisoned for four years. See Roscoe, p. 30.

Before the new act, the mere having in possession counterfeit coin seems not to have been an offence; Russ. & Ry. 288; though the procuring counterfeit coin with intent to circulate it was an offence at common law. By the 8th sect. of the new act, the having in possession three or more pieces of false coin with intent to utter it, is rendered a misdemeanor, punishable with imprisonment for three years; and the second offence felony, punishable with transportation for life, or imprisonment not exceeding four years.

II. Offences against the Copper Coin.—The twelfth section of the new act consolidates the offences as to the copper coin, and enacts that any person counterfeiting the king's current | improvement is introduced, and parties acting copper coin, or making, or mending, or buying, or selling, or knowingly having in his custody, any tools, &c. intended for such counterfeiting, or buying, selling receiving, paying, or putting on any lalse coin, resembling the copper coin, for lower value than its denomination imports, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for seven years, or imprisoned for two years. And any person knowingly tendering, or uttering or possessing, with intent to utter, any counterfeit coin intended to resemble the king's current coin, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year. See Roscoe, 51.

III. Offences relating to the Foreign Coin. By 37 G. 3. c. 126. § 2. if any person shall counterfeit any coin not of the realm, nor permitted to be current here, but resembling the gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, &c., he shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for seven years. By § 3. the inporting such coin is a felony, punishable in the same manner. By § 4. uttering or tendering such coin is punishable with six months' imprisonment, and two years for the second offence; the third offence is a felony without clergy. By § 6. any person having in his possession, without excuse, more than five pieces of such coin, shall forfeit the same, and also not more than 5l. nor less than 40s. for every piece of such coin in his custody; one moiety to the informer, and the other to the poor of the parish. By 43 G. 3. c. 139. counterfeiting foreign copper money is a misdemeanor, punishable with imprisonment for one year; and for the second offence transportation for seven years. See Roscoe, 61.

IV. Offences with regard to making Coining Tools, &c .- By § 10. of the new act, 2 IV. 4. c. 34. any person knowingly making or mending, or having in his possession, any puncheon, matrix, &c. &c. impressed with the stamp of both or either of the sides of any of the king's gold or silver coin, or making, or mending, or buying, or selling, or having in his custody, any edger, edging tool, &c. &c. for marking coin round the edges with marks resembling those on the king's coin, or knowingly making, or mending, or buying, or selling, or having in his custody, any press for coinage, or cutting engine for cutting round blanks out of gold, silver, or other metal, knowing such engine to be intended for counterfeiting, &c., shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for life, or imprisoned not exceeding four years. See Roscoe, p. 67.

V. Various Matters relating to the Coin. As to the discovery and seizure of counterfeit coin and tools, see 43 G. 3. c. 139. § 7, and § order to have an equal distributory share of 14. of the new act. By § 15. an important his personal estate, at his death, according to in concert in different counties, in committing any offence against the act, may be tried in either of the counties. The 16th sect. takes away the power of traversing, taless for good canse shown. By § 17. the coin may be proved to be counterfeit by any credible witness, and not necessarily by an officer of the Mint. By § 19. any person imprisoned may be put to hard labour or solitary confinement. See Mr. Rosco's perspictuals work, pussim. COLIBERTS, caliberti.] Were tenants in socage; and particularly such villeins as were canumitted or made freemen. Donesday. But they had not an absolute freedom; for though they were better than servants, yet they had superior lords to whom they paid certain duties, and in that respect they might be called servants, though they were of middle condition, between freemen and servants. COLLATERAL, collateralis.] From the Lat. luterale, sideways, or that which hangeth by the side, not direct: as collateral assurance is that which is made over and above the deed itself: collateral security is where a deed is made of other land, besides those granted by the deed of mortgage; and if a man covenants with another, and enters into bond for per-formance of his covenant, the bond is a col-luteral assurance, because it is external, and without the nature and essence of the covenant. If a man hath liberty to pitch booths or standings, for a fair or market, in another person's ground, it is collateral to the ground. The private woods of a common person, within a forest, may not be cut down without the king's licence, it being a prerogative collateral to the soil. And to be subject to the feeding of the king's deer, is colluteral to the soil of a forest. Cromp. Jurisd. 185: Manwood, p. 66.

COLLATERAL CONSANGUINITY, OF KINDRED. Colluteral relations agree with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor; but differ in this, that they do not descend from each other. Collaieral kinsmen, therefore, are such as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stirps or root, the stipes, trunk, or common stock, from whence these relations are branched out.

2 Comm. 204. See tit. Descent. COLLATERAL DESCENT, and COLLATERAL WAR-RANTY. See Descent and Warranty.

COLLATERAL ISSUE, is where a criminal convict pleads any matter, allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, the king's pardon, an act of grace, or diversity of person, viz. that he or she is not the same that was attainted, &c., whereon issue is taken, which issue is to be tried by a jury, instanter.

COLLATIO BONARUM is, in law, where a portion of money advanced by the father to a son or daughter, is brought into holchpot, in the intent of the stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 100. I titled to the property of the deceased. 2 Comm. Abr. Cas. Eq. p. 254. See tits. Hotchpot, Executor.

COLLATION TO A BENEFICE, collatio beneficii.] Signifies the bestowing of a benefice by the bishop, or other ordinary, when he hath right of patronage. See tit. Advowson.

COLLATIONE FACTA UNI POST MORTEM ALTE-RIUS. A writ directed to the justices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to issue their writ to the bishop, for the admission of a clerk in the place of another presented by the king, who died during the suit between the king and the bishop's clerk: for judgment once passed for the king's clerk, and he dying before admittance, the king may bestow his presentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

COLLATIONE HEREMITAGH. A writ whereby the king conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 303. 308.

COLLATION OF SEALS. This was when, upon the same label, one seal was set on the back or reverse of the other.

COLLEGE, collegium.] A particular corporation, company, or society of men, having certain privileges founded by the king's license: and for colleges in reputation, see 4 Rep. 106, 108,

The establishment of colleges or universities is a remarkable æra in literary history. The schools in cathedrals and monasteries confined themselves chiefly to the teaching of grammar. There were only one or two masters employed in that office. But in colleges, professors were appointed to teach all the different parts of science. The first obscure mention of academic degrees in the university of Paris (from which the other universities in Europe have borrowed most of their customs and institutions) occurs A. D. 1215. Vide Robert's Hist. Emp. C. V. v. 1. 323.

See the powers of visitors of colleges well explained in Dr. Walker's case. Hardw. 212.

See farther tit. Corporations, Leases, Universities.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH, is that which consists of a dean and secular canons; or more largely, it is a church built and endowed for a society, or body corporate, of a dean or other president, and secular priests, as canons or prebendaries in the said church. There were many of these societies distinguished from the religious or regulars, before the reformation: and some are established at this time; as Westminster, Windsor, Winchester, Southwell, Manchester, &c. See tit. Chapter, Dean.

COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI (Letters ad.) In defect of representatives and creditors to administer to an intestate, &c. the ordinary may commit administration to such discreet person as he approves of, or grant him these letters, to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody, and to do by force of which he entered on the lands in other acts for the benefit of such as are en- question, he cannot plead this by itself, as 505. See tit. Executor.

COLLOQUIUM, a colloquendo.] A talking together, or affirming of a thing, laid in declarations for words in actions of slander, &c.

Mod. Cas. 203: Carthew, 90. Slander. COLLUSION, collusio.] Is a deceitful agreement or contract between two or more persons, for the one to bring an action against the other, to some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person of his right, &c. This collusion is either apparent, when it shows itself on the face of the act; or, which is more common, it is secret, when done in the dark, or covered over with a show of honesty. And it is a thing the law abhors: wherefore, when the same, though otherwise in themselves good. Co. Lit. 109. 396: Plowd. 54. Co tusion may sometimes be tried in the same action wherein the covin is, and sometimes in another action, as for lands aliened in mortmain by quale jus; and where it is apparent there needs no proof it: but when it is secret it must be proved by witnesses, and found by jury like other matters of fact. 9 Rep. 33. The stat. of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 33. gives the writ quale jus, and inquiry in these cases: and there are several other statutes relating to deeds made by collusion and fraud. The cases particularly mentioned by the stat. of Westm. 2. are of quare impedit, assise, &c. which one corporation brings against another, with intent to recover the land or advowson, for which the writ is brought, held in mortmain, &c. See tit. Fraud.

COLONIES. See tit. Plantations.

COLONUS. An husbandman or villager, who was bound to pay yearly a certain tribute; or at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land; and from hence comes the word clown.

COLOUR, color.] Signifies a probable plea, but which is in fact false; and hath this end, to draw the trial of the cause from the jury to the judges: and therefore colour ought to be matter in law, or doubtful to the jury. See Bac. Ab. tit. Pleas & Pleading (7th. ed.): Stephens on Pleading.

It is a rule in pleading (with some exceptions, see 4 Barn. & Cres. 547.) that no man be allowed to plead, specially, such a plea as amounts only to the general issue; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue; neral issue in terms, whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if a defendant, in an assise or action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the court rather than the jury, he may state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. As if his own true title be that he claims by feoffment with livery from A.,

this plea amounts to no more than the gene-But he may allege this specially, provided he goes farther and says, that the plaintiff claiming by colour of a prior deed of feoffment, without livery, entered, upon whom he entered; and may then refer himself to the judgment of the court, which of the two titles is the best in point of law. Doctor & Stud. 2. c. 53.

Every colour ought to have these qualities following: 1. It is to be doubtful to the lay gens, as in case of a deed of feoffment pleaded, and it is a doubt whether the land passeth by the feoffment, without livery, or not. 2. Colour ought to have continuance, though it wants effect. 3. It should be such colour, that, if it were effectual, would maintain the nature of the action; as in assise, to give colour of freehold, &c. 10 Rep. 88. 90. a. 91. Colour must be such a thing, which is a good colour of title, and yet is not any title. Cro. Jac. 122. If a man justifies his entry for such a cause as binds the plaintiff or his heirs for ever, he shall not give any colour: but if he pleads a descent in bar, he must give colour, because this binds the possession, and not the right; so that when the matter of the plea bars the plaintiff of his right, no colour must be given. When the defendant entitles himself by the plaintiff; where a person pleads to the writ, or to the action of the writ; he who justifies for tithes, or where the defendant justifies as servant: in all these cases no colour ought to be given. 10 Rep. 91: Lutw. 1343. Where the defendant doth not make a special title to himself, or any other, he ought to give colour to the plaintiff. Cro. Eliz. 76. In trespass for taking and carrying away twenty loads of wood, &c. the defendant says, that A. B. was possessed of them, ut de bonis propriis, and that the plaintiff claiming them by colour of a deed after made, took them, and the defendant re-took them; and adjudged, that the colour given to the plaintiff makes a good title to him, and confesseth the interest in him. 1 Lil. Abr. 275. See tit. Pleading.

COLOUR OF OFFICE, color officii.] Is when an act is evilly done by the countenance of an office; and always taken in the worst sense, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour. Plowd. Comment. 64. See as to the distinction between acts done colore officii and virtute officii, 9 East, 364: 2 Barn. & Cres. 729. See Bribery; Extortion.

COLPICES, colpicium, colpiciis.] Young poles, which, being cut down, make levers or lifters; and in Warwickshire they are called colpices to this day. Blount.

COLPO, a small wax candle, à copo de cere. Hoveden says, that when the King of Scots came to the English court, as long as he staid there, he had every day, De liberatione triginta sol, & duodecim vassellos dominicos, & quadraginta grossos longos colpones de dominica candela regis, &c. anno 1194.

COMBARONES, the fellow barons, or commonalty of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1. and Ed. 2. But the titles of barons of the Cinque Ports is now given to their representatives in parliament; and the word combaron is used for a fellow member, the baron and his combaron. See tit. Parliament.

COMBATERRÆ, from Sax. cumbo, Brit. kum, Eng. comb.] A valley or low piece of ground or place between two hills; which is still so called in Devonshire and Cornwall; hence many villages in other parts of England have their names of comb, as Wickcomb, &c. from their situation. Kennett's Gloss.

COMBINATIONS, to do unlawful acts, are punishable before the unlawful act is executed; this is to prevent the consequence of combinations, and conspiracies, &c. 9 Rep. 57. See tits. Confederacy, Conspiracy.

By the stat. 6 G. 4. c. 129. (which repeals the statutes as to combinations by workmen, and substitutes other provisions), the offences of forcing, or endeavoring to force, workmen by violence, threats, intimidation, &c. to leave their service, or to quit their work, or return it unfinished, or to prevent their hiring themselves, and for using violence, &c. towards others, for compelling them to belong to clubs, or to pay fines for not obeying orders as to wages, or for forcing any master to alter mode of work, or limiting number of apprentices, &.c. are punishable with three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour. § 3. Not to affect meetings for settling of rates of wages or hours of work of the persons meeting. § 4. Nor meetings of masters as to rates of wages, &c. of their workmen. § 5. Summary conviction before two justices • (within four months). § 7. No justice being a master shall act under this act. § 13. Punishment of witnesses summoned and refusing to appear, or be examined, three months' imprisonment. § 8. Offenders compellable to give evidence for the crown, and shall be indemnified. § 6. Forms of convictions, and commitments. § 6. and Sch. Convictions shall be transmitted to quarter sessions and filed. § 11. Appeal to general or quarter sessions, § 12.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ. The ancient way of trying mixt and corrupt money, by melting it down upon payments into the Exchequer. In the time of King Henry II. a constitution was made, called the trial by combustion; the practice of which differed little or nothing from the present method of assaying silver. But whether this examination of money by combustion, was to reduce an equation of money only of sterling, viz. a due proportion of allay with copper; or to reduce it to a fine pure silver without allay, doth not appear. On making the constitution for trial, it was considered, that though the money did answer numero et pondere, it might be deficient in value; because mixed with copper or brass, &c. Vide Lowndes's Essay upon Coin, p. 5. See tit. Coin.

COMITATUS. A county. Ingulphus tells ordinary commandment is replevisable—us, that England was first divided into counties by King Alfred; and counties into hundreds, and these again into tithings; and Fortesque writes that regnum Angliæ per comitatus ut regnum Franciæ per ballivatus distinguitor. It is also taken for a territory or jurisdiction of a particular place, as in Mat. Paris, anno 1234, and divers old charters. See tits. County, Sheriff.

According to Lord Littleton, in his History of Hen. II. lib. 2. fol. 217. each county was anciently an earldom, so that, previous to the reign of King Stephen, there were not any titular earls, nor more earls than counties, though there might be fewer. As to the division of counties into hundreds and ti-things, see Ld. Lit. l. 2. fol. 259: also see Bract. 1.3. c. 10.

COMITATU COMMISSO, is a writ or commission whereby a sheriff is authorised to take upon him the charge of the county. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITATU ET CASTRO COMMISSO. A Writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a castle is committed to the sheriff. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITIVA. A companion or fellow traveller; it is mentioned in Brompton, Reg. H. 2. And sometimes it signifies a troop or company of robbers: as in Walsingham, anno COMMANDERY, præceptoria.] Was any manor or chief messuage, with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem in England; and he who had the government of such a manor or house was styled the commander; who could not dispose of it but to the use of the priory, only taking thence his own sustenance, according to his degree .--New Eagle in Lincolnshire was and still is called the Commandery of Eagle, and did anciently belong to the said priory of St. John: so Selbach in Pembrokeshire, and Shingay in Cambridgeshire, were commanderies in the time of the knights templars, says Camden: and these in many places in England are termed temples, because they formerly belonged to the said templars. See stat. 26 H. 8. c. 2. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jerusalem were given to King Henry VIII. by stat. 32 H. 8. c. 20. about the time of the dissolution of abbeys and monasteries: so that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long since extinct.

COMMANDMENT, præceptum.] versely taken: as the commandment of the king, when upon his own motion he had cast any man into prison. Commandment of the justices, absolute or ordinary; absolute, where, upon their own authority, they commit a person for contempt, &c. to prison, as a punishment; ordinary is, when they commit one rather for safe custody, than for any punishment: and a man committed upon such an prison by the special command of the king, were not formerly bailable by the Court of King's Bench; but at this day the law is otherwise. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 36. See

In another sense of this word, magistrates may command others to assist them in the execution of their offices, for the doing of justice; and so may a justice of peace to suppress riots, apprehend felons; an officer to keep the king's peace, &c. Bro. 3. A master may command his servant to drive another man's cattle out of his ground to enter into lands, seize goods, distrain for rent, or do other things; if the thing be not a trespass to others. Fits. Abr. The commandment of a thing is good, where he that commands hath power to do it: and a verbal command in most cases is sufficient; unless it be where it is given by a corporation, or when a sheriff's warrant is to a bailiff to arrest, &c. Bro. 288: Dyer, 202.

Commandment is also used for the offence of him that willeth another man to transgress the law, or do any thing contrary to it; and in the most common signification, it is taken where one willeth another to do an unlawful act; as murder, theft, or the like; which the civilians called mandatum. Bract. lib. 3. c.

COMMENDAM, ecclesia commendata, vel custodia ecclesiæ alicui commissa.] Is the holding of a benefice or church-living, which being void, is commended to the charge and care of some sufficient clerk, to be supplied until it may be conveniently provided of a pastor: and he to whom the church is commended, hath the profits thereof only for a certain time, and the nature of the church is not changed thereby, but is as a thing deposited in his hands in trust, who hath nothing or never granted to any but bishops; and in but the custody of it, which may be revoked. I that case the bishop is made commendatory When a parson is made bishop, there is a cession or voidance of his benefice, by the promotion; but if the king by special dispensation gives him power to retain his benefice notwithstanding his promotion, he shall continue parson, and is said to hold it in commen-Hob. 144: Latch. 236. As the king is the means of avoidances on promotions to dignities, and the presentations thereon belong to him, he often, on the creation of bishops, grants them licences to hold their benefices in commendam; but this is usually where the bishopricks are small, for the better support of the dignity of the bishop promoted: and it must be always before consecration; for afterwards it comes too late, because the benefice is absolutely void. A commendam, founded on the stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21. is a dispensation from the supreme power, to hold or take an ecclesiastical living contra jus positivum: and there are several sorts of commendams; as a commendam semestriss, which is for the benefit of the church without any regard to the commendatory, being only a provisional act of the ordinary, for supplying the vacation of six months, in which time the patron is to present his clerk, and is but a sequestration of the cure and fruits until such time as the clerk is presented: a commmendam retinere, which is for a bishop to retain benefices, on his preferment: and these commendams are granted on the king's mandate to the archbishop, expressing his consent, which continues the incumbency, so that there is no occasion for institution. A commendam recipere is to take a benefice de novo in the bishop's own gift, or in the gift of some other patron, whose consent must be obtained. Dyer, 228: 3 Lev. 381: Hob. 143: Danv. 79.

A commendam may be temporary for six or twelve months; two or three years, &c.; or it may be perpetual, i. e. for life; when it is equal to a presentation, without institution or induction. But all dispensations beyond six months were only permissive at first, and granted to persons of merit: the commendam retinere is for one or two years, &c., and sometimes for three or six years, and doth not alter the estate which the incumbent had before: a commendam retinere, as long as the commendatory should live and continue bishop, hath been held good. Vaugh. 18.

The commendam recipere must be for life, as other parsons and vicars enjoy their benefices; and as a patron cannot present to a full church, so neither can a commendam recipere be made to a church that is then full. Show. 414. A benefice cannot be commended by parts, any more than it may be presented unto by parts; as that one shall have the glebe, another the tithes, &c. Nor can a commendatory have a juris utrum, or take to him and his successors, sue or be sued, in a writ of annuity, &c. But a commendatory in perpetuum may be admitted to do it. 11 H. 4.

of the benefice while he continues bishop of such diocese: as the object is to make an addition to a small bishoprick: and it would be unreasonable to grant it to a bishop for life, who might afterwards be translated to one of the richest sees. See the case of Commendams, Hob. 140; and Collier's Eccl. Hist.

COMMENDATARY, commendatarius.] He that holdeth a church living or preferment in commendam.

COMMENDATORS, are secular persons, upon whom ecclesiastic benefices are bestowed. called so, because the benefices were commended and intrusted to their oversight; they are not proprietors, but only trustees or tutors. Scotch Dict.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS, are such as are written by one bishop to another in behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese, travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful: or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessaries administered to others, &c.: several forms of these letters may be seen in our historians, as in Bede, lib.

COMMENDATUS, one that lives under the protection of a great man. Spelm.—Com. mendati homines were persons who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any superior lord: for ancient homage was either predial, due for some tenure; or personal, which was by compulsion, as a sign of necessary subjection; or voluntary, with a desire of protection: and those who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any men of power, were sometimes called homines ejus commendati; and sometimes only commendati, as often occurs in Domesday. Commendati dimidii were those who depended on two several lords, and paid one half of their homage to each: and sub-commendati, were like under-tenants, under the command of persons that were dependants themselves on a superior lord: also there were dimidii sub-commendati, who bore a double relation to such depending lords. Domesday. This phrase seems to be still in use, in the usual compliment, Commend me to such a friend, &c., which is to let him know, I am his humble servant. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 20.
COMMERCE, commercium.] Traffic, trade,

There is a distinction between commerce and trade; the former relates to our dealings with foreign nations, or our colonies, &c. abroad; the other to our mutual traffic and dealings among ourselves at home.

No municipal laws can be sufficient to order and determine the very extensive and complicated affairs of traffic and merchandize: neither can they have a proper authority for this purpose: for as these are transactions carried on between subjects of independant states, the These commendams are now in fact seldom | municipal laws of one will not be regarded by

For this reason the affairs of com- by stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 11. and 13 Car. 2. c. 2. merce are regulated by a law of their own, called the Law-merchant or Lex-mercatoria, which all nations agree in and take notice of. And in particular it is held to be part of the law of England, which decides the causes of merchants by the general rules which obtain in all commercial countries. See farther tit. Merchant. See also tit. Bill of Exchange.

COMMISSARY, commissarius.] A title in the ecclesiastical law, belonging to one that exerciseth spiritual jurisdiction, in places of a diocese which are so far from the episcopal city, that the chancellor cannot call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without their too great inconvenience. This commissary was ordained to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and office in the outplaces of the diocese; or in such places as are peculiar to the bishop, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon: for where, either by prescription or composition, archdeacons have jurisdiction within their archdeaconries, as in most places they have, this commissary is superfluous and oftentimes vexatious, and ought not to be; yet in such cases, a commissary is sometimes appointed by the bishop, he taking prestation money of the archdeacon yearly pro exteriori jurisdictione, as it is ordinarily called. But this is held to be a wrong to archdeacons and the poorer sort of people. Cowel's Interp: 4 Inst.

There are also commissaries in time of war. Persons sent abroad to take care of the supply and distribution of provisions for the army.

COMMISSION, commissio.] The warrant of letters-patent, which all persons exercising jurisdiction either ordinary or extraordinary, have to authorise them to hear or determine any cause or action: as the commission of the judges, &c. Commission is with us as much as delegatio with the civilians: and this word is sometimes extended farther than to matters of judgment; as the commission of purveyance. &c. Commissions of inquiry shall be made to the justices of one bench or the other, &c., and to do lawful things, are grantable in many cases: also most of the great officers, judicial and ministerial, of the realm, are made by commission. And by such commissions, treasons, felonies, and other offences, may be heard and determined; by this means likewise, oaths, cognizances of fines, and answers, are taken, witnesses examined, offices found, &c. Bro. Ab. 12: Rep. 39. See stat. 42 E. 3. c. 4. And most of these commissions are appointed by the king under the Great Seal of England; but a com-mission granted under the Gutt Seal may mission granted under the Guest Seal may be determined by a Privy sal: and by granting another new commission to do the same thing, the former commission determines; and on the death or demise of the king, the commissions of judges and officers generally cease. Commissions of Delegates, was a commission under the Great Seal to certain persons, usually lords, bishops, and judges of the law, to sit upon an appeal to the king in the Court of Chancery, where any sentence was given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. But this act is now repealed by 2 & 3 W. 4. c. 92: and the powers of the High Court of Delegates are, from the 1st Feb. 1833, transferred to his Majesty's Privy Council.

COMMISSIONER, commissionarius.] He that hath a commission, letters patent, or other lawful warrant to examine any matters, or execute any public office, &c. And some commissioners are to hear and determine offences without any return made of their proceedings; and others to inquire and examine, and certify what is found. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 9. Commissioners, by the common law, must pursue the authority of the commission, and perform the effect thereof: and they are to observe the ancient rules of the courts whence they come; and if they do any thing for which they have not authority, it will be void. 2 Co. Rep. 25: Co. Lit. 157. The office of commissioners is to do what they are commanded; and it is necessarily implied, that they may do that also without which what is commanded cannot be done: their authority, when appointed by any statute law, must be used as the statutes prescribe. 12 Rep. 32. If a commission is given to commissioners to execute a thing against law, they are not bound to accept or obey it: commissioners not receiving a commission may be discharged, upon oath before the barons of the Exchequer, &c., and the king by supersedeas out of Chancery may discharge commissioners. Besides commissioners relating to judicial proceedings, there are commissioners of the Treasury, of the Customs, Wine-licenses, Alienations, &c., of which there are an infinite number.

Commissioners for Valuation of Teinds, are those appointed by the parliament to value teinds. Scotch Dict.

COMMITTEE, are those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, by some court, or by consent of parties to whom it belongs: as in parliament, a bill either consented to and passed or denied, or neither, but being referred to the consideration of certain persons appointed by the house farther to examine it, they are thereupon called a committee. And when a parliament is called, and the speaker and members have taken the oaths, and the standing orders of the House are read, committees are appointed to sit on certain days, viz. the committee of privileges, of religion, of grievances, of courts of justice, and of trade; which are the standing committees. But though they are appointed by every new parliament, they do not all of them act, only the committee of privileges; and this being not of the whole House, is first called in the Speaker's chamber, from whence it is adjourned into the House, every one of the House having a vote therein, though not named, which makes the same usually very numerous: and any member may be present at any select committee; but is not to vote unless he be named. The chairman of the grand committee, who is generally some leading member, sits in the clerk's place at the table, and writes the votes for and against the matter referred to them; and if the numbers be equal, he has a casting voice, otherwise he hath no vote in the committee; and after the chairman hath put the question for reporting to the House, if that be carried, he leaves the chair, and the Speaker being called to his chair (who quits it in the beginning, and the mace is laid under the table), he is to go down to the bar, and so bring up his report to the table. After a bill is read a second time in the House of Commons, the question is put whether it shall be committed to a committee of the whole House, or a private committee; and the committees meet in the Speaker's chamber, and report their opinion of the bill with the amendments, &c. And if there be any exceptions against the amendments reported, the bill may be re-committed; eight persons make a committee, which may be adjourned by five, &c. Lex Constitutionis, 147. 150. COMMITMENT. The sending of a person to prison, by warrant or order, who hath been guilty of any crime.

Anciently more felons were committed to gaol without a mittimus in writing, than were with it; such were commitments by watchmen, constables, &c. See 1 H. H. 610 .--But now since the habeas corpus act, a commitment in writing seems more necessary than formerly; otherwise a prisoner may be admitted to bail under that act, whatsoever his offence may have been. Burn's Justice, tit. Commitment. And though according to Gray v. Cookson, 16 East, 20. magistrates may justify under a written conviction drawn up subsequent to their commitment, yet it has been decided that they cannot commit verbally, and justify under a written commitment subsequently drawn up. Hutchinson v. Lowndes, Chester Assizes, and Mich. T. 1832. K. B.

> I. What kind of Offenders may be committed; and by whom; and in what manner.

II. To what Prison they may be committed; and at whose Charge.

III. How they may be removed and discharged.

I. What kind of Offenders may be committed; and by whom; and in what manner.-There is no doubt but that persons apprehended for offences which are not bailable, and also all persons who neglect to offer bail for offences which are bailable, must be committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 61. § 1. It is said, that wheresoever a justice of peace is empowered by any statute to bring a person over or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person being in his presence shall refuse to be bound, or to do such thing, the justice may commit him to the gaol, to remain there till he shall comply. Id. ib. § 2.

It seems agreed by all the old books, that wheresoever a constable or private person may justify the arresting another for a felony or treason, he may also justify the sending or bringing him to the common gaol; and that every private person hath as much authority in cases of this kind as the sheriff or any other officer; and may justify such imprisonment by his own authority, but not by the command of another.—2 Hawk. P. C. c.

But inasmuch as it is certain, that a person lawfully making such an arrest may justify bringing the party to the constable, in order to be carried by him before a justice of peace; and inasmuch as the stat. 7 G. 4. c. 64. which be discharged, unless committed by the land to the king's care and protection. Kitch. I directs in what manner persons brought before justices of the peace for felony, shall be examined by him in order to their being committed or bailed, seem clearly to suppose, that all such persons are to be brought before such justice for such purpose; and inasmuch as the statute of 31 Car. 2. c. 2. commonly called the Habeas Corpus act, seems to suppose that all persons who are committed to prison, are there detained by virtue of some warrant in writing, which seems to be intended of a commitment by some magistrate, and the constant tenor of the late books, practice, and opinions are agrecable hereto; it is certainly most advisable at this day, for any private person who arrests another for felony, to cause him to be brought, as soon as conveniently he may, before some justice of the peace, that he may be committed or bailed by him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 3.

It is certain that the privy council, or any one or two of them, or secretary of state, may lawfully commit persons for treason, and for other offences against the state, as in all ages they have done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117.

As to commitments by the privy council, two cases in Leonard (1 Leon. 71: 2 Leon. 175.) pre-suppose some power for this purpose, without saying what; and the case in 1 Anders. 297. plainly recognises such a power in high treason. But as to the jurisdiction of privy councillors in other offences, it does not appear to have been either claimed or exercised. But see post, as to commitments by the secretary of state for libel; the cases of Derby and Earbury; which Lord Camden said are established, and the court has no right to overturn them. 11 S. T. 323.

As to commitments by the secretary of state, in the case of Entick v. Carrington, C. B. Mich. 6 G. 3, upon a special verdict, respecting the validity of a secretary of state's warrant to seize persons and papers in the case of libels, a very critical inquiry was made into the source of this power in that officer, in cases of libels, and other state crimes. 2 Wils. 275: 11 S. T. 317. 9.—It appears that the king being the principal conservator of the realm, the secretary of state has so much of the royal authority transferred to him as justifies commitment for these crimes, but not the seizure of papers.

The following instances of commitments by the privy council and secretary of state, will farther explain the nature of this power. -1. Howell was committed in the 28th Eliz. and Hollyard in the 30th Eliz. by secretary Walsingham, privy counsellor; and it was determined that where the commitment is not by the whole council, the cause must be expressed in the warrant. 1 Leon. 71: 2 Leon. 175: Sed vide stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2: Lord Raymond, 65 .- 2. Anno 34 Eliz. the judges remonstrated against the exercise of this power; and declared that all prisoners may or by one or two of them for high treason. 1 And, 297.—3. Melvin was committed an. 4 C. 1. by secretary Conway, on suspicion of high treason: but the court thought the cause of the suspicion should have been expressed. Palm. 558.—4. Crofton was committed by the council, an. 14 C. 2. for high treason generally. Vaugh. 142: 1 Sid. 78: 1 Keb. 305.—5. Fitzpatrick by the privy council, an. 7 W. 3. for high treason, in aiding an escape; and bailed for neglect of prosecution. 1 Salk. 103.
